9. In a later judgment Bhagat Raja v. The Union of India, (1967) 3 SCR 302 = (AIR 1967 SC 1606) the Constitution Bench of this Court in effect overruled the judgment of the majority in Madhya Pradesh Industries Limited's case, (1966) 1 SCR 466 = (AIR 1966 SC 671). The Court held that the decisions of tribunals in India are subject to the supervisory powers of the High Court under Article 227 of the Constitution and of appellate powers of this Court under Article 136. The High Court and this Court would be placed under a great disadvantage if no reasons are given and the revision is dismissed by the use of the single word 'rejected' or 'dismissed'. The Court in that case held that the order of the Central Government in appeal, did not set out any reasons of its own and on that account set aside that order. In our view, the majority judgment of this Court in Madhya Pradesh Industries Ltd.'s case, (1966) 1 SCR 466 = (AIR 1966 SC 671) has been overruled by this Court in Bhagat Raja's case, (1967) 3 SCR 302 = (AIR 1967 SC 1606).

10. In later decisions of this Court it was held that where the Central Government exercising power in revision gives no reasons, the order will be regarded as void: see State of Madhya Pradesh v. Seth Narsinghdas Jankidas Mehta, C. A. No. 681 of 1966, D/- 29-4-1969 = (AIR 1969 NSC 115); The State of Gujarat v. Patel Raghav Nath, C. A. No. 723 of 1966, D/- 21-4-1969 = (AIR 1969 SC 1297); and Prag Das Umar Vaishya v. Union of India, C. A. No. 657 of 1967, D/- 17-8-1967 (SC).

11. In this case the communication from the Central Government gave no reasons in support of the order; the appellant Company is merely intimated thereby that the Government of India did not see any reasons to interfere "with the order in appeal". The communication does not disclose the "points" which were considered, and the reasons for rejecting them. This is a totally unsatisfactory method of disposal of a case in exercise of the judicial power vested in the Central Government. Necessity to give sufficient reasons which disclose proper appreciation of the problem to be solved, and the mental process by which the conclusion is reached in cases where a non-judicial authority exercises judicial functions, is obvious. When judicial power is exercised by an authority normally performing executive or administrative functions, this Court would require to be satisfied that the decision has been reached after due consideration of the merits of the dispute, uninfluenced by extraneous considerations of policy or expediency. The Court insists upon disclosure of reasons in support of the order on two grounds: one, that the party aggrieved in a proceeding before the High Court or this Court has the opportunity to demonstrate that the reasons which persuaded the authority to reject his case were erroneous; the other, that the obligation to record reasons operates as a deterrent against possible arbitrary action by the executive authority invested with the judicial power.

12. The appeal is allowed and the order passed by the Central Government is set aside. The case is remanded to the Central Government with the direction that it be disposed of according to law. In this case, we are of the view, having regard to the complicated and technical questions involved, that the Central Government may be well-advised to give an oral hearing to the appellant Company. The Union of India will pay the costs of this appeal to the appellant Company.

Appeal allowed.

ment accused pleading not guilty — Statement taken as a whole cannot show that he was guilty of any offence. (Para 5)

(B) Bombay Public Trusts Act (29 of 1950), Sections 35 (1), 66 — Penal Code (1860), Section 40 — Mens rea — Requirement of mens rea is not a necessary ingredient of Section 35 (1) — Offence under Section 35 (1) is an absolute one — Section 35 (1) creates a quasi-criminal offence.

The mens rea means some blameworthy mental condition, whether constituted by knowledge or intention or otherwise. The plain words of the Statute are read subject to a presumption, which may be rebutted, that the general rule of law that no crime can be committed unless there is mens rea has not been ousted by the particular enactment. But this rule has several exceptions. The principal classes of exceptions may be reduced to three. One is a class of acts which are not criminal in any real sense, but are acts which in the public interest are prohibited under a penalty. Another class comprehends some, and perhaps all, public nuisances. Lastly, there may be cases in which, although the proceeding is criminal in form, it is really only a summary mode of enforcing a civil right. 1963 AC 160 and (1895) 1 QB 918, Followed. (Paras 11, 12)

Unless a statute either clearly or by necessary implication rules out mens rea as a constituent part of the crime, a person should not be found guilty of an offence against the criminal law unless he has got a guilty mind. But the language of a provision either plainly or by necessary implication can rule out the application of that presumption. The Court may decline to draw that presumption taking into consideration the purpose intended to be served by that provisions. AIR 1951 SC 204; AIR 1965 SC 722 and (1969) 2 WLR 470, Followed.

The offence under Section 35 (1), Bombay Public Trusts Act (1950) is an absolute one and the Court cannot read into it the requirements of mens rea. Section 35 (1) creates a quasi-criminal offence. It is a regulatory provision. It is enacted with a view to safeguard the interest of the public regarding trust money. The offence under Section 35 (1) read with

Section 66 is punishable only with fine and the conviction does not carry with it any stigma. (Para 14)

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

HEGDE, J.: — These appeals arise from two complaints filed by the Charity Commissioner, State of Gujarat under Section 35 (1) read with Section 66 of the Bombay Public Trusts Act, 1950 (which will hereinafter be referred to as the Act). In those complaints 10 accused were proceeded against. It was said that they were the trustees of two trusts known as "Shree Swaminarayan Mandir" and "Narayan Mandir". The 1st accused in both those complaints was the Acharya, the 10th was said to be the Mahant and the other accused the associated trustees at the relevant time. It was said that all these trustees were appointed under two different schemes framed by the High Court of Bombay. The trial Court convicted the accused but in appeal the High Court of Gujarat acquitted all of them. It held that there is no proof to show that accused 2 to 10 were the trustees of the institutions at the time the alleged offence took place. It allowed the appeal of the 1st accused on the ground that the prosecution has failed to prove the required mens rea on his part. The State of Gujarat and the Charity Commissioner have brought these appeals after obtaining special leave from this Court.

2. In the first complaint the allegation is that the 1st accused withdrew from the trust funds in Samvat year 2014 a sum of Rs. 30277/53 for meeting his income-tax liability and that he reimbursed that amount only in Samvat year 2018. The allegation against the other accused is that they allowed the 1st accused to utilize that amount in contravention of the law. In the second complaint the allegation is that the 1st accused withdrew a sum of Rs. 40653/56 P. in the Samvat year 2015 again for meeting income-tax liability and that he reimbursed that amount also in the Samvat year 2018 and that the other accused connived at the contravention of the law by the 1st accused.

3. Accused 2 to 10 pleaded that they were not the trustees of the institutions concerned during the Samvat years 2014 and 2015 and nor were they aware of the withdrawals and as such they are not guilty of any offence. The 1st accused admitted the withdrawals mentioned in the complaints but his case was that the withdrawals were made from his Hathu Khata, a Khata built up by him and his ancestors and he has put back that amount.

4. So far as accused 2 to 10 are concerned there is absolutely no evidence against them. The only witness examined on behalf of the complainant namely the Legal Adviser of the Charity Commissioner did not give any evidence against them. No material was placed before the Court to show that they were the trustees of the trusts in question during the Samvat years 2014 and 2015. This is not a case where a trustee has failed to deposit the amounts in his hands but is a case of unauthorised withdrawals. There is no evidence to show that accused 2 to 10 knew about those withdrawals even if we assume that they were the trustees during the Samvat years 2014 and 2015. Hence the case against them must necessarily fail.

5. Now coming to accused No. 1 his case is that he withdrew the amount from his Hathu Khata which Khata according to him is his private Khata. There is no contra evidence. The complainant's witness admitted during his cross-examination that accused No. 1 kept a huge sum with the trust and that no interest was given to him in respect of that amount. It is not possible to come to the conclusion on the basis of the evidence of P. W. 1 that accused No. 1 had withdrawn any amount belonging to the trust. In order to prove the case put forward in the complaints, reliance was sought to be placed on a letter said to have been sent by the accused to the Charity Commissioner. The original letter was not produced; only an alleged copy of the same was put on record. No witness has proved the letter said to have been written by accused No. 1, nor is there any evidence to show that the copy produced is a true copy of the letter said to have been sent by accused No. 1. We are asked to infer the guilt of the accused No. 1 on the basis of the statement made by him under Section 342, Cr. P. C. We cannot split that statement into various parts and accept a portion and reject the rest. We have to either accept that statement as a whole or not rely on it at all. In his statement the accused pleaded that he was not guilty and if his statement is taken as a whole, it does not show that he was guilty of any offence.

6. Our above conclusion is sufficient to dispose of these appeals but as the High Court has elaborately gone into the question whether the requirement of mens rea is a necessary ingredient of Section 35 (1), we shall proceed to examine that question.

7. The High Court primarily addressed itself to the question whether the Court should read into Section 35 of the Act, the requirements of mens rea. Section 35 (1) reads:

"Where the trust property consists of money and cannot be applied immediately or at any early date to the purposes of the public trust the trustee shall be bound (notwithstanding any direction contained in the instrument of the trust) to deposit the money in any Scheduled bank as defined in the Reserve Bank of India Act, 1934, in the Postal Savings Bank or in a Co-operative bank approved by the State Government for the purpose or to invest it in public securities:

Provided that such money may be invested in the first mortgage of immovable property situate in (any part of India) if the property is not leasehold for a term of years and the value of the property exceeds by one-half the mortgage money:

Provided further that the Charity Commissioner may by general or special order permit the trustee of any public trust or classes of such trusts to invest the money in any other manner."

8. Assuming that the requirement of mens rea is a necessary ingredient of the offence under Section 35 (1) and further that the facts pleaded in the complaint are correct then there can be hardly any difficulty in coming to the conclusion that the accused had the required intention. He is said to have withdrawn monies from the trust fund and utilised the same for his private purpose.

9. It may be noted that the requirement of Section 35 (1) that a trustee should invest in proper securities the trust monies not required for immediate use merely emphasises an obvious duty of the trustee. Section 35 (1) imposes certain penalty on the trustee if he fails to do his duty. The purpose of Section 35 (1) is to safeguard the trust funds and also to guard against its misappropriation and misapplication. The Trust Act as well as Section 35 (1) imposes a duty on the trustee. The language of the provision shows that the liability imposed on the trustee is absolute. The provision is regulatory provision enacted in public interest. For the contravention of Section 35 (1) only a fine can be imposed and the punishment does not carry with it any stigma.

10. The question whether a crime can be said to have been committed without the necessary mens rea has led to considerable controversy. The broad principles accepted by Courts in this country as well as in England are: Where an offence is created by a statute, however comprehensive and unqualified the language of the statute, it is usually understood as silently requiring that the element of mens rea should be imported into the definition of the crime, unless a contrary intention is expressed or implied. In other words, the plain words of the statute are read subject to a presumption, which may be rebutted, that the general rule of law that no crime can be committed unless there is mens rea has not been ousted by the particular enactment. The mens rea means some blameworthy mental condition whether constituted by knowledge or intention or otherwise. But this rule has several exceptions, as observed by Lord Evershed in Lim Chin Aik v. The Queen, 1963 AC 160:

"Where the subject matter of the statute is the regulation for the public welfare of a particular activity — statutes regulating the sale of food and drink are to be found among the earliest examples it can be and frequently has been inferred that the legislature intended that such activities should be carried out under conditions of strict liability. The presumption is that the statute or statutory instrument can be effectively enforced only if those in charge of the relevant activities are made responsible for seeing that they are complied with. When such a presumption is to be inferred, it displaces the ordinary presumption of mens rea".

11. As long back as 1895 Wright J. observed in Sherras v. De Rutzen, (1895) 1 QB 918:

"There is a presumption that mens rea, an evil intention, or knowledge of the wrongfulness of the act, is an essential ingredient in every offence; but that presumption is liable to be displaced either by the words of the statute creating the offence or by the subject-matter with which it deals, and both must be considered".

12. It is further observed therein that the principal classes of exceptions may perhaps be reduced to three. One is a class of acts which are not criminal in any real sense, but are acts which in the public interest are prohibited under a penalty. Another class comprehends some, and perhaps all, public nuisances. Lastly, there may be cases in which, although the proceeding is criminal in form, it is really only a summary mode of enforcing a civil right. But, except in such cases as these, there must in general be guilty knowledge on the part of the defendant, or of some one whom he has put in his place to act for him, generally, or in the particular matter, in order to constitute an offence. The present case, in our opinion, falls within the first category mentioned above — Section 35 (1) deals with a quasi-criminal act.

13. This Court in Ravula Hariprasada Rao v. The State, 1951 SCR 322 = (AIR 1951 SC 204) ruled that unless a statute either clearly or by necessary implication rules out mens rea as a constituent part of the crime, a person should not be found guilty of an offence against the criminal law unless he has got a guilty mind. The same view was reiterated by this Court in State of Maharashtra v. Mayer Hans George, (1965) 1 SCR 123 = (AIR 1965 SC 722). But in both those cases this Court recognized that the language of a provision either plainly or by necessary implication can rule out the application of that presumption. Further the Court may decline to draw that presumption taking into consideration the purpose intended to be served by that provision. In fact in Ravula Hariprasada Rao's case, 1951 SCR 322 = (AIR 1951 SC 204) (supra) this Court held that the liability imposed under Section 27 (A) of the Motor Spirit Rationing Order, 1941 is an absolute liability. The law on this point was elaborately discussed by the House of Lords in Sweet v. Parsley, (1969) 2 WLR 470. Therein it was laid down that it is a general principle of construction of any enactment which creates a criminal offence that, even where the words used to describe the prohibited conduct would not in any other context connote the necessity for any particular mental element they are nevertheless to be read as subject to the implication that a necessary element in the offence is the absence of a belief, held honestly and on reasonable grounds, in the existence of facts which, if true, would make the act innocent. In the course of his speech Lord Reid observed after referring to the well known observations of Wright J. to which we have already made reference.

"It does not in the least follow that when one is dealing with a truly criminal act it is sufficient merely to have regard to the subject matter of the enactment. One must put oneself in the position of a legislator. It has long been the practice to recognise absolute offences in this class of quasi-criminal acts, and one can safely assume that, when Parliament is passing new legislation dealing with this class of offences, its silence as to mens rea means that the old practice is to apply. But when one comes to acts of a truly criminal character, it appears to me that there are at least two other factors which any reasonable legislator would have in mind. In the first place a stigma still attaches to any person convicted of a truly criminal offence, and the more serious or more disgraceful the offence the greater the stigma. So he would have to consider whether, in a case of this gravity, the public interest really requires that an innocent person should be prevented from proving his innocence in order that fewer guilty men may escape".

14. Section 35 (1) of the Act creates a quasi-criminal offence. It is a regulatory provision. It is enacted with a view to safeguard the interest of the public regarding trust money. The offence in question is punishable only with fine. The conviction under that does not carry any stigma. The language of the provision appears to make its contravention an absolute liability. Under these circumstances, we think the offence mentioned in that section is an absolute one. Consequently we cannot read into it the requirement of mens rea.

15. For the reasons mentioned above these appeals fail and they are dismissed.

Appeals dismissed.

Writ Petitions Nos. 216 and 217 of 1969, D/- 29-10-1969.

(A) Constitution of India, Art. 32 — Right to move Supreme Court for enforcing fundamental right — Conditions for.

Where the action is taken under an ultra vires statute, or where, although the statute is intra vires, the action is without jurisdiction or the principles of natural justice are violated, a right to move Supreme Court under Article 32 for enforcement of fundamental right exists. Errors of law or fact committed in the exercise of jurisdiction founded on a valid law do not entitle a person to have them corrected by way of petitions under Article 32. The proper way to correct them is to proceed under the provisions for appeal etc., or by way of proceedings under Article 226 before the High Court. AIR 1962 SC 1621, Rel. on. (Para 9)

DN/EN/F633/69/KSB/D

(B) Constitution of India, Art. 31 (1) — Demand of tax from corporation not leviable under a valid law — Breach of fundamental right guaranteed under Article 31 (1) is involved — Corporation being a person within Article 31 (1) can maintain a petition under Article 32 — AIR 1962 SC 1621 and AIR 1963 SC 1811 and AIR 1967 SC 585 and AIR 1963 SC 928, Rel. on; AIR 1964 SC 1140, Observation in, not approved.

(Paras 13 to 15)

(C) Constitution of India, Article 32 — Right to move Supreme Court for enforcement of fundamental right — Demand of tax not backed by valid law — Is a threat to property — Gives right to move Supreme Court by petition under Article 32 — Petitioner will be limited only to establishing fundamental right — Existence of other remedies no bar. (Para 16)

(D) Constitution of India, Article 286 (1) (b) — Read with Central Sales Tax Act (1956), Section 5 (1) — Restrictions as to imposition of tax on sale or purchase of goods — Sale in the course of export — Essentials — Tests to determine — First sale of coffee by Coffee Board to its registered exporter within Madras State — Second sale by registered exporter to foreign buyer having no connection with first sale by Coffee Board — Sale by Coffee Board held not in course of export within Article 286 (1) (b) read with Section 5 (1), Central Sales Tax Act and was liable to sales tax under the Madras Act.

Per Majority (Sikri J. dissenting):-

The phrase sale in the course of export comprises in itself three essentials; (i) there must be a sale, (ii) goods must actually be exported and (iii) the sale must be a part and parcel of the export. To establish export a person exporting and a person importing are necessary elements and the course of export is between them. Introduction of a third party dealing independently with the seller on the one hand and with the importer on the other breaks the link between the two for then there are two sales one to the intermediary and the other to the importer. The first sale is not in the course of export, for the export begins from the intermediary and ends with the importer. (Para 30)

There must be a single sale which itself causes the export or is in the progress or process of export. The only sale which can be said to cause the export is the sale which itself results in the movement of the goods from the exporter to the importer.

The course of export may be established by agreement or by force of law. In either case there is a seller and a buyer who by reason of the sale also become exporter and importer respectively. Any other buyer who is not himself the importer buys for export even if export ultimately results. It is to bring out these results that Parliament has recognised in Section 5 (1) Central Sales Tax Act only two cases of sale in the course of import; (a) where the sale is effected by a transfer of documents of title to goods after the goods have crossed the customs frontiers that is to say the goods are already on the way to the importer and (b) when the sale itself causes the export to take place that is to say the exporter and importer negotiate and complete a sale which without more would result in the export of the goods. No other sale can qualify for the exemption under Section 5 (1) read with Article 286 (1) (b). (Para 32)

Held on facts that the sale of coffee by the Coffee Board to its registered exporters under the terms and conditions prescribed by the rules framed by the Coffee Board was not a 'sale in the course of export' within the meaning of Article 286 (1) (b) of the Constitution read with Section 5 (1) Central Sales Tax Act and as such was liable to sales tax under the Madras Act. The Coffee Board's sale was not in anyway related to the second sale by exporter to foreign buyer which was in the course of export. AIR 1956 Mad 449, Approved; AIR 1964 SC 1752, Dist.

(E) Sales Tax — Central Sales Tax Act (1956), Section 5 (1) — 'Occasions', does not necessarily mean to cause or to be the immediate cause — Word bearing two meanings — Context in which it is used must determine appropriate meaning — So construed word 'occasions' must be given wider meaning viz., to bring about especially in an incidental or subsidiary manner. (Per Sikri J.) (Para 38)

The following Judgments of the Court were delivered by

HIDAYATULLAH, C. J. (on behalf of himself, Mitter, Ray and Jaganmohan Reddy, JJ.): — These are petitions under Article 32 of the Constitution by the Coffee Board, Bangalore directed against the Joint Commercial Tax Officer, Madras and the State of Tamil
Nadu questioning the demand of Sales Tax on certain transactions of sales which the Board claims are sales in the course of export of Coffee out of India and thus not liable to Sales Tax.
A preliminary objection was taken at the hearing that the petitions do not lie since no question of a fundamental right is involved. We shall deal with the preliminary objection later as the main petition and the preliminary objection are inter-linked. But before we mention the points in controversy it is necessary to state the facts more fully.

2. The petitioner is a statutorily constituted body and functions under the Coffee Act, 1942 (VII of 1942). This Act was passed to provide for the development under the Control of the Union of the Coffee Industry. Its main function is to constitute a Coffee Board. Previously there was an Ordinance intituled the Indian Coffee Market Expansion Ordinance, 1940 (13 of 1940). A Board called the Indian Coffee Market Expansion Board was constituted under the Ordinance. The same Board now continues under the name 'Coffee Board'. On this Board, all interests are represented and some members of Parliament and Officers of Government have also places. Sections 4 to 10 of the Act are concerned with the setting up of the Board. As nothing turns upon the constitution of the Board, it is not necessary to give the gist of those sections here. The Act imposes duties of Customs and Excise — the former on all coffee produced in India and exported from India and the latter on coffee released by the Board for sale in India from its surplus pool.

The Act compels the registration of all owners of coffee Estates and licensing of curers and dealers. The Act next imposes a control on the sale, export and re-import of coffee into India. In respect of sale, it fixes prices for sale of coffee either wholesale or retail by registered owners and licensed curers for the purpose of sale in the Indian Market.
The Board fixes internal sale quota for each Estate owner and the owner has to observe this quota and also the price fixed. The registered owner may not sell coffee unless it has been cured by a licensed establishment or it is sold uncured under a special licence.
The Act next prohibits the export of coffee from India otherwise than by the Board or under the authorization granted by the Board. To this restriction, there are a few minor exceptions such as coffee in specified quantities may be exported by taking on board ships or aircrafts intended for consumption of the crew and the passengers or carried by a passenger for his own use or exported for special purposes specified by the Central Government. The Government is authorised to specify the total quantity of coffee to be exported during any year. Coffee once exported cannot be re-imported into India except under a permit. The registered owners are required to furnish periodical returns and to furnish such information as may be prescribed. Every registered owner after dealing with the coffee for sale in Indian markets up to the internal quota fixed for him must hand over to the Board all surplus coffee to be included in the Board's Surplus Pool. Similarly, curing establishments are required to surrender to the Board all surplus coffee.
Small producers may, however, be exempted from the operation of this condition. After the coffee is delivered to the Board, the control of the Board begins. The Board classifies

the coffee and assesses its value based on its quantity, kind and quality. Once the coffee is delivered to the Board, the registered owner or the licensed curer has no rights over the coffee except to receive its price in accordance with Section 34 of the Act.

3. We are not concerned in this petition with any internal sales. The Board has elected to make monthly returns and in these petitions taxes on sales made in March and April, 1969 are challenged. Provisional assessments have been made and demand for taxes held due after allowing credit for taxes already paid, has been made by the respondents under the Madras General Sales Tax Act, 1959. Of these certain sales are claimed to be exempted from Sales Tax under the Madras Act by reason of those being in the course of export of coffee out of India. The Taxing authorities held that those sales took place within Tamil Nadu State and were thus liable to sales tax under the Tamil Nadu Act. The point of difference arises thus:

4. The Coffee Board follows a procedure for selling coffee which is to be exported out of India. Coffee for export is specially screened and selected. It is then exposed in auctions specially held for the purpose. These auctions are known as 'Export Auctions.' To be able to bid on these occasions, exporters have to get themselves registered. The Board maintains a list of registered exporters and gives to each of them a permit which authorises him to take part in the export auction. A specimen of the permit granted with the conditions attaching to it is exhibited as Annexure 'I'. The conditions which are imposed by the permit require a security deposit and a standing deposit from the registered exporter. The security may be in cash or by a guarantee from a bank or Life Insurance Corporation of India. It is provided that the permit is liable to be withdrawn and cancelled by the Chief Coffee Marketing Officer if it is found that the permit holder has sold or attempted to sell coffee, bought by him at the export auctions, within the internal market without the written permission of the Chief Coffee Marketing Officer. Similar cancellation is liable to take place if some of the other conditions of the permit are not followed.

5. The Coffee Board has also prepared a set of rules which incorporate the terms and conditions of sale of coffee in the course of export. These rules have been exhibited as Annexure II and they deal with the conduct of auctions and the procedure to be followed therein. They also provide for additional conditions. Rule 4 provides that only dealers who have registered themselves as exporters of coffee with the Coffee Board and who hold permits from the Chief Coffee Marketing Officer in that behalf will be permitted to participate in the auctions. Agents may, however, participate on behalf of exporters but only for one principal at a time. Before the auction, the registered dealer or the agents must show the permit issued to him or have it in his custody for production, if so desired. Before the auction is held, a catalogue of lots of coffee to be put up for auction is issued with the reserve price fixed by the Chief Coffee Marketing Officer in his discretion. Samples of Coffee are available for prospective buyers. An auction in the usual way takes place but no one is allowed to retract a bid once made. The highest bid is ordinarily accepted but if there are reasons to believe that the highest or any particular bid is not bona fide or genuine or is the outcome of concerted action for the purpose of controlling or manipulating prices or for other improper purposes or that the bidder is not likely to fulfil his contract or is otherwise undesirable, the bid may be rejected. After the bidding comes to an end and the bids have been accepted, the payment of price takes place in a particular way. We are not concerned with other provisions dealing with failure to fulfil the obligation as to payment of price, etc., objections to quality and so on. We are concerned with condition No. 26 which is headed 'Export Guarantee'. This condition is vital in the consideration of the questions involved in this case and may be quoted:

"26. It is an essential condition of this Auction that the coffee sold thereat shall be exported to the destination stipulated in the Catalogue of lots, or to any other foreign country outside India as may be approved by the Chief Coffee Marketing Officer, within three months from the date of Notice of Tender issued by the Agent and that it shall not under any circumstances be diverted to another destination, sold, or be disposed of, or otherwise released in India.

The aforesaid period may, on application by the Buyer, be extended by the Chief Coffee Marketing Officer in his discretion if he is satisfied that there is good ground to do so, subject nevertheless to the condition that as consideration for such extension, the Buyer shall pay the following additional amounts to the Board

The buyer is free to export the coffee either by himself or through any Forwarding Agent but the coffee must not be sold to the Forwarding Agents. In other words, the buyer himself arranges for the export of the coffee he has purchased at the auction and condition 29 imposes an obligation on the buyer to produce immediately after shipping evidence of the export of the coffee to the Chief Marketing Officer. If such evidence is not produced within a period of 60 days, after the time allowed to make the export, the registered exporter is deemed to have committed a default and the provisions of conditions 30 and 31 then apply to him. These conditions are as follows:

"30. If the Buyer fails or neglects to export the coffee as aforesaid within the prescribed time or within the period of extension, if any, granted to him, he shall be liable to pay a penalty calculated at Rs. 50/- per 50 kilos which shall be deductible from out of the amount payable to him as per Clause 31."

"31. On default by the Buyer to export the coffee aforesaid within the prescribed time or such extension thereof as may be granted, it shall be lawful for the Chief Coffee Marketing Officer, without reference to the buyer to seize the unexported coffee and for that purpose to make entry into any building, godown or warehouse where the said coffee may be stored, and take possession of the same and deal with it as if it were part and parcel of Board's coffee held by them in their Pool Stock.

6. Conditions 33 and 34 provide for inspection of coffee stocks and accounts and the buyer is required to send weekly returns. Other conditions need not be noticed here because they have no bearing upon the rival cases. The case of the petitioners is that the purchases at the export auctions are really sales by the Coffee Board in the course of export of coffee out of the territory of India since the sales themselves occasion the export of coffee and coffee so sold is not intended for use in India or for sale in the Indian markets. The case of the Sales Tax Authorities is that these sales are not inextricably bound up with the export of coffee and that the sales must be treated as sales taking place within the State of Tamil Nadu which are liable to sales tax under the Madras General Sales Tax Act. The dispute is confined to this aspect of the matter on merits. The preliminary objection to which we referred earlier is only this that the petitions do not show a breach of a fundamental right. The petitioners only claim the benefit of the exemptions incorporated in the Constitution or the statute dealing with the levy and collection of sales tax, and their grievance can be investigated and righted by taking recourse to the appellate, revisional and other remedies under the relevant statute. We shall begin by considering the preliminary objection.

7. The preliminary objection consists of two parts. The first part questions the standing of the petitioner to move this Court for the enforcement of its so-called fundamental rights. It is argued that the petitioner being a Corporation, has no right to move this Court for the enforcement of fundamental right to hold, acquire and dispose of property since this right is available only to individuals who are citizens and a Corporation is not a citizen. Reliance is placed upon State Trading Corporation of India Ltd. v. Commercial Tax Officer, Visakhapatnam, (1964) 4 SCR 99 = (AIR 1963 SC 1811). The second part is that there is ample provision for remedies under the Sales Tax Act to question the assessment and a petition under Art. 32 ignoring those provisions should not be entertained. The case of the State Trading Corporation (1964) 4 SCR 99 = (AIR 1963 SC 1811) considered the application of Art. 19 (1) (f) in relation to Corporations. It was held that Corporations could not be regarded as citizens for the purpose of Article 19 since that article is concerned with citizens and corporations have not been declared citizens by the Constitution. The question was not considered in relation to Art. 31 (1). Some other petitions by corporations complaining of breach of Article 31 (1) were entertained by this Court and the petitioner before us relies on those cases as precedents. The true position may therefore be stated.

8. Property as a fundamental right is mentioned in the Constitution in Articles 19 (1) (f), 31, 31 (A) and 31 (B). In Article 19 (1) (f) it is provided:

"19. Protection of certain rights regarding freedom of speech, etc.

(1) All citizens shall have the right—

(f) to acquire, hold and dispose of property; and

9. To this sub-clause there is a proviso in Clause (5) which states that nothing in Clause (f) shall affect the operation of any existing law in so far as it imposes, or prevents the State from making any law imposing, reasonable restrictions on the exercise of the right conferred, either in the interests of the general public or for the protection of the interests of any Scheduled Tribe. The main clause of the Article recognises the institution of private property with all the concomitants of that institution, namely, the acquisition, holding and disposal of property. The proviso recognises, in the public interest, restrictions on the right in existing law or hereafter to be imposed by law. The institution of property thus recognised leaves freedom to acquire any kind of property except the one in relation to which there is a restrictive law. Thus it is that certain kinds of properties such as Narcotic drugs, explosives, property in excess of ceiling placed by law, etc., cannot be acquired or held. This restriction curtails the general right and the curtailment must justify itself as a law in the public interest. Next we have Articles 31, 31 (A) and 31 (B). They occur in a section of Part III entitled "Rights to Property". The first of these three Articles deals with compulsory acquisition of property. The second and third deal with saving of laws providing for acquisition of Estates, etc., and validation of certain Acts and Regulations declared void by Courts. Two fundamental concepts in Article 31 are (a) that no person shall be deprived of his property save by authority of law, and (b) no property shall be compulsorily acquired or requisitioned save for a public purpose and save by authority of law which itself fixes the amount of compensation or specifies the principles on which compensation is to be determined and given and the manner thereof. Other provisions either restrict or amplify the operation of these two fundamental concepts. In Smt. Ujjam Bai's case, (1963) 1 SCR 778 = (AIR 1962 SC 1621), the question was whether assessment of Sales Tax under a valid Act was open to challenge under Article 32 on the ground of misconstruction of the Act or a notification under it. It was held that the answer was in the negative. That case has given some trouble in view of the different opinions expressed in it. It is therefore necessary to state simply the propositions which are settled by this Court. The ruling recognises the existence of a right to move this Court under Article 32, where the action is taken under an ultra vires statute, or where, although the statute is intra vires the action is without jurisdiction or the principles of natural justice are violated. Errors of law or fact committed in the exercise of jurisdiction founded on a valid law do not entitle a person to have them corrected by way of petitions under Article 32. It is also pointed out that the proper way to correct them is to proceed under the provisions for appeal, etc., or by way of proceedings under Article 226 before the High Court.

10. In Ramjilal v. I. T. O. Mohindragarh, 1951 SCR 127 = (AIR 1951 SC 97) and in Laxmanappa Hanumantappa v. Union of India, 1955 SCR 769 = (AIR 1955 SC 3), taxation laws were unsuccessfully challenged with the aid of Article 31 (1) read with Article 265 in petitions purporting to be under Article 32. In the former case it was observed as follows:

"In our opinion, the protection against the imposition and collection of taxes save by authority of the law directly comes from Article 265 and is not secured by Clause (1) of Article 31. Article 265 not being in Chapter III of the Constitution, its protection is not a fundamental right which can be enforced by an application to this Court under Article 32. It is not our purpose to say that the right secured by Article 265 may not be enforced. It may certainly be enforced by adopting proper proceedings.

All that we wish to state is that this application in so far as it purports to be founded on Article 32 read with Art. 31 (1) to this Court is misconceived and must fail".

11. These propositions were not accepted by the majority in Ujjam Bai's case, (1963) 1 SCR 778 = (AIR 1962 SC 1621). It was observed at p. 941 (of SCR) = (at p. 1668 of AIR) as follows:

"If by these observations it is meant to convey that the protection under Article 265 cannot be sought by a petition under Article 32, I entirely agree. But if it is meant to convey that a taxing law which is opposed to fundamental rights must be tested only under Article 265, I find it difficult to agree. Articles 31 (1) and 265 speak of the same condition. A comparison of these two Articles shows this:

Article 31 (1)—"No person shall be deprived of his property save by authority of law."

Article 265—No tax shall be levied or collected except by authority of law.

"The Chapter on Fundamental Rights hardly stands in need of support from Article 265. If the law is void under that Chapter, and property is seized to recover a tax which is void, I do not see why Article 32 cannot be invoked.....It is not possible to circumscribe Article 32 by making the remedy depend only upon Art. 265."

12. The position was summed up thus:

"From this, it is clear that laws which do not offend Part III and are not otherwise ultra vires are protected from any challenge whether under Article 265 or under the Chapter on Fundamental Rights. Where the laws are ultra vires but do not per se offend fundamental rights (to distinguish the two kinds of defects), they are capable of a challenge under Article 32. Where they are intra vires otherwise but void being opposed to fundamental rights, they can be challenged under Article 265 and also Art. 32."

13. Das, J. (Sarkar J. concurring) put the same thing differently. He observed that "if a quasi-judicial authority acts without jurisdiction or wrongly assumes jurisdiction by committing an error as to a collateral fact and the resultant action threatens or violates a fundamental right, the question of enforcement of that right arises and a petition under Article 32 will lie." He added that "where a statute is intra vires but the action taken is without jurisdiction, then a petition under Article 32 would be competent." Similar observations are to be found in the opinion of Kapur J. Therefore, the majority view considered that a breach of fundamental right guaranteed by Article 31 (1) is involved in a demand for tax which is not leviable under a valid law. The application of these principles finds ample recognition in the following cases of the Supreme Court:

(1) State Trading Corporation of India v. The Commercial Tax Officer, (1964) 4 SCR 99 = (AIR 1963 SC 1811).

(2) State Trading Corporation of India v. The State of Mysore, 14 STC 416 = (AIR 1967 SC 585).

(3) Firm A. T. B. Mehtab Majid and Co. v. State of Madras, 14 STC 355 = (AIR 1963 SC 928).

14. It will be noticed that they are all cases of Corporations and have been considered under Article 32. The ruling in the State Trading Corporation case, 14 STC 416 = (AIR 1967 SC 585) referred to earlier did not render these petitions incompetent because Article 31 (1) is not limited in its operation to citizens. It mentions "persons" who may be Corporations and group of persons.

15. In Indo-China Steam Navigation Co. v. Jasjit Singh, (1964) 6 SCR 594 = (AIR 1964 SC 1140), there are some observations that in petitions under Article 32, no claim of a fundamental right can be made under Article 31 (1) if the statute under which action is taken is valid for then Article 19 (1) (f) does not apply. These observations run counter to Ujjam Bai's case, (1963) 1 SCR 778 = (AIR 1962 SC 1621), which is binding on us. The first part of the preliminary objection fails.

16. The second part need not detain us. We have already held that demand of a tax, not backed by a valid law, is a threat to property and thus gives rise to a right to move this Court under Article 32. The petitioner in such circumstances is not compelled to wait or go through the lengthy procedure of appeals, references, etc. He may move the Supreme Court for the enforcement of the fundamental rights so threatened.

This, however, is not an absolute right. This Court will limit the petitioner to establishing a breach of fundamental right. It will not allow a petitioner to use the provisions of Article 32 to do duty as an appeal. A clear enough case as laid down in Ujjam Bai's case, (1963) 1 SCR 773 = (AIR 1962 SC 1621) analysed by us here, must be made out. A threat to property unbacked by a valid law or a want of jurisdiction or a breach of the principles of natural justice must be clearly made out, to entitle one to the assistance of this Court. If that is successfully done then the provisions for other remedies do not stand in the way. We accordingly allowed the petitioner to raise the point of jurisdiction before us.

17. We are concerned in these petitions with the exemption granted by Article 286 (1) (b) of the Constitution which reads:

"286. Restrictions as to imposition of tax on the sale or purchase of goods.

(1) No law of a State shall impose, or authorise the imposition of, a tax on the sale or purchase of goods where such sale or purchase takes place—

(a) * * *

(b) in the course of the import of the goods into, or export of the goods out of, the territory of India".

18. Before the 6th Amendment, the Constitution did not contain any definition of the phrase 'in the course of export'. By that Amendment Parliament has been given the power to indicate the principles on which that phrase is to be construed. In Section 5 (1) of the Central Sales Tax Act, 1956, Parliament has given a legislative meaning of the phrase 'in the course of export' of goods out of the territory of India. It runs thus:

"5 (1) A sale or purchase of goods shall be deemed to take place in the course of the export of the goods out of the territory of India only if the sale or purchase either occasions such export or is effected by a transfer of documents of title to the goods after the goods have crossed the customs frontiers of India".

The word 'only' in the sub-section shows that there are only two transactions which can come within the exception. In the case of sales to registered exporters, the second part does not apply and the matter must, therefore, be judged under the first part. Before the enactment of the Central Sales Tax Act, two rulings of this Court had construed the expression and as the legislative definition gives effect to what was laid down in those two cases a reference to them appears necessary.

19. In the State of Travancore-Cochin v. The Bombay Co. Ltd., (1952) 3 SCR 1112 = (AIR 1952 SC 366), four meanings were considered and sales in the course of export were equated to sales which occasioned the export. This Court said:

"A sale by export thus involves a series of integrated activities commencing from the agreement of sale with a foreign buyer and ending with the delivery of the goods to a common carrier for transport out of the country by land or sea. Such a sale cannot be dissociated from the export without which it cannot be effectuated, and the sale and resultant export form parts of a single transaction. Of these two integrated activities, which together constitute an export sale, whichever first occurs can well be regarded as taking place in the course of the other".

20. Again,

"We are not much impressed with the contention that no sale or purchase can be said to take place 'in the course of' export or import unless the property in the goods is transferred to the buyer during their actual movement, as for instance, where the shipping documents are endorsed and delivered within the State by the seller to a local agent of the foreign buyer after the goods have been actually shipped, or where such documents are cleared on payment, or on acceptance, by the Indian buyer before the arrival of the goods within the State. This view, which lays undue stress on the etymology of the word 'course' and formulates a mechanical test for the application of Clause (b), places, in our opinion, too narrow a construction upon that clause, in so far as it seeks to limit its operation only to sales and purchases effected during the transit of the goods, and would, if accepted, rob the exemption of much of its usefulness".

21. In the State of Travancore-Cochin v. Shanmugha Vilas Cashew Nut Factory, 1954 SCR 53 = (AIR

1953 SC 333), it was again emphasised that sales and purchases which themselves occasion the export of the goods came within the exemption of Art. 286 (1) (b). Purchases in the State by the exporter for purposes of export were not within the exemption but sales in the State by the exporter by transfer of shipping documents while the goods were beyond the customs barrier were held exempted. It was pointed out that the word 'course' denoted movement from one point to another and the expression 'in the course of' implied not only a period of time during which the movement was in progress but postulated also a connected relation. An act preparatory to export could not be regarded as done in the course of the export of the goods. It was like a purchase for production or manufacture. Therefore, a sale in the course of export out of the territory of India should be understood as meaning a sale taking place not only during the activities directed to the end of exportation of the goods out of the country but also as part of or connected with such activities. Das J., (as he then was) wished to add one more meaning which apparently was not accepted. It was that the expression indicated the last purchase by the exporter with a view to export. The meaning given in these two cases is well established. Indeed in the State of Mysore v. Mysore Spinning and Manufacturing Co. Ltd., AIR 1958 SC 1002, this Court said that the point could not be said to be at large.

22. Parliament having accepted the construction placed by this Court on the expression, we are now required to find out what is meant by the phrase sale which occasions the export. In Burmah-Shell Oil Storage and Distributing Co. v. C. T. O., (1961) 1 SCR 902 = (AIR 1961 SC 315) it was pointed out that word 'export' did not mean a mere 'taking out of the country' but that the goods must be sent to a destination at which they could be said to be imported. The same meaning must obviously be given to the phrase 'in the course of export' or in the phrase 'occasions the export.'

23. We have thus to see whether the sale is one which is connected with the export of the goods from this country to an importer in another country. The course of export can only begin if there is movement from an exporter to an importer as the result of the sale, and then only the sale can be said to occasion the export. In East India Tobacco Co. v. State of Andhra Pradesh, (1962) 13 STC 529 = (AIR 1962 SC 1733), purchases made for executing specific orders received from foreign customers were held not to fall within the exemption. It is not enough that the sale is followed by an export or is made for the purpose or with a view to export, the sale must be integrally connected with the export. On the other hand in B. K. Wadar v. Daulatram Rameshwari, (1961) 1 SCR 924 = (AIR 1961 SC 311), it was held that if property in the goods passed to the buyer after crossing of the customs frontier for export out of India the sale was in the course of export. This is because the course of export had already begun and therefore the sale followed the commencement of the export operation.

24. Transactions of the type of the one in Wadar's case, (1961) 1 SCR 924 = (AIR 1961 SC 311), do not cause difficulty. There the course of export is quite clear and it is easy to see that the sale is integrally connected with export. Difficulty is likely to be felt when the sale is not so apparently connected. In K. G. Khosla and Co. v. Dy. Commissioner of Commercial Taxes, (1966) 17 STC 473 = (AIR 1966 SC 1216), the phrase 'in the course of import' was considered. It was held that in Section 3 of the Central Sales Tax Act the phrases 'occasions the movement of goods from one State to another' and 'occasions the import' mean the same thing. The movement, it was pointed out, must be the result of an agreement or an incident of the contract of sale, although it was not necessary that the sale should precede the import.

25. A more direct authority is in Ben Gorm Nilgiri Plantations Co., Coonoor v. Sales Tax Officer, (1964) 7 SCR 706 = (AIR 1964 SC 1752). In that case sales of the tea-chests at auctions held at Fort Cochin were claimed to be exempt from the levy of sales-tax by virtue of Article 286 (1) (b).

26. The Tea Act, like the Coffee Act, was passed to control tea industry. Under it also an export allotment for each year is declared and each tea Estate receives an export quota allotment. The tea Estate owner can obtain an export licence. The export quota licence is transferable. A manufacturer obtains from the Tea Board allotment of export quota. The manufacturer then puts the tea in chests which are sold in public auctions. Bids are made by agents or intermediaries of foreign buyers. Agents and intermediaries then obtain licences from the Central Government for export. The question was whether the sale to the agent or the intermediary was a sale in the course of export out of India.

27. This Court found nothing in the transaction from which a bond could be said to spring between the sale and the intended export linking them as part of the same transactions. The sellers had no concern with the export, the sale imposed or involved no obligation to export and there was possibility that the goods might be diverted for internal consumption.

28. The Court considered the sales as sales for export and not in the course of export. In laying this down the Court observed:

".....to occasion export there must exist such a bond between the contract of sale and the actual exportation, that each link is inextricably connected with the one immediately preceding it. Without such a bond, a transaction of sale cannot be called a sale in the course of export of goods out of the territory of India."

"In general where the sale is effected by the seller, and he is not connected with the export which actually takes place, it is a sale for export. Where the export is the result of sale, the export being inextricably linked up with the sale so that the bond cannot be dissociated without a breach of the obligation arising by statute, contract or mutual understanding between the parties arising from the nature of the transaction, the sale is in the course of export."

29. The case however did not attempt to lay down any tests, observing that each case will depend on its own facts. We agree that the facts must always play their due part. We think it is possible to state some tests which can be applied in all cases.

30. The phrase 'sale in the course of export' comprises in itself three essentials: (i) that there must be a sale (ii) that goods must actually be exported and (iii) the sale must be a part and parcel of the export. Therefore either the sale must take place when the goods are already in the process of being exported which is established by their having already crossed the Customs frontiers, or the sale must occasion the export. The word 'occasion' is used as a verb and means 'to cause' or 'to be the immediate cause of'. Read in this way the sale which is to be regarded as exempt is a sale which causes the export to take place or is the immediate cause of the export. The export results from the sale and is bound up with it. The word 'cause' in the expression 'in the course of' means 'progress or process of' or 'shortly during'. The phrase expanded with this meaning reads 'in the progress or process of export' or 'during export'. Therefore the export from India to a foreign destination must be established and the sale must be a link in the same export for which the sale is held. To establish export a person exporting and a person importing are necessary elements and the course of export is between them. Introduction of a third party dealing independently with the seller on the one hand and with the importer on the other breaks the link between the two for then there are two sales one to the intermediary and the other to the importer. The first sale is not in the course of export for the export begins from the intermediary and ends with the importer.

31. Therefore the tests are that there must be a single sale which itself causes the export or is in the progress or process of export. There is no room for two or more sales in the course of export. The only sale which can be said to cause the export is the sale which itself results in the movement of the goods from the exporter to the importer.

32. The course of export may be established by agreement or by force of law. To be the former the agreement between the seller and the buyer must envisage an export out of India who then become exporter and importer respectively. By force of law a person selling the goods may be compelled to sell them only in an export sale but that too is not essentially different from the first. In either case there is a seller and a buyer who by reason of the sale also become exporter and importer respectively. Any other buyer who is not himself the importer buys for export even if export ultimately results. It is to bring out these results that Parliament has recognised only two cases of sale in the course of import: (a) where the sale is effected by a transfer of documents of title to goods after the goods have crossed the Customs frontiers that is to say the goods are already on the way to the importer and (b) when the sale itself causes the export to take place that is to say the exporter and importer negotiate and complete a sale which without more would result in the export of the goods. No other sale can qualify for the exemption under Section 5 (1) read with Article 286 (1) (b).

33. The question is whether the sale to the registered exporters can be said to be exempted. In the Indian Coffee Board v. State of Madras, (1956) 7 STC 135 = (AIR 1956 Mad 449) Rajgopalan and Rajgopala Ayyangar JJ. held that the sale to the registered exporter was a sale for export and only the contract of sale entered into by the registered exporter with the buyer abroad that could be brought within the scope of the exemption. The test applied by the High Court is the test we have indicated and which has found approval in the two earlier cases of this Court which have received legislative recognition. The question to ask is: does the sale to the registered exporter occasion the export which ultimately takes place? The answer is that on the rulings it must be an integral part of the precise export before it can be said to have occasioned that particular export. Here there are two independent sales involved in the export programme. The first is a sale between the Coffee Board as seller to the export promoter. Then there is the sale by the export promoter to a foreign buyer. Of the latter sale, the Coffee Board does not have any inkling when the first sale takes place. The Coffee Board's sale is not in any way related to the second sale. Therefore, the first sale has no connection with the second sale which is in the course of export, that is to say, movement of goods between an exporter and an importer.

34. Mr. Setalvad tried to argue that the first sale by the Coffee Board included in it a compulsion to export and he relied upon the observations of Shah J., in Ben Gorm Nilgiri Plantations case, (1964) 7 SCR 706 = (AIR 1964 SC 1752). These observations were not intended to give exemption to sales for export but to sales in the course of export. One of the indicia of a sale in the course of export is the compulsion to export because the sale which is protected must be itself inextricably bound up with the export. If this were not so a chain of sales each making a mere condition for terminal export, will be exempted and the distinction between a sale for export and a sale in the course of export will completely disappear. In the Ben Gorm Nilgiri Plantations case, (1964) 7 SCR 706 = (AIR 1964 SC 1752), even the purchases by agents of foreign importers were described as sales for export. No doubt it was said that the sale to the agents did not contain a compulsion to export to the principal but that was said so that the causal connection between the sale and the export could be established. The compulsion to export here is of a different character. It only compels persons who buy on their own to export in their own turn by entering into another agreement for sale. The first sale is, therefore, an independent sale. It is a sale for export. Even with the compulsion the sale may not result for Clauses 26, 30 and 31 visualize such happenings. It follows, therefore, that unless the sale is inextricably bound up with a particular export it cannot be said to be in its course. If no particular export is in sight the sale by the Coffee Board cannot go beyond the description of sale for export.

35. For these reasons we are of opinion that the decision of the Madras High Court in the case cited above is correct. For the same reasons we are of opinion that this case does not fall within the ruling in Ben Gorm Nilgiri Plantations' case. The petitioner cannot claim exemption from the tax and the department was right in demanding the tax. The petitions fail and will be dismissed with costs.

SIKRI, J.: 36. I have had the advantage of reading the draft of the Judgment prepared by the learned Chief Justice. I agree with him that the preliminary objection raised by the respondents is devoid of force, but I regret that I cannot concur with the conclusion that the sales in question were not made in the course of export. With utmost respect, in my opinion he has given an unduly limited meaning to the expression 'if the sale or purchase occasions such export'. My reasons in coming to this conclusion are, in brief, as follows.

37. In Shorter Oxford Dictionary (Illustrated) the word "occasion" when used as a verb means:

"To give occasion to (a person); to induce, . . . To be the occasion or cause of (something); to cause, bring about, especially in an incidental or subsidiary manner."

38. It is said that in the context the word "occasion" means "to cause or to be the immediate cause." When a word bears two meanings the context must determine which is the appropriate meaning to be adopted. What then is the context with which we are dealing? The context is the export trade and its undoubted economic importance to this country. Further, each country is more and more organising the export trade and directing its flow in particular directions. The course of export is not the same what it was before the intervention of Governments or their agencies. Moreover the idea underlying art. 286 (1) (a) was to restrict the powers of the State to levy taxes on sales or purchases in the course of export so that the export trade may not be hampered. As observed by Patanjali Sastri, C. J., in State of Travancore-Cochin v. The Bombay Co. Ltd. (1952) 3 SCR 1112 at p. 1119 = (AIR 1952 SC 366 at p. 368) "lest similar reasoning should lead to the imposition of such cumulative burden on the export-import trade of this country which is of great importance to the nation's economy, the Constituent Assembly may well have thought it necessary to exempt in terms sales by export and purchases by import from sales tax by inserting article 286 (1) (b) in the Constitution." In my view, keeping in view the aforementioned considerations the wider meaning of the word "occasion" is the more appropriate to apply in the construction of Section 5 (1).

39. It is said that Parliament had accepted the narrower meaning of the word "occasion" because this was the meaning ascribed to it by this Court in (1952) 3 SCR 1112 = (AIR 1952 SC 366) and 1954 SCR 53 = (AIR 1953 SC 333) I, with respect, am unable to appreciate this argument. In the former case this Court was concerned with export sales of certain commodities to foreign buyers on C.I.F. or F.O.B. terms. After setting out the four views presented before it, Patanjali Shastri, C. J., speaking on behalf of the Court, observed:

"We are clearly of opinion that the sales here in question, which occasioned the export in each case, fall within the scope of the exemption and that is enough to dispose of those appeals."

Later he said:

"We accordingly hold that whatever else may or may not fall within Article 286 (1) (b), sales and purchases which themselves occasion the export or the import of the goods, as the case may be, out of or into the territory of India come within the exemption and that is enough to dispose of those appeals", (emphasis supplied).

40. It seems to me that it is wrong to interpret that decision to mean that the Court held that in no other case can sales "occasion" an export. In fact the learned Chief Justice says to the contrary by saying "whatever else may or may not fall".

41. In State of Travancore-Cochin v. Shanmugha Vilas Cashew Nut Factory, 1954 SCR 53 = (AIR 1953 SC 333), this Court, inter alia, held that the last purchase of goods made by the exporter for the purpose of exporting them to implement orders already received from a foreign buyer or expected to be received subsequently in the course of business was not within the protection of Clause (1) (b).

42. In the course of discussion, apart from referring to a passage from the earlier judgment in which the word "occasion" is used, the word 'occasion' is not mentioned again. No mention is made in this judgment of facts similar to which are present in the present case. What happens when there is legal certainty that the goods are headed for a foreign destination and will not be diverted to the domestic market was not considered as the question did not arise.

43. In AIR 1958 SC 1002 facts are somewhat closer to the present case, but it does not appear that there was legal compulsion to export and that the Mills, who sold the cloth for sale, could compel the purchasers to export. The general observations therein must be read in the light of facts.

44. With respect, I think it is erroneous to assume that Parliament by using the word "occasion" must be deemed to have used it in the same sense as Patanjali Shastri, C. J., did. It is an ordinary dictionary word and not a technical word. He was using it to describe the transactions in those cases, and the narrower meaning was apposite. Even there he guarded himself by saying "whatever else may or may not fall within Article 286 (1) (b)". It should also be noted that Patanjali Shastri, C. J., had also qualified the word "occasion" by adding the words "by themselves". These words do not exist in the Act.

45. Similar expression occurring in Sections 3 and 5 (2) of the Act has been interpreted by this Court on a number of occasions and I cannot appreciate why the same expression bears a different meaning in Section 5 (1). The earlier cases are referred to in K. G. Khosla v. Deputy Commissioner of Commercial Taxes, (1966) 17 STC 473 = (AIR 1966 SC 1216). Shah, J., in Tata Iron and Steel Co. v. S. R. Sarkar, 11 STC 655 = (AIR 1961 SC 65), had interpreted Section 3 of the Act as follows:

"In our view, therefore, within Clause (b) of Section 3 are included sales in which property in the goods passes during the movement of the goods from one State to another by transfer of documents of title thereto: Clause (a) of Section 3 covers sales, other than those included in Clause (b), in which the movement of goods from one State to another is the result of a covenant or incident of the contract of sale, and property in the goods passes in either State".

In other words it was held that a sale occasions the movement of goods when the movement "is the result of a covenant or incident of contract of sale". Applying this test this Court observed in (1966) 17 STC 473 at pp. 488-489 = (AIR 1966 SC 1216 at p. 1220).

"The next question that arises is whether the movement of axle-box bodies from Belgium into Madras was the result of a covenant in the contract of sale or an incident in the contract. It seems to us that it is quite clear from the contract that it was incidental to the contract that the axle-box bodies would be manufactured in Belgium, inspected there and imported into India for the consignee. Movement of goods from Belgium to India was in pursuance of the conditions of the contract between the assessee and the Director-General of Supplies. There was no possibility of these goods being diverted by the assessee for any other purpose. Consequently we hold that the sales took place in the course of import of goods within Section 5 (2) of the Act, and are, therefore, exempt from taxation".

46. It will be noticed that the sale which was sought to be taxed but was exempted was the sale to Southern Railway and the contract under which the movement resulted was with the Director-General of Supplies.

47. The heart of the matter lies in answering one question. Can two sales occasion an export? I find no difficulty in answering this question in the affirmative. Two sales can take place in the course of export if they are effected by a transfer of documents of title to the goods after the goods have crossed the customs frontier of India, and they both will be protected under Section 5 (1) of the Act. Therefore, it cannot be assumed that it is the intention of Section 5 (1) that only one sale can enjoy the protection of Section 5 (1). Accordingly, apart from any assumption, can two sales occasion the export. As I have said 'occasion' does not necessarily mean to cause or to immediately cause; it also means to "bring about especially in an incidental or subsidiary manner". If the sale by the appellant brings about the export in an incidental or subsidiary manner it can be said to occasion the export. It was in view of these considerations that Shah J., speaking for the Court, had observed in Ben Gorm Nilgiri Plantations Co. v. Sales Tax Officer, (1964) 15 STC 753 at p. 759 = (AIR 1964 SC 1752 at p. 1755).

"A sale in the course of export predicates a connection between the sale and export, the two activities being so integrated that the connection between the two cannot be voluntarily interrupted, without a breach of the contract or the compulsion arising from the nature of the transaction. In this sense to constitute a sale in the course of export it may be said that there must be an intention on the part of both the buyer and the seller to export, there must be an obligation to export, and there must be an actual export. The obligation may arise by reason of statute, contract between the parties, or from mutual understanding or agreement between them, or even from the nature of the transaction which links the sale to export. A transaction of sale, which is a preliminary to export of the commodity sold may be regarded as a sale for export, but is not necessarily to be regarded as one in the course of export, unless the sale occasions export".

48. In this passage Shah, J., clearly visualised that a transaction of sale which is preliminary to export may be regarded as in the course of export if the sale occasions the export. The test postulated may be that there must be an integral relation or bond between the sale and export. Why Shah, J., held that the sales were not in the course of export was, to use his words;

"that the tea chests are sold together with export rights imputes knowledge to the seller that the goods are purchased with the intention of exporting. But there is nothing in the transaction from which springs a bond between the sale and the intended export linking them up as part of the same transaction. There is no statutory obligation upon the purchaser to export the chests of tea purchased by him with the export rights. The export quota merely enables the purchaser to obtain export licence, which he may or may not obtain. There is nothing in law or in the contract between the parties, or even in the nature of the transaction which prohibits diversion of the goods for internal consumption. The sellers have no concern with the actual export of the goods, once the goods are sold. They have no control over the goods. There is therefore no direct connection between the sale and export of the goods which would make them parts of an integrated transaction of sale in the course of export."

49. The case, with respect, points out clearly what was lacking in the transaction. It is one way of laying down tests. If these incidents had not been missing the Court would have surely held the sale to be in course of export.

50. It seems to me that this judgment is in effect overruling earlier decisions of this Court without saying so. The Calcutta High Court (Ray and Basu JJ.) reviewed the Supreme Court cases exhaustively in S. K. Roy v. Addl. Member, Board of Revenue, 18 STC 379 = (AIR 1967 Cal 338) and came to the conclusion that the mere fact that there is no contract between the seller and the foreign buyer does not conclusively establish that a transaction cannot be one 'in the course of export'. It may still be held to be such a transaction provided it is established that the contract between the seller and the third party 'occasions' the export. Basu J., followed this decision in Serajuddin and Co. v. Commercial Tax Officer, (1969) 23 STC 258 (Cal).

51. On the facts of this case, the Coffee Board, the Sellers, have concern with the actual export of goods. They have made various provisions to see that the purchasers must export. Condition 26, quoted by the learned Chief Justice, clearly provides that the coffee shall be exported to stipulated or approved destinations and it shall not under any circumstances be diverted to another destination, sold or be disposed of or otherwise released in India. If the purchaser commits a default, apart from penalty, it is provided that unexported coffee may be seized. Thus the Coffee Board retains control over the goods. These conditions create a bond between the sale and eventual export. The possibility that in a particular case a purchaser might commit a breach of contract or law and not export does not change the nature of the transaction.

52. I would accordingly allow the petition and declare that the sales held by the Coffee Board at the export auctions were in the course of export and exempt under Article 286 (1) (b) of the Constitution, read with Sec. 5 of the Central Sales Tax Act, 1956, and quash the impugned assessments in so far as they assess such sales.

ORDER

53. In accordance with the majority judgment, the petitions fail and are dismissed with costs.

Petitions dismissed.

Civil Appeal No. 1672 of 1966, D/- 22-9-1970.

(A) T. P. Act (1882), Section 67-A — Same mortgagor — Husband and wife could not be treated as one entity for mortgages — Husband and wife owning separate properties and mortgaging their properties separately and jointly — Suit to enforce joint mortgage does not bar a suit to enforce mortgage executed by one spouse alone — Section 67-A not attracted as 'mortgagor' is not the same.

To attract the applicability of Section 67-A, it is essential that the mortgagor must be the same and he should have executed two or more mortgages in respect of each of which he has a right to obtain the same kind of decree under Section 67.

There is no statutory provision or rule or principle by which the wife and the husband could be treated as one entity for the purpose of the mortgages.

M/s. P. Balagopal, A. V. Rangam and Miss Lily Thomas, Advocates, for Appellant; Mr. M. Natesan, Sr. Advocate, (M/s. R. Ramamurthi Iyer and R. Gopalakrishnan Advocates, with him), for Respondent.

GROVER, J.: — This is an appeal by certificate from a decree of the Madras High Court.

2. The appellant mortgaged his property bearing No. 162-A, West Masi Street, Madurai town for a sum of Rs. 45,000/- with the respondent Bank on October 14, 1950. He agreed to repay Rs. 5,000/- within a specified date and the balance was payable within two years from the date of the deed together with interest at 10½%. It was further agreed that if the mortgagor failed to pay the interest periodically and regularly he would be liable to pay interest at the rate of 12% per annum from the date of such default and further if he failed to pay the entire amount stipulated within two years he would have to pay the whole amount together with interest at 3½% per annum. The sum of Rs. 5,000 was paid within the time specified but the balance remained unpaid. In January 1952, the appellant and his wife borrowed Rs. 25,000/- and jointly executed a pronote. The wife deposited her title deeds relating to premises No. 162 West Masi Street. On June 25, 1952 the appellant and his wife created a mortgage of their respective properties Nos. 162-A and 162 West Masi Street to secure repayment of a sum of Rs. 8850/-. All the three mortgages were in favour of the respondent Bank.

3. In 1953 the Bank instituted a suit on the foot of the last two mortgages and obtained a decree against the appellant and his wife. This decree appears to have been satisfied. In April, 1958 the suit out of which the present appeal has arisen was filed by the Bank on the foot of the mortgage dated October 14, 1950. The main defence of the appellant, who was the sole mortgagor, was that the suit was not maintainable in view of the provisions of Section 67-A of the Transfer of Property Act and that the stipulation of interest was penal and in contravention of the provisions of the Usurious Loans Act, 1918. A number of other issues were framed but it is altogether unnecessary to mention them. The trial Court granted a preliminary decree for the recovery of principal amount of Rs. 40,000/- which remained unpaid with interest at 12% per annum from August 1, 1952 till the date of the decree and thereafter at 6% per annum till realisation. An appeal was taken to the High Court where two points were agitated. The first was based on the provisions of Sec. 67-A of the Transfer of Property Act and the second related to the rate of interest. The High Court did not accede to any of the contentions and dismissed the appeal.

4. Section 67-A of the Transfer of Property Act provides that a mortgagee who holds two or more mortgages executed by the same mortgagor in respect of each of which he has a right to obtain the same kind of decree under Section 67 and who sues to obtain such decree on any one of the mortgages, shall, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, be bound to sue on all the mortgages in respect of which the mortgage-money has become due. This section was inserted by the Amending Act 20 of 1929 in view of certain conflict among the High Courts in this country, with regard to the right of the mortgagee to sue at different times on different mortgages although the mortgagor was the same. As pointed out in Mulla's Transfer of Property Act, 5th Edn. at page 481 Sections 61 and 67-A of this Act lay down the simple rule that if a mortgagor has made two or more mortgages of the same property or of different properties to the same mortgagee the mortgagor may redeem each separately but that the mortgage must enforce all or none. To attract the applicability of Section 67-A it is essential that the mortgagor must be the same and he should have executed two or more mortgages in respect of each of which he has a right to obtain the same kind of decree under Section 67. In the present case it is not possible to hold that the mortgagor in the suit on the foot of the mortgage dated October 14, 1950 is the same as the mortgagor in the previous suit which was filed on the foot of the mortgages in favour of the appellant and his wife. In the other two mortgages there were two mortgagors, one the appellant and the other his wife. There is no statutory provision or rule or principle by which the wife and the husband could be treated as one entity for the purpose of the mortgages. Each was owner of a separate and distinct property and both joined in mortgaging their respective properties. In Moro Raghunath v. Balaji, (1889) ILR 13 Bom 45 the first mortgage was by two brothers and the second mortgage of part of the same property was by one brother. The Bombay High Court held that the suit to enforce the first mortgage did not bar a suit to enforce the second mortgage. This was before the insertion of Section 67-A but the principle embodied in that section is clearly illustrated by that case. The bar of Section 67-A, therefore, could not possibly come in the way of the institution of the present suit.

5. On the question of interest we are of the view in the light of the provisions of the mortgage deed and all the circumstances that the rate of 12% is unfair and penal. We are inclined, therefore, to give this relief that the interest should be calculated at the rate of 10½% (which was the original contractual rate) from the date of the mortgage to the date of the preliminary decree. Thereafter the interest shall be payable as directed by the trial court at the rate of 6% per annum till realisation. With this modification the appeal is dismissed but in view of the entire circumstances the parties are left to bear their own costs in this court.

Decree modified.

Noor Mohammad Mohd. Yusuf Momin, Appellant v. The State of Maharashtra, Respondent.

Criminal Appeal No. 24 of 1968, D/- 24-3-1970.

(A) Constitution of India, Art. 136 — Supreme Court normally does not review and appraise evidence for itself.

Under Art. 136 the Supreme Court does not normally proceed to review and appraise the evidence for itself and the conclusions of the High Court on questions of fact on appreciation of evidence are considered to be final. This is so even if the Supreme Court were to feel that a different view of the evidence is possible. But where it was represented that the evidence on the record did not support the conclusion of the High Court and that grave and substantial injustice had been caused, the Supreme Court undertook to go into the evidence to satisfy itself if there was any sufficient ground for interference on appeal by special leave.

(B) Penal Code (1860), Ss. 34, 109, and 120B — Distinction — Under Section 34 participation in the commission of offence necessary — Under S. 109 accused need not be present — Under S. 120B mere agreement is sufficient — Conspiracy need not be proved by direct evidence.

Section 34 embodies the principle of joint liability in the doing of a criminal act, the essence of that liability being the existence of a common intention. Participation in the commission of the offence in furtherance of the common intention invites its application. Section 109 on the other hand may be attracted even if the abettor is not present when the offence abetted is committed provided that he has instigated the commission of the offence or has engaged with one or more other persons in a conspiracy to commit an offence and pursuant to that conspiracy some act or illegal omission takes place or has intentionally aided the commission of an offence by an act or illegal omission. Criminal conspiracy differs from other offences in that mere agreement is made an offence even if no step is taken to carry out that agreement. Though there is close association of conspiracy with incitement and abetment the substantive offence of criminal conspiracy is somewhat wider in amplitude than abetment by conspiracy as contemplated by S. 107, I.P.C. A conspiracy from its very nature is generally hatched in secret. It is, therefore, extremely rare that direct evidence in proof of conspiracy can be forthcoming from wholly disinterested quarters or from utter strangers. But, like other offences, criminal conspiracy can be proved by circumstantial evidence. Indeed, in most cases proof of conspiracy is largely inferential though the inference must be founded on solid facts. Surrounding circumstances and antecedent and subsequent conduct, among other factors, constitute relevant material. In fact because of the difficulties in having direct evidence of criminal conspiracy, once reasonable ground is shown for believing that two or more persons have conspired to commit an offence then anything done by anyone of them in reference to their common intention after the same is entertained becomes, according to the law of evidence, relevant for proving both conspiracy and the offences committed pursuant thereto.

Mr. A. S. R. Chari, Sr. Advocate (Mr. A. G. Ratnaparkhi, Advocate, with him), for Appellant; M/s. G. L. Sanghi and S. P. Nayar, Advocates, for Respondent.

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

DUA, J:— In this appeal by special leave we are only concerned with the conviction of one out of four accused persons jointly tried for the murder of one Mohd. Yahya. The appellant Noor Mohammed Mahamed Yusef Momin, accused no. 4, in the trial court was jointly tried with three others in the court of the second Additional Sessions Judge, Thana on the following three charges:

"That you accused nos. 1 to 4 on or about the 16th day of April, 1965 at Bhiwandi entered into an agreement to commit the murder of Mohamed Yahya and that the same illegal act was done in pursuance of the said agreement and thereby you committed an offence punishable under S. 120B of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance.

That you accused Nos. 1, 2 and 3 on or about the 17th day of April, 1965 at about 11 p.m. at Bhiwandi in furtherance of common intention of you all and accused no. 4 to commit the murder of the deceased Mohamed Yahya did commit his murder by intentionally causing his death by assaulting him by knife and thereby committed an offence punishable under S. 302 read with Section 34 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance.

In the alternative you accused No. 4 on 17th of April, 1965 at Bhiwandi abetted the commission of the offence of murder of Mohamed Yahya

by accused Nos. 1 to 3 which offence was committed in consequence of your abetment and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under sections 109 and 302 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance.' The trial court convicted Mohd. Taki Haji Hussein Momin, accused no. 1 under Section 302, I.P.C. and sentenced him to imprisonment for life. He was acquitted of the other charges. His three co-accused were acquitted of all the charges. Accused No. 1 appealed to the Bombay High Court against his conviction whereas the State appealed against the acquittal of the other three. The High Court, after considering the evidence on the record, upheld the conviction of accused No. 1 and reversed the order of acquittal of the other three. Accused Nos. 2, 3 and 4 (Chinwa alias Ahamed Hussan Momin, Abdul Rahamen Bacchu Momin, and Nur Mohamed Mahamed Yusef Momin respectively) were held guilty of the offence under Section 120-B, I. P. C. as also of the offence under Section 302, read with Section 34, I. P. C. Accused No. 4 was in addition held guilty of the offence under Section 302 read with Section 109, I. P. C. Accused Nos. 2, 3 and 4 were sentenced to imprisonment for life both under Section 120-B, I. P. C. and Section 302 read with Section 34, I. P. C. Accused No. 4, appellant in this Court, was also separately sentenced to imprisonment for life for the offence under Section 302 read with Section 109, I. P. C. Incidentally it may be mentioned that Jaitunbi, widow of the deceased Mohd. Yahya, had also appealed to the Bombay High Court challenging the acquittal of accused Nos. 2, 3 and 4 on all charges and of accused No. 1 on the charges other than that of murder under Section 302, I. P. C. This appeal which was treated as an application under Section 417 (3), Criminal P. C. was held not to be maintainable.

2. As already indicated, this Court granted special leave only to the appellant who was accused No. 4 in the trial Court.

3. Before narrating the prosecution story the inter se relationship of the accused persons may be stated. Abdul Rehman Bacchu Momin, accused No. 3, is the husband of the sister of the appellant Ncor Mohammed's wife. Chinwa alias

Ahmed Hussan Momin, accused No. 2, is the brother of Kallu, who is the son-in-law of the appellant, accused No. 4. Mohd. Taki, accused No. 1, is the servant of Kallu. All these persons are the residents of the same place and the deceased Mohd. Yahya was a close neighbour of the appellant. According to the prosecution there were constant disputes between the appellant and the deceased over the right of passage and the right to tap water, and it is not disputed that both sides had made reports and counter-reports with the police against each other. The climax reached on April 16, 1965. In the morning at 7 O'clock on that day Mohd. Yahya, when going out of his house, found that there was a heap of earth and a cot belonging to the appellant obstructing his way. A cow belonging to the appellant was also standing in the passage. In order to clear his way the deceased picked up a stone and hurled it at the cow. This offended the appellant and he in retaliation threw a glass which he was holding towards the deceased and also abused him. The deceased reported this incident to the police station. The appellant also went to the police station and made a counter-complaint against the deceased. When the deceased and the appellant had gone to the police station the two wives of the appellant abused Jaitunbi, wife of the deceased, with the result that Jaitunbi also went to the police station to lodge a report. But this report was not recorded. A little later, the wives, sisters and children of the appellant again abused Jaitunbi and pelted stones at her. Jaitunbi went to the police station again to lodge a complaint. The same day at about 10 A. M. when the deceased was lying on a cot in his house the appellant came up to the door of the former's house asking him to get down. On enquiry by the deceased as to why he should get down the appellant replied that he would serve the deceased with his last tea. At that time the appellant was accompanied by four or five persons including Chinwa, accused No. 2. It is said that all of them abused the deceased. Chinwa, accused No. 2, held a knife in his hand which he is stated to have opened by pressing the button and as he tried to enter the house of the deceased, the latter's daughter, Noorjahan, went by the back door to the police station to lodge a complaint. This part of the story is not admitted by the accused. On Noorjahan's complaint the police came to the spot in a van and after interrogating the persons present the police party took with them accused Nos. 2 and 3. The appellant is stated to have offered to reach the police station himself a little later.

4. In view of these incidents Jaitunbi apparently felt somewhat frightened and advised her husband, deceased Mohd. Yahya, to go to Bombay to avoid further clashes with the appellant. Mohd. Yahya, acting on his wife's advice, went away to Bombay but returned on the evening of April 17, 1965 bringing with him some female guests. In those days an Urus was being held near Par Naka and it appears that it was to attend this Urus that the female guests came with him. Seeing Mohd. Yahya back from Bombay, the appellant asked his nephew Latif, who has sleeping on a cot outside the house, to go in, loudly uttering that a dead body was to be kept on that cot. The deceased who had reached home at about 9.30 p.m. a little later went out to a pan shop near the Navyug Hotel. The deceased accompanied by two unidentified persons followed him. Soon after, Mohd. Yahya was stabbed with a knife and this news reached his house. At the Par Naka two constables, Bhika Bahiram and Suvarnasing, who were on duty in connection with the Urus, on learning of some disturbance near the Navyug Hotel and noticing some commotion, proceeded to the lane where a crowd had collected. On the way, accused No. 3 told them that nothing untoward had happened; but the two constables nevertheless proceeded further and reached the spot where Mohd. Yahya was lying in injured condition. Someone from the upper storey of a house nearby shouted that the assailants were running away. Constable Bhika Bahiram asked Suvarnasing to attend to the injured person and he himself chased the two persons trying to escape. He caught Mohd. Taki, accused No. 1, in a lane near the municipal office. The other person who could not be caught was identified by Bhika Bahiram as Chinwa, accused No. 2, who was known to him. Suvarnasing in the meantime, feeling that Bhika Bahiram would need his help also followed him and found him grappling with Mohd. Taki. Both the constables over-powered Mohd. Taki, who had a knife in his pocket and whose clothes were blood-stained. Mohd. Taki was brought back to the place where Mohd. Yahya was lying injured. Mohd. Yahya was taken to the hospital in a bullock cart but he expired soon thereafter. In the report lodged by constable Bhika Bahiram, the names of accused Nos. 1 and 2 were mentioned and accused No. 3 was described as an old man with moustaches, wearing a lungi. The appellant was not arrested, though his statement was recorded during the investigation on April, 19, 1965. He appears to have absconded soon thereafter and was arrested on June 18, 1965.

5. The case against the appellant is to be considered in the background of the order of conviction against the other three co-accused which has become final, this Court having declined special leave against conviction.

6. The High Court, on a consideration of the entire evidence, came to the conclusion that all the accused (Nos. 1 to 4) had hatched a plan to commit the murder of Mohd. Yahya after his return from Bombay and it was in pursuance of that conspiracy that he was murdered on the night of April 17, 1965. The appellant, along with accused Nos. 2 and 3, was also held guilty of an offence under Section 302 read with Section 34 Indian Penal Code. He was further held guilty of an offence under Section 302 read with Section 109, Indian Penal Code. The appellants' conviction on all these counts is challenged in this Court.

7. So far as S. 34, Indian Penal Code is concerned, it embodies the principle of joint liability in the doing of a criminal act, the essence of that liability being the existence of a common intention. Participation in the commission of the offence in furtherance of the common intention invites its application. Section 109, Indian Penal Code on the other hand may be attracted even if the abettor is not present when the offence abetted is committed provided that he has instigated the commission of the offence or has engaged with one or more other persons in a conspiracy to commit an offence and pursuant to that conspiracy some act or illegal omission takes place or has intentionally aided the commission of an offence by an act or illegal omission. Turning to the charge under Section 120-B, Indian Penal Code criminal conspiracy was made a substantive offence in 1913 by the introduction of Chapter V-A in the Indian Penal Code. Criminal conspiracy postulates an agreement between two or more persons to do, or cause to be done, an illegal act or an act which is not illegal, by illegal means. It differs from other offences in that mere agreement is made an offence even if no step is taken to carry out that agreement. Though there is close association of conspiracy with incitement and abetment the substantive offence of criminal conspiracy is somewhat wider in amplitude than abetment by conspiracy as contemplated by Sec. 107, I. P. C. A conspiracy from its very nature is generally hatched in secret. It is, therefore, extremely rare that direct evidence in proof of conspiracy can be forthcoming from wholly disinterested quarters or from utter strangers. But, like other offences, criminal conspiracy can be proved by circumstantial evidence. Indeed in most cases proof of conspiracy is largely inferential though the inference must be founded on solid facts. Surrounding circumstances and antecedent and subsequent conduct, among other factors, constitute relevant material. In fact because of the difficulties in having direct evidence of criminal conspiracy, once reasonable ground is shown for believing that two or more persons have conspired to commit an offence then anything done by anyone of them in reference to their common intention after the same is entertained becomes, according to the law of evidence, relevant for proving both conspiracy and the offences committed pursuant thereto. In the present case the High Court, after referring to the evidence of Laxmibai, (P. W. 7) and Hari Chavan (P. W. 13) (whom that Court expressly described as independent witnesses) and also of Murlidhar (P. W. 12), expressed its opinion in these words:

"All this evidence would show that at least since the 16th of April, 1965 the accused Nos. 2, 3 and 4 were acting in concert and had something common in their mind. It would also show the presence of the accused No. 2 with a knife at the incident of the 16th April, 1965 and his threatening the deceased with the knife and the acts and words used by the accused No. 4 Mohammad Noora inspiring the accused No. 2 and some other persons who were with him to beat and kill Mohammad Yahya, the subsequent utterances of the accused No. 4 when the deceased returned from Bombay on the night of the 17th of April, 1965, the following of the deceased Mohammad Yahya by the accused No. 4 along with two persons when Mohammad Yahya went out to have a paan, the death of Mohammad Yahya soon thereafter, then running of the four persons from the scene of the offence, the accused No. 3 misleading the police constable with respect to the incident, the accused Nos. 1 and 2 running away from the scene of the offence eluding the police constables, the accused No. 1 being caught after some struggle near the Municipal Office and found with his clothes stained with blood and having a knife in his shirt pocket, all these circumstances, taken together, would show that the accused Nos. 1 to 4 must have met previously before causing of the injuries to deceased and must have hatched out a plan of causing the death of the deceased or causing at least grievous injuries to the deceased. Otherwise the presence of all the four accused near the scene of the offence at the time the incident occurred cannot be satisfactorily explained. The accused No. 4 had known that the deceased had returned from Bombay and the ominous words he used while asking his nephew Lateef to get down from the cot would suggest that he had still in mind that idea of doing away with the deceased and must have collected the other colleagues of his to carry out the plan which must have been hatched out prior to the incident. That inference can reasonably be drawn from the circumstances established in the case and it is in pursuance of that pre-planning to do away with the deceased, all the four accused must have followed the deceased when he went out that night and the deceased was stabbed by at least some of these accused persons". The High Court also believed the evidence of Noorjehan (F. W. 11) and Jaitunbi, (P. W. 5). In its opinion though these two witnesses were, to a certain extent, interested their evidence appeared to it to be natural and its tenor did not show that they were deposing falsely. On a consideration of the entire material on the record the High Court felt that all the four accused persons must have hatched a plan to commit the murder of Mohd. Yahya after his return from Bombay and it was in pursuance of this conspiracy that Mohd. Yahya was murdered on the night of April 17, 1965. The Court took into account the facts that accused No. 1 was caught after some chase near the scene of occurrence, accused No. 2 was identified though he had made good his escape, accused No. 3, who was also identified by description, tried to mislead the police constables, and that accused No. 4 was seen following the deceased just before the murder with two or three persons. On this material the High Court upheld the appellant's conviction.

8. Under Article 136 of the Constitution, this Court does not normally proceed to review and appraise the evidence for itself and the conclusions of the High Court on questions of fact on appreciation of evidence are considered to be final. This is so even if this Court were to feel that a different view of the evidence is possible. But in this case, as it was represented that the evidence on the record does not support the conclusion of the High Court and that grave and substantial injustice had been caused, we undertook to go into the evidence, with the help of the counsel for the parties, to satisfy ourselves if there is any sufficient ground for interference on appeal by special leave. Hari Chavan, (P. W. 13), has deposed that on April 16, 1965 at about 10.30 P. M. the appellant, while standing near the steps of Mohd. Yahya's house, exhorted three of his companions, one of whom was accused No. 2 who had a knife in his hand, to beat the deceased: the actual words used being, "Beat him: Kill him: I shall look to the consequences". This evidence is corroborated by Laxmibai, (P. W. 7) and both of these witnesses have been believed by the High Court. Laxmibai (P. W. 7) actually saw the appellant with the two others following the deceased about 15 or 20 minutes before the murder. We are unable to find any cogent ground for disagreeing with the High Court. On this evidence not only animus on the part of the appellant but also instigation by him must be held to be fully established. This evidence would also support the charge of criminal conspiracy against the appellant. Indeed, the evidence of Jaitunbi (P. W. 5) and Noorjehan (P. W. 1) also shows that the appellant on April 16, 1965 and on the evening of April 17, on Mohd. Yahya's return from Bombay and a short time before his murder, openly gave expression to his strong feelings of animosity against the deceased which leaves little doubt that he was thinking of doing away with Mohd. Yahya's life. The admitted strained relations between the parties which reached the climax on April 16, 1965 and the evidence just discussed, in our opinion, clearly establishes the complicity of the appellant in the murder of the deceased. The charges under Section 302 read with Section 109, I. P. C. and of conspiracy are thus fully supportable on the evidence. In regard to the charge under Section 302 read with Section 34, I. P. C. also Jaitunbi (P. W. 5) has deposed that on the date of the occurrence at about 9.30 P. M. the appellant asked his nephew Latif who was sleeping on the cot outside to go inside the house because a dead body was to be kept on that cot. Thereafter it is in the evidence of Laxmibai (P. W. 7), that the appellant accompanied by two persons followed the deceased when the latter went to the pan shop. About 20 minutes later the news of Mohd. Yahya's murder reached his house. From this evidence it seems highly probable that at the time of the actual murder of Mohd. Yahya the appellant was either present with the other three co-accused or was somewhere nearby. But this evidence does not seem to be enough to prove beyond reasonable doubt his presence at the spot in the company of the other accused when the murder was actually committed. For it may be that after leaving the house he stayed away and the persons actually taking part in the murder were only the other three co-accused. We are, therefore, inclined to give to the appellant the benefit of doubt in regard to the charge under Section 302 read with Section 34, I. P. C. This would, however, be of little practical benefit to the appellant because he has already been given the lesser sentence. This appeal is, therefore, accepted only to the extent that the appellant's conviction under Section 302 read with Sec. 34 is set aside. In all other respects this appeal fails and is dismissed.

Appeal partly allowed.

The hereditary trustees of the institutions generally have only a bare right to manage and administer the secular estate of the institution or the endowment and they do not have proprietary or beneficial interest either in the corpus or in the usufruct of the estate. The position of a hereditary trustee does not appear to be in any way different from that of a Dharamkartha or a mere manager or custodian of an institution or endowment. There is one exception only. The hereditary trustee succeeds to the office as of right and in accordance with the rules governing succession. But in all other respects his duties and obligations are the same as that of Dharamkartha. A hereditary trustee cannot be equated to a Shebait of a religious institution or a Mathadhipati or the Mahant. The ingredients of both office and property, of duties and personal interest are blended together in the rights of a Mahant as also a shebait and a Mathadhipati. The position of Dharamkartha, on the other hand, is not that of a Shebait of a religious institution or of the head of a math. These functionaries have a much higher right with larger power of disposal and administration and they have a personal interest of beneficial character. A bare right to manage an institution or an endowment cannot be treated as property within Article 19 (1) and Article 31. Consequently, the right of hereditary trusteeship is not property within meaning of Article 19 (1) (f) or any other Article of the Constitution. W. P. Nos. 2871 of 1968, etc., etc. D/- 31-12-1969 (A. The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

GROVER, J.: These appeals by certificate are from a common judgment of the Andhra Pradesh High Court and involve the question of the constitutionality of certain provisions of the Andhra Pradesh Charitable and Hindu Religious Institutions and Endowments Act, 1966 (Act 17 of 1966), hereinafter called the 'Act'.

2. A number of petitions under Article 226 of the Constitution were filed before the High Court on behalf of the institutions of endowments some of which were public and some private in character. A few institutions were societies registered under the Societies Registration Act while others claimed to be religious endowments or public bodies like municipalities which were managing the institutions. We might, for the sake of convenience state the facts in Civil Appeal No. 1360 of 1970. In the affidavit of Nalam Rama-lingaiah it is stated that he is the hereditary trustee of the Nalam Choultry and Vysya Seva Sadanam which are private trusts. They were founded by his ancestor in the year 1879 and 1920 respectively. He had been the managing trustee from 1943. The Choultry was endowed with immovable property comprising an area of 453 acres of land which, by careful management, was now fetching an income of Rs. 40,000/-. Besides feeding the poor and affording free lodging facilities to pilgrims scholarships were being given to deserving students. The Sevasadan was endowed with huge properties which were fetching Rupees 18,000/- as income. The objects of this charity were (1) to impart education and training in handicraft to women; (2) to feed poor girls; (3) provide free shelter to women students and (4) run women's Sanskrit School. At no time there had been any complaint about mismanagement of the aforesaid trust. A number of other Choultries were also mentioned which were being managed by the hereditary trustee or trustees. Some of them were providing food and shelter to students and travellers of all castes and creeds including Muslims and Christians. Among the objects of some of the Choultries was included the performing of pujas in temples. These Choultries were founded in the last century and ever since their inception the members of the family of the founder or founders had been managing them. At no time there had been any complaint of any kind against the management. On the contrary the hereditary trustees had improved the endowment properties and added several charitable activities to the existing objects.

3. The validity of the main provisions of the Act was challenged on the grounds that the office of the hereditary trusteeship was property within the meaning of Art. 19 (1) (f) and that these provisions were ultra vires and void as violative of that Articles as also of Arts. 14, 25, 26 and 31 of the Constitution. On behalf of the respondents the position taken up was that all the institutions in question were public and none of them was private in character that they were religious and charitable institutions and endowments within the meaning of the Act. It was denied that the office of hereditary trustee was property within the meaning of Art. 19 (1) (f) or that there was infringement of any of the fundamental rights mentioned in the various petitions. It was maintained that the hereditary trustees etc. had only a bare right to manage the affairs of the institution and the secular matters which could not be regarded as property within the meaning of the aforesaid Article.

4. The High Court formulated five questions for decision but it is unnecessary to mention or go into all of them as the matters in controversy before us relate to two of these questions. These are (1) whether on the facts and in the circumstances the office of hereditary trusteeship is or is not property within the meaning of Art. 19 (1) (f) and Art. 31 and (2) whether all or any of the material provisions of the Act are hit by Art. 14, 19 (1) (f), 25, or 31. The High Court was of the view that the office of hereditary trustee was property within the meaning of Art. 19 (1) (f). It was, however, held that the impugned provisions only imposed reasonable restrictions on the exercise of the right of the trustees, in the interest of general public and good administration of the public institution. It was further found that none of the impugned provisions were violative of Arts. 14, 19 (1) (f), 25, 26 and 31 of the Constitution. According to the High Court the material provisions of the Act were only intended to regulate and ensure proper, efficient and better administration and management of the institution. All the writ petitions were dismissed.

5. The learned counsel for the appellants has invited our attention to the various sections of the Act but has confined his challenge mainly to the provisions contained in S. 15 read with Ss. 17, 27, 97 and 36 of the Act. We may advert to the main provisions and the general scheme of the Act. According to the preamble the Act has been enacted to consolidate and amend the law relating to the administration and governance of charitable and Hindu religious charitable institutions and endowments in the State of Andhra Pradesh. It applies to all public charitable institutions and endowments other than wakfs governed by the provisions of the Wakf Act 1954. According to the explanation to S. 1 (3) (a) the expression "charitable institutions and endowments" shall include every charitable institution or endowment the administration of which is, for the time being, vested in any department of Government or civil court, Zila Parishad or other local authority or any company, society, organisation, institution or other person. The act also applies to all Hindu public religious institutions and endowments. "Charitable endowment" has been defined by S. 2 (3) to mean all property given or endowed for any charitable purpose. "Charitable institution" has been defined by S. 2 (4) to mean any establishment, undertaking organisation or association formed for a charitable purpose and includes a specific endowment. Various sub-clauses of S. 2 define "charitable purpose", "Commissioner", "Executive Officer", "Hereditary Office-holder", "Hereditary Trustee", "religious charity", "religious endowment", "specified endowment", etc. The definition of "hereditary trustee" contained in sub-clause (15) and a "trustee" in sub-clause (28) may be reproduced:

" "Hereditary trustee" means the trustee of a charitable or religious institution or endowment the succession to whose office devolves according to the rule of succession laid down by the founder or according to usage or custom applicable to the institution or endowment or according to the law of succession for the time being in force as the case may be."

" "Trustee" means any person whether known as mathadhipati, mohant, dharamakarta, mutwalli, muntazim, or by any other name, in whom either alone or in association with any other person, the administration and management of a charitable or religious institution or endowment are vested; and includes a Board of Trustees".

Chapter II deals with the appointment of Commissioner, Joint Commissioners etc., and their powers and functions. Section 6 provides for preparation and publications of list of charitable and religious institutions and endowments on the basis of income. By Section 7 the Commissioner is to be a corporation sole having a perpetual succession and common seal. Section 8 provides that subject to other provisions of the Act the administration of all charitable and Hindu religious institutions and endowments shall be under the general superintendence and control of the Commissioner and such superintendence and control shall include the power to pass any order which might be deemed necessary to ensure that such institutions and endowments are properly administered and their income is duly appropriated for the purpose for which they are founded or exist. Section 12 empowers the Commissioner to enter and inspect institutions and endowments. Chapter III relates to administration and management of charitable and Hindu religious institutions and endowments. Section 14 declares that all properties belonging to or given or endowed to a charitable or religious institution or endowment shall vest in the charitable or religious institution or endowment as the case may be. It is unnecessary to set out Section 15 in extenso: It provides for the constitution of a Board of trustees, whose number has been specified, in respect of charitable or religious institution or endowments of the various categories mentioned in the section. The power to constitute the Board has been conferred on the Government, Commissioner, Deputy Commissioner or the Assistant Commissioner, as the case may be. It is discretionary where there is a hereditary trustee but a Board must be constituted in every other case. In making the appointment of trustees it has been enjoined that due regard should be given to the religious denomination or other section thereof to which the institution belongs or the endowment is made and wishes of the founder. All properties belonging to the institution or endowment shall stand transferred to such Board of trustees or trustee, as the case may be. Section 16 gives the disqualifications for trusteeship. Section 17 deals with the appointment of a Chairman of the Board of trustees. It has been provided, inter alia, that where there is only one hereditary trustee he shall be the Chairman. Where there are more than one the Government etc., may nominate by rotation one of them to be the Chairman. Section 22 gives the duties of the trustee. He is bound to produce books, accounts, returns relating to the administration of the institution or endowment for inspection by the Commissioner and other functionaries whenever required to do so. Section 27 provides for the appointment of the Executive Officer by the Government and the Commissioner respectively. It also lays down the duties of the Executive Officer. It is declared that the Executive Officer shall be the employee of the Government who shall determine the conditions of his service. Section 31 lays down how the vacancies amongst the office-holders or servants of charitable or religious institution or endowment have to be filled up by the trustees. Section 32 deals with the punishment of office-holders and servants. The general control vests in the trustees who can take disciplinary action in accordance with the prescribed procedure for the various matters mentioned in sub-section (1). In case of an institution or endowment whose annual income exceeds two lakhs the power to impose any penalty has been conferred on the Executive Officer. Section 35 gives power to the Executive Officer not to implement orders or resolutions of the trustee or Board of Trustees in certain cases. Section 36 gives overriding effect to the provisions of Chapter III over the existing corresponding provisions. Chapter IV deals with registration of charitable and religious institutions and endowments; Chapter V with muths and endowments attached thereto; Chapter VII with budget, accounts and audit; Chapter VIII with finance; Chapter X with alienation of immovable property and resumption of Inam Lands; Chapter XII with inquiries and Chapter XIII with appeals, revisions and review, etc. Section 95 empowers the Government to dissolve the Board of Trustees in certain cases and Sec. 97 enables it to appoint a specific authority where the board of trustees has ceased to function or has been dissolved. Section 102 is in the following terms:

"Nothing in this Act shall—

(a) save as otherwise expressly provided in this Act or the rules made thereunder, affect any honour, emoluments or perquisites to which any person is entitled by custom or otherwise in any charitable or religious institution or endowment, or its established usage in regard to any other matter, or

(b) authorise any interference with the religious or spiritual functions of the head of a math including those relating to the imparting of religious instruction or the rendering of spiritual service".

Under Section 110, Sections 92 and 93 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 can no longer be applicable to charitable institutions and Hindu religious institutions and endowments to which the Act applies.

6. The main stress, on behalf of the appellants, has been laid on the effect of the provisions of the Act and in particular Section 15 read with the other sections mentioned before on the office of the hereditary trustee. It has been contended that a hereditary trustee has to manage the institution or the endowment in accordance with the directions of the founder. It was his duty and responsibility to appoint the staff and take disciplinary action whenever necessary and to regulate the expenditure and carry out generally the objects of the charitable institution or endowment. By the appointment of a Board of trustees the hereditary trustee can no longer manage and exercise control over the institution alone or in association with other hereditary trustees. He has to share the management and responsibility with other members of the Board who may be drawn from the section or faction which may be politically motivated and may be hostile to him. The appointment of the Board, it is pointed out, rests with the Government, the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner, as the case may be and although hereditary trustee or trustees have to be included in the Board, the entire administrative power is vested in the Executive Officer. This officer is a permanent Government servant and the Board or the trustee cannot either remove him or take any disciplinary action against him which means that the Board or the trustee cannot exercise any effective control over him. The Executive Officer can in certain eventualities even refuse to implement orders of the Board. The hereditary trustee has thus been left only with what may be called the "husk of the title" and his right to hold property has been seriously interfered with.

7. The first and the main question is whether the office of the hereditary trustee is "property" within the meaning of Art. 19 (1) (f). For the reasons, which will be presently stated, we are unable to agree with the High Court that the office of hereditary trustee is "property" within that Article.

8. The view that the office of hereditary trustee was itself "property" within Article 19 (1) (f) even if no emoluments were attached to it found favour with many High Courts. We need refer only to the leading judgment of a Division Bench of the Madras High Court in Kidangazhi Manakka Narayanan Nambudripad v. The State of Madras, ILR (1955) Mad 356 = (AIR 1954 Mad 385). The line of reasoning which prevailed was that the office of hereditary trusteeship descended like partible property on the heirs of a trustee and even females were entitled to the office if they happened to succeed as heirs. The rule in the Tagore case, (1872) 9 Beng LR 377 (PC), has been applied to the devolution of the office of hereditary trustee as if it was property; (vide Ganesh Chunder Dhur v. Lal Behary Dhur, (1936) 71 Mad LJ 740 = (AIR 1936 PC 318) and Bhaba Tarini Debi v. Asha Lata Debi, ILR (1943) 2 Cal 137 = (AIR 1943 PC 89) both decisions of the Privy Council). Support was also sought from the observations in Angurbala Mullick v. Debabrata Mullick, (1951) SCR 1125 = (AIR 1951 SC 293) relating to the office of a Shebait which was held to be property. Another reason given was that "property" in Article 19 (1) (f) was of wide import and was of sufficient amplitude to take in hereditary trusteeship.

9. The High Court in the judgment under appeal delved into the history and the background in which hereditary office had been equated to property in Hindu Law. Starting from Krishnabhat v. Kapabhat, (1869) 6 Bom HCR 137 most of the later decisions of the Privy Council and the High Courts were discussed. We need refer only to Gnanasambanda Pandara Sannadhi v. Velu Pandaram, (1900) 27 Ind App 69 (PC) in which their Lordships pointed out that the rule in Tagore's case, (1872) 9 Beng LR 377 (PC) that all estates of inheritance created by gift or will so far as they were inconsistent with the general law of inheritance were void was applicable "to an hereditary office and endowment as well as the other immoveable property."

10. In cases in which the office of hereditary trusteeship has been held to be property within the meaning of Article 19 (1) (f) the true character and incidents of that office do not appear to have been fully kept in view. It was common ground before the High Court and has not been disputed before us that the hereditary trustees of the institutions with which we are concerned have only claimed a bare right to manage and administer the secular estate of the institution or the endowment and in no case any hereditary trustee has claimed proprietary or beneficial interest either in the corpus or in the usufruct of the estate. The position of a hereditary trustee does not appear to be in any way different from that of a Dharmakartha or a mere manager or custodian of an institution or endowment. There is one exception only. The hereditary trustee succeeds to the office as of right and in accordance with the rules governing succession. But in all other respects his duties and obligations are the same as that of Dharmakartha. No one has ever suggested that a hereditary trustee can be equated to a Shebait of a religious institution or Mathadhipati or the Mahant. The ingredients of both office and property, of duties and personal interest are blended together in the rights of a Mahant as also a Shebait and a Mathadhipati. The position of Dharmakartha, on the other hand, is not that of a Shebait of a religious institution or of the head of a math. These functionaries have a much higher right with larger power of disposal and administration and they have a personal interest of beneficial character; (See Srinivasa Chariar v. Evalappa Mudaliar). There would thus be no justification for holding that since the office of the aforesaid functionaries has been consistently held by this Court to be property the office of a hereditary trustee is also property within Article 19 (1) (f).

11. In Tilkayat Shri Govindlalji v. State of Rajasthan, (1964) 1 SCR 561 = (AIR 1963 SC 1638) the distinction between the office of mahant and that of the Tilkayat of Nathdwara temple was clearly enunciated. It was pointed out that the mahant or Shebait was entitled to be maintained out of the property of the math or the temple. The Tilkayat never used any income from the property of the temple for his personal needs or private purposes nor did he claim any property interest therein. What he claimed was merely the right to manage the property, to create leases in respect of it in a reasonable manner and the right to alienate it for the purposes of the temple. These rights were exercised by him under the absolute and direct supervision of the Durbar of Udeipur. It was laid down by this Court that the aforesaid rights could not be equated with the totality of the powers generally possessed by the mahant or the Shebait. In our judgment the hereditary trustee cannot in any way claim any higher rights of managing the properties of the institution or the endowment than the Tilkayat. His rights fall far short of those of the Mahant and the Shebait. It may be that in the case of the Tilkayat his rights were governed by the firman issued by the Durbar which had the force of law but the ratio of decision essentially is that a bare right to manage an institution or an endowment cannot be treated as property within Article 19 (1) and Article 31. In Raja Birakishore v. State of Orissa, (1964) 7 SCR 32 = (AIR 1964 SC 1501) the constitutionality of Shri Jagannath Temple Act, 1954 (Act 2 of 1955) was challenged. The attack was based mainly on the ground that that Act took away the perquisites of Raja of Puri which had been found to belong to him in the record of rights. The Raja had two-fold connection with the temple. In the first place he was the Adyasevak i. e., the Chief Servant of the temple and in that capacity he had certain rights and privileges. He was also the sole superintendent of the temple and was incharge of the management of the secular affairs of the temple. After reviewing the provisions of Act 2 of 1955 this Court observed that it provided for the management of the secular affairs of the temple and did not interfere with the religious affairs thereof. The rights which the Raja possessed had been exercised by the predecessor also but because he had been deprived only of the rights of management which carried no beneficial interest in the property the attack based on the provisions of Arts. 19 (1) (f) and 31 (2) could not be sustained. One of the features common to that case and the present one is that the management had been transferred from the sole control of the Raja to the control of a committee. This was regarded as a purely secular function which did not carry with it any right to property and could not be hit by Art. 19 (1) (f).

12. It is true that in the latest decision of this court in Sambudamurthi Mudaliar v. State of Madras, (1970) 2 SCR 424, it was taken to be well established that the office of a hereditary trustee is in the nature of "property" and this is so whether the trustee has beneficial interest of some sort or not. This observation, we apprehend, was not necessary for a decision of that case. There the question was whether the appellant was a hereditary trustee within the meaning of Section 6 (9) of the Madras Act 1961 and there was no discussion or determination of the point that the office of the hereditary trustee was property within Art. 19 (1) (f) or any other Article. Nor do we consider that the various pronouncements of the Privy Council that the rule in the Tazore case, (1872) 9 Beng LR 377 (PC) applies to succession of hereditary trustees can afford much assistance in deciding whether an office holder who has a bare right of management can claim to have any right or interest in the nature of property within the meaning of Art. 19 (1) (f). Following the principles laid down in the Tilkayat, (1964) 1 SCR 561 = (AIR 1963 SC 1638) and Raja Birakishore, (1964) 7 SCR 32 = (AIR 1964 SC 1501) cases we are unable to endorse the view that the office of hereditary trusteeship is property within Art. 19 (1) (f) or any other Article of the Constitution.

13. We may add that even if it was held that the rights in question constituted "property" their regulation by the relevant provisions of the Act would undoubtedly be protected by Art. 19 (5). We have no hesitation in concurring with the decision of the High Court that restrictions which have been imposed by the provisions of the Act on the hereditary trustees are reasonable and are in the interest of the general public. The power to appoint non-hereditary trustees or Executive Officers where there is already a hereditary trustee or trustees notwithstanding there is no mismanagement is only for the purpose of ensuring better and efficient administration and management of the institution or endowment. Non-hereditary trustees have been associated with the hereditary trustee who has not been removed from his office. As a matter of fact complete safeguards have been provided for ensuring that he remains his office. He or one of the hereditary trustees has to be the Chairman of the Board. He has various powers under the provisions of the Act already noticed. All that can be said is that instead of managing the institution alone he has to administer it in collaboration with other trustees who are non-hereditary. In matters of religion such a puja, dattam, rituals etc. there can be no interference. It has been provided in categorical terms that the same must be continued to be performed according to Agansastras or usage or custom prevalent in the institution. It is only the secular aspect that has been touched and there can be no manner of doubt that the same has been done in interest of better and efficient administration. It must be remembered that the legislation relating to public and charitable institutions or endowments has taken place as a result of careful deliberation by high powered bodies.

14. In the report of the Hindu Religious Endowment Commission prescribed over by Dr. C. P. Ramaswami Iyer which was appointed in March 1960 it has been pointed out that legislation relating to endowments became necessary in the States as a result of the almost invariable mismanagement of the endowment properties of temples by the trustees, misappropriation of the funds of the endowment for purposes unconnected with the original aims and objects of such endowments, utilisation of funds of the endowment by the trustees or managers for their personal purposes etc. All this fully supports the decision of the High Court that the restrictions which have been placed on the hereditary trustees as also on others in whom the management of the institution in question vests are reasonable and in the public interest. Thus the appellants cannot succeed on the principal point which has been argued before us.

15. A faint attempt was made to sustain the attack under Arts. 14 and 26 (d) of the Constitution but finally hardly any arguments were addressed worth noticing on these points. It is unnecessary to deal with individual appeals some of which were filed by societies registered under the Societies Registration Act i.e. Civil Appeal No. 1249 of 1970, C. A. No. 1271 of 1970 by the Municipal Council, Visakhapatnam, related to the Turner's Choultry which, according to the Municipal Council, was its private property. So far as the validity of the impugned provisions is concerned the same must be sustained in these cases on the same reasoning as in the case relating to the hereditary trustee. The High Court has rightly left open the question whether the Turner's Choultry is a private or a public charitable institution. This the Municipal Council is entitled to agitate before the Deputy Commissioner under S. 77 of the Act. Before the High Court some of the Writ Petitioners had claimed that their institutions were religious denominations within Article 26 and were therefore entitled to the protection guaranteed by that Article. The High Court has, quite rightly, observed that these matters should be agitated in a proper forum and they have been left open for determination if and when so desired. This indisputably was the correct course to follow.

16. The appeals fail and are dismissed with costs. One set of hearing fee.

Appeals dismissed.

National Bell Co. (In C. A. No. 1952/1966) and Gupta Industrial Corporation (In C. A. No. 1953 of 1966), Appellants v. Metal Goods Mfg. Co. (P) Ltd. and another (In both the Appeals), Respondents.

Civil Appeals Nos. 1952 and 1953 of 1966, D/- 18-3-1970.

(A) Trade and Merchandise Marks Act (1958), Section 56 (2) — "Aggrieved person" — Expression includes person who has, before registration, used trade mark in question as also person against whom infringement action is taken or threatened.

(Para 9)

(B) Trade and Merchandise Marks Act (1958), Sections 32 (c), 9 (3) — Word "distinctive" is used in Sec. 32 (c) in same sense as is used in Sec. 9 (3) — Expression "for the purpose of this Act" in Section 9 (3) indicates that word "distinctive" has uniform meaning all throughout the Act.

(Para 9)

(C) Trade and Merchandise Marks Act (1958), Sections 32 (c), 56 — Presumption under Section 32 as to registered trade mark — Rebuttal on ground that mark is not distinctive — Fact that mark is not distinctive must exist as on date of filing rectification application under Section 56 and not on date of registration.

While Clause (b) of Section 32 relates to facts existing at the time of and after registration Clause (c) relates to facts which are post-registration facts, existing at the date of the commencement of rectification proceedings. If the trade mark at such date is not distinctive in relation to the goods of the registered proprietor, the rule as to conclusiveness enunciated in Section 32 would not apply. Therefore, a person can apply for cancellation on the ground that the trade mark in question was not at the date of the commencement of the rectification proceedings distinctive in the sense of Section 9 (3). The burden of proof, however, in such a case is on the applicant applying under Section 56. (Paras 9, 11)

(D) Trade and Merchandise Marks Act (1958), Sections 2 (j), 9 (3) — Trade mark consisting of numeral — It can be distinctive — Registration of numerals not limited to textile goods — Registrable for other goods also on proof of extensive use. (Point conceded). (Para 10)

(E) Trade and Merchandise Marks Act (1958), Sections 11 (e), 32 (b) — Registration of non-registrable trade mark, it not being distinctive — Rule under Section 32 as to its conclusiveness — Applicability — Clause (e) of Section 11 — Construction of.

The true construction of Clause (e) of Section 11 is that even assuming that the trade marks in question were not distinctive and for that reason not registrable as not falling within Section 9 that fact by itself would not mean that they became disentitled to the protection in a Court. Therefore, the rule as to conclusiveness of the validity of registration embodied in Section 32 applies even to those cases where if full facts had been ascertained at the time of the registration that registration would not have been allowed provided of course that it does not offend against the provisions of Section 11, i. e., in addition to the matters in Clauses (a) to (d) in Section 11 be disentitled to protection in a Court. Clause (e) of Section 11 deals with prohibition and not with requisites of registration. Therefore, although a mark cannot be registered for instance, because it is not distinctive as provided by Section 9, such a mark is not for that reason only one the registration of which is prohibited by Section 11. The Section lays down positive objection to registration and not to mere lack of qualification. This is clear from Clause (e) of Section 11, which uses the expression "disentitled to protection", and not the expression "not entitled to protection". The former contemplates some illegal or other disentanglement inherent in the mark itself. (1913) 35 RPC 185, Rel. on. (Paras 14, 16)

(F) Trade and Merchandise Marks Act (1958), Section 32 (c) — Distinctiveness of trade-mark — Loss of — Cancellation of registered trade mark on ground under Section 32 (c) — When possible.

The principle underlying Cl (c) of Section 32 is that the property in a trade mark exists so long as it continues to be distinctive of the goods of the registered proprietor in the eyes of the public or a section of the public. If the proprietor is not in a position to use the mark to distinguish his goods from those of others or has abandoned it or the mark has become so common in the market that it has ceased to connect him with his goods, there remains no justification in retaining it on the register. The distinctiveness of the trade mark in relation to the goods of a registered proprietor of such a trade mark may be lost in a variety of ways, e. g., by the goods not being capable of being distinguished as the goods of such a proprietor or by extensive piracy so that the marks become publici juris.

Where the evidence does not show that there were repeated breaches of registered trade mark which went unchallenged though known to proprietor, the mere fact that the trade mark was also used by other person would not, in absence of proof that use was substantial, attract Clause (c) of Section 32 so as to disentitle the registered proprietor from claiming its exclusive use. (Para 17)

(G) Trade and Merchandise Marks Act (1958), Section 32 (c) — Expression "commencement of proceedings" — Interpretation of.

Under Section 32 (c) the marks have to be distinctive at the commencement of the proceedings. Prima facie, the expression "commencement of the proceedings" means the commencement of proceedings in which the question as to the conclusive character of the registration, as laid down in Section 32, arises. Such a question may arise in a suit for infringement of the trade mark in which the registered proprietor may rely on Section 32 to prove his title to the registered trade mark as also in rectification proceedings filed as a result of such a suit or otherwise, and the period of seven years would have to be calculated according to the particular proceedings in which the conclusive nature of the validity of registration is relied on.

(H) Trade and Merchandise Marks Act (1958), Section 32 (c) — Infringement of registered trade mark — Negligence to proceed against — When amounts to abandonment of trade mark.

Mere neglect to proceed does not necessarily constitute abandonment if it is in respect of infringements which are not sufficient to affect the distinctiveness of the mark even if the proprietor is aware of them. Where neglect to challenge infringement is alleged, the character and extent of the trade of the infringers and their position have to be reckoned in considering whether the registered proprietor is barred by such neglect.

(Para 17)

(I) Trade and Merchandise Marks Act (1958), Section 56 — Power to rectify is discretionary — Order allowing or refusing rectification — Appeal against — No interference when discretion is properly exercised.

Mr. S. T. Desai, Senior Advocate (Mr. Naunit Lal, Advocate, with him), for Appellants; Mr. C. B. Agarwala, Senior Advocate (M/s. K. P. Gupta and R. C. Chadha, Advocates, with him), for Respondent No. 1 (In both the Appeals).

SHELAT, J.:— These two appeals, under certificate, are directed against the common judgment and order of the High Court of Punjab, dated February 25, 1965, passed in four Letters Patent appeals filed by the two appellants-companies and the respondent-company against the judgment and order of a learned Single Judge of the High Court.

2. The said appeals were the outcome of two applications filed in the High Court under Section 111 of the Trade and Merchandise Marks Act, XLIII of 1958 (referred to hereinafter as the Act) for rectification of the register in respect of two registered Trade Marks, Nos. 161543 and 161544, registered on November 20, 1953 in respect of cycle bells manufactured by the respondent-company. Registered Trade Mark No. 161543 was the numeral '50' and Trade Mark No. 161544 was the figure 'Fifty'.

3. The two appellants companies carry on business in Kapurthala in Punjab. One of them the National Bell Co. Ltd., claimed to be manufacturing bells with numerals '33', '50', '51' and '40' inscribed on them since 1957, and the other M/s. Gupta Industrial Corporation since 1947 with numerals, '20', '50' and '60' inscribed on cycle bells manufactured by it. The two applications for rectification arose out of suit filed in the District Court, Lucknow by the respondent-company against the two appellant companies on the ground of infringement of its said registered trade marks the numeral '50' and the figure 'Fifty'. On April 24, 1961 the District Court stayed the said suits at the instance of the appellant companies giving them time for filing the said rectification applications in the High Court.

4. The grounds alleged in the applications were (1) that the numerals

'50' and the word 'Fifty' were common to the trade at the time of the original registration and were therefore not distinctive of the bells manufactured by the respondent-company, (2) that many other manufacturers in the market were using the numeral '50' and word 'Fifty' on or in relation to cycle bells, and therefore, the distinctiveness of the said marks in relation to the bells manufactured by the respondent-company, if any, had been lost, (3) that the respondent-company did not get the registration of these marks with any bona fide intention of using them in relation to their cycle bells and that in fact there had been no bona fide use of the said trade marks in relation to their goods before the date of the applications. They also alleged that the respondent-company had fraudulently declared at the time of registration that they were the originators or proprietors of the said two marks '50' and 'Fifty'. Both sides led evidence, oral and documentary, the latter including several price-lists from the possession of some of the dealers in cycle spare parts.

5. The learned Single Judge, who in the first instance tried the applications, found on a consideration of the evidence that cycle bells with different numerals and in particular the numeral '50' were being sold in the market before the respondent-company put its cycle bells with the numeral '50' and the figure 'Fifty' inscribed on them in the market and continued to be sold right upto 1952 when import of foreign manufactured cycle bells was prohibited, and that despite such prohibition those cycle bells were being sold in the market as late as 1958, presumably from old stocks still lingering in the market, though not from any new imported stock. The learned Single Judge also found that there was no evidence of the original registration having been fraudulently obtained by the respondent-company, that there was no averment by the appellant companies that Lucas or any other concern had obtained registration of any mark either of the numeral '50' or the figure 'Fifty', and that therefore, Clause (a) of Section 32 did not apply. He further found that Clause (b) of Section 32 also did not apply. He held, however, that the trade mark, namely, the numeral '50' was not at the commencement of the proceedings distinctive of the goods of the respondent-company as (a) numerals are prima facie not distinctive except in the case of textile goods as recognised by Part III of the Trade and Merchandise Marks Rules, 1959, and (b) that the numeral '50' was being commonly used by several dealers and manufacturers subsequent to the registration thereof by the respondent-company, and that therefore, the registered trade mark, the numeral '50' was hit by Clause (c) of Section 32. So far as the trade mark of the figure 'Fifty' was concerned, he held that there was no evidence that it was used by other parties either prior to or after the registration thereof by the respondent-company and in that view declined to rectify or expunge the trade mark 'Fifty' as seven years had already elapsed by the time the rectification proceedings were launched and could not, therefore, be challenged on the ground of absence of distinctiveness as laid down in Section 32. The learned Single Judge, on the basis of his aforesaid conclusions, cancelled the trade mark No. 161543, i. e., of the numeral '50'.

6. In the appeals filed against the said judgment the Division Bench of the High Court held (1) that though the use of the numeral '50' in relation to cycle bells dated back at least 30 years as in the case of Lucas and certain other foreign concerns, the imports of such goods stopped from about 1952, though some bells were being sold till 1958 presumably from the remaining previous stock, (2) that the numeral '50' in connection with those foreign made bells was never intended as a trade mark but was used only as an indication of the type or quality, and (3) that statements Exs. R-2, R-3 and R-4 produced by the respondent-company showed that sales of its bells with the trade marks '50', and 'Fifty' inscribed on them had risen from the value of Rs. 19,644 in 1949-50 to Rs. 14.83 lacs in 1961-62. The Division Bench agreed with the Trial Judge. Clause (a) of Section 32 did not apply as there was no question of the original registration having been fraudulently procured in 1953. It also held that the trade marks in question could not be cancelled merely on the ground that if their registration had been opposed they would not have been registered, and that therefore, the question for determination was whether it was liable to cancellation in view of Section 32 (c), which lays down that the section would not apply in cases where the trade mark in question was not distinctive at the commencement of the proceedings. According to the Division Bench, the words "commencement of proceedings" in Clause (c) of Section 32 mean the commencement of the infringement suits filed by the respondent-company as the proceedings for cancellation were the offshoots arising from those suits, that therefore, the situation in respect of Sec. 32 (c) had to be assessed in the light of the state of affairs existing in 1959. According to the Division Bench, the earliest use of the mark '50' by any concern other than Lucas and other foreign manufacturers was in 1953 by M/s Indian Union Manufacturers Ltd. The respondent-company, however, had filed a suit against that company in 1954 which resulted in a compromise dated February 5, 1955 whereunder the said company recognized the exclusive right of the respondent-company to the use of the words 'Fifty', 'Thirty' and the numerals '50' and '30', while the respondent-company recognised the right of the said company to the exclusive use of the words and numerals 'Thirty one', 'Forty one' and 'Fifty one' and '31' '41' and '51' that the respondent-company had also in 1955 similarly taken action against K. R. Berry & Co. of Julludhur for use by that company of the mark 'Five 50'. The suit, however, had to be withdrawn in 1958 on account of lack of jurisdiction of the Banaras Court where it was filed, though no fresh suit was filed against that company, the respondent-company had opposed an application by that company for registration of the mark 'Five Fifty' before the Registrar and that application was then pending in 1962, and lastly, that the respondent-company had filed in 1959 the two suits against the appellant companies out of which these rectification proceedings arose. The Division Bench held that though there was some evidence of the use of the numeral '50' by certain other concerns after 1953, no importance could be attached to such breaches as there was hardly any evidence as to when the infringers started manufacturing and the extent of their manufacture and sales, and that the correct principle applicable in such cases was that a few unchallenged, scattered infringements by a number of traders did not render a registered trade mark common. As regard the earlier use of the 'Fifty' and the numeral '50' by Lucas and other foreign concerns, the Division Bench held that they were not the registered trade marks of those companies and that those concerns had used those marks as merely type marks. Though the idea of using '50' and 'Fifty' was not the original idea of the respondent-company when it obtained registration in 1953, the foreign concerns had ceased importing the goods and though sales of these bells continued until 1958, such sales were from the stock still remaining unsold. Such sales could not be in any appreciable bulk. Even if the idea of using the two marks might have been conceived by the respondent-company from the marks used by Lucas and other foreign concerns, there was no question of any piracy or infringement of those marks as the respondent-company was the first to convert what were originally type marks into registered trade marks. Lastly, it held that the statements of sales produced by the respondent-company demonstrated that its sales had been steadily increasing and that some concerns, finding the use by the respondent-company of its marks '50' and 'Fifty' highly successful, had sought in recent years to take advantage of the popularity of the cycle bells of respondent-company by imitating its marks. This fact, however, could not mean that either in 1959 when the respondent-company filed the suits or in 1961 when rectification proceedings commenced, the marks had ceased to be distinctive in relation to the goods of the respondent-company or were, therefore, liable to cancellation under Section 56 by reason of Clause (c) of Section 32. Accordingly, the Division Bench allowed the respondent-company appeals and set aside the order of the learned Single Judge cancelling the registration of its trade mark No. 161543 in respect of the numeral '50' and dismissed the appeals of the appellant companies.

7. Mr. S. T. Desai for the appellant companies contended that the two trade marks in question were liable to cancellation on the grounds that (1) they were common and not distinctive at the date of their registration, and therefore, ought never to have been registered, (2) that in any event, the numeral '50' is prima facie not distinctive unless shown to be of such extensive use as to make it distinctive, (3) that there was clear evidence that the respondent-company had imitated the use of these marks by Lucas and other manufacturers, and that therefore, these marks would be disentitled to protection in a court of law, and (4) that the said marks were not, at the commencement of the proceedings distinctive, that is, adapted to distinguish the goods of the respondent-company. Mr. Agarwala, on the other hand, argued that, (1) the two marks having been registered in 1953 and seven years since then having elapsed at the commencement of these proceedings, the question whether they were distinctive at the time of registration was not open to dispute, (2) that that being so, there was no question of any alleged piracy by the respondent-company of the marks of Lucas and other concerns, and therefore, the marks could not be said to be disentitled to protection by a Court, (3) that the marks had not lost their distinctiveness at the dates of these proceedings under Section 56 and (4) that the Letters Patent Bench was, therefore, justified in dismissing these proceedings by the appellant companies.

8. A mark under Section 2 (j) includes a word, letter or numeral or any combination thereof. A trade mark, as defined in Section 2 (v) means in relation to Chapter X (i. e., for offences and penalties provided in that chapter) a registered trade mark or a mark used in relation to the goods for the purpose of indicating or so as to indicate a connection in the course of trade between the goods and some person having the right of proprietor to use the mark, and in relation to the other provisions of the Act a mark used or proposed to be used in relation to the goods for the purpose of indicating or so as to indicate a connection in the course of trade between the goods and some person having the right, either as proprietor or as registered user, to use the mark and includes a certification trade mark registered as such under the provisions of Chapter VIII. Under Sec. 9, a trade mark is not registrable in Part A of the register unless it contains on (or?) consists of at least one of the essential particulars mentioned therein. One of these particulars is "any other distinctive mark". Clause (3) of Section 9 defines the expression "distinctive" in relation to the goods in respect of which a trade mark is proposed to be registered, as meaning "adapted to distinguish goods with which the proprietor of the trade mark is or may be connected in the course of trade from goods in the case of which no such connection subsists either generally or, where the trade mark is proposed to be registered subject to limitations, in relation to use within the extent of the registration". In determining whether a trade mark is distinctive, regard is to be had whether it is inherently distinctive or is inherently capable of distinguishing and by reason of its user or any other circumstances it is in fact adapted to distinguish or is capable of distinguishing the goods. Section 11 prohibits certain trade marks from being registered. These are marks the use of which would be likely to deceive or cause confusions, or the use of which would be contrary to any law or which comprises or contains scandalous or obscene matters or any matter likely to hurt the religious susceptibilities of any class or section of the citizens, or "(e) which would otherwise be disentitled to protection in a Court". On registration of a trade mark, the registered proprietor gets under Section 28 the exclusive right to the use of such trade marks in relation to the goods in respect of which the trade mark is registered and to obtain relief in respect of any infringement of such trade mark. Under S. 31, registration is prima facie evidence of its validity. The object of the section is obviously to facilitate proof of title by a plaintiff suing for infringement of his trade mark. He has only to produce the certificate of registration of his trade mark and that would be prima facie evidence of his title. Such registration is prima facie evidence also in rectification applications under Section 56 which means that the onus of proof is on the person making such application. Being prima facie evidence, the evidence afforded by the registration may be rebutted, but in view of Section 32 that can be done if seven years have not elapsed since the original registration. Even where such rebuttal is possible, i. e., where seven years have not elapsed, and it is shown that the mark in question was not registrable under Section 9 as no evidence of distinctiveness was submitted to the Registrar, the registration would not be invalid if it is proved that the trade mark had been so used by the registered proprietor or his predecessor-in-interest as to have become distinctive at the date of registration.

9. Section 32, with which we are immediately concerned, read as follows:—

"Subject to the provisions of Section 35 and Section 46, in all legal proceedings relating to a trade mark registered in Part A of the Register (including applications under Sec. 56), the original registration of the trade mark shall, after the expiration of seven years from the date of such registration, be taken to be valid in all respects unless it is proved—

(a) that the original registration was obtained by fraud; or

(b) that the trade mark was registered in contravention of the provisions of Section 11 or offends against the provisions of that section on the date of commencement of the proceedings; or

(c) that the trade mark was not, at the commencement of the proceedings, distinctive of the goods of the registered proprietor."

We are not concerned with Clause (a) as no such case was even averred in the applications as pointed out both by the Trial Judge and the Division Bench. As regards Clause (b), it will be at once noticed that the clause relates to facts existing both at the time of and after registration. If a mark at the time of registration was such that it was likely to deceive or cause confusion or its use would be contrary to any law or contained or consisted of scandalous or obscene matters or matter likely to hurt religious susceptibilities or which would otherwise be disentitled to protection of a Court, and therefore, was under Section 11 prohibited from being registered, Clause (b) would apply, and the rule as to conclusiveness of the validity of the registration cannot be invoked. That would also be so, if the trade mark at the date of the rectification proceedings was such as to offend against the provisions of Section 11. But, unlike Clause (b), Clause (c) relates to facts which are post-registration facts, existing at the date of the commencement of the proceedings. If the trade mark at such date is not distinctive in relation to the goods of the registered proprietor, the rule as to conclusiveness enunciated in Section 32 again would not apply. It would seem that the word 'distinctive' in Clause (c) is presumably used in the same sense in which it is defined in Section 9 (3), as the definition of the expression therein commences with the words "for the purposes of this Act" and not the words "for the purposes of this section", the intention of the legislature, thus, being to give uniform meaning to that expression all throughout the Act. Section 56 deals with the power to cancel or vary registration and to rectify the register. Sub-section (2) thereof confers a right to any person "aggrieved" by an entry made in the register without sufficient cause or by an entry wrongly remaining in the register to apply to the tribunal for expunging or varying such an entry. The expression "aggrieved person" has received liberal construction from the Courts and includes a person who has, before registration, used the trade mark in question as also a person against whom an infringement action is taken or threatened by the registered proprietor of such a trade mark. The words "without sufficient cause" in the section have clearly relation to the time of the original registration. Therefore, a person can apply for cancellation on the ground that the trade mark in question was not at the date of the commencement of the proceedings distinctive in the sense of Section 9 (3). The burden of proof, however, in such a case is as aforesaid, on the applicant applying under Section 56.

10. The contention was that numerals, such as '50', are prima facie not considered distinctive and to be registrable there must be evidence of extensive use. The contention was sought to be fortified by showing that contrary to the practice in England, Rules 139 and 140 of the Rules of 1959 permit numerals to be registered as trade marks only in the case of textile goods. But that is permitted on account of a long standing practice in that particular trade of using numerals with a view to distinguish goods of a particular manufacturer or a particular type or quality. It will, however, be noticed that although in the 8th edition of Kerly on Trade Marks, page 135, it was stated that numerals are considered to be prima facie not distinctive and registrable only upon proof of their extensive use, the 9th edition of the same work does not reproduce that passage. On the contrary, at p. 284, the learned editor states that numerals are capable of registration and that such marks exist. For this change the learned editor relies on the registered trade mark "4711", for cau-de-Cologne, which was the subject-matter of dispute in Reuter v. Mulhens, 1954 Ch 50. In that case, however, no contention was raised as to whether the trade mark consisting of a numeral could be distinctive or not and the Court, therefore, was not called upon to decide such a point. But the parties appear to have proceeded on the assumption that the numeral "4711" was validly registered as a trade mark for that particular brand of cau-de-Cologne by reason of its having gained distinctiveness by extensive use. It is, therefore not an inflexible rule and that was also conceded by Mr. Desai, that a mark consisting of a numeral is necessarily not distinctive and is not registrable, except (except?) only in the case of textile goods, in spite of proof of extensive use.

11. Section 32 in clear terms provides that the original registration of a trade mark, after expiry of seven years from the date of its registration, shall be taken to be valid in all respects in all legal proceedings including those under Section 56, except in the three categories of cases mentioned therein. It follows, therefore, that no objection that the trade mark in question was not distinctive and therefore was not registrable under Section 9 can be entertained if such an objection is raised after seven years have lapsed since the date of its registration as in the present case, nor can an objection be entertained that no proof of distinctiveness was adduced or insisted upon at the time of the original registration. This is clear also from the fact that the three exceptions set out in Section 32 against conclusiveness as to the validity of the registration relate to, (1) fraud, (2) contravention of Section 11, and (3) absence of distinctiveness at the commencement of the proceedings in question and not at the time of registration. No contention, therefore, can be raised that the trade marks '50' and

'Fifty' were not distinctive, i. e., adapted to distinguish the cycle bells of the respondent-company at the date of the registration, and therefore, were not registrable as provided by Section 9, Paine & Co. v. Daniells & Sons' Breweries Ltd., (1893) 10 RPC 21" at page 232.

12. But the argument was that the appellant companies were entitled to show under Clauses (b) and (c) in Section 32, (1) that these marks were registered in contravention of Sec. 11; or that they offended against the provisions of that section on the date of the commencement of these proceedings, and (2) that they were not distinctive at the date of the commencement of these proceedings.

13. Section 11, as already noticed, does not, as Section 9 does, lay down the requisites for registration, but lays down prohibition against certain marks from being registered. Clauses (b), (c) and (d) of Section 11 obviously do not apply in the present case but reliance was placed on Cls. (a) and (e), i. e., that the use of these trade marks would be likely to deceive or cause confusion and that they were such that they were otherwise entitled to protection in a court. The burden of proof being on the appellant companies, the question is: has that burden been satisfactorily discharged? The evidence relied on by them was that of dealers in cycle spare parts including bells, certain price-lists produced through them and the two representatives of the two appellant companies. That evidence, no doubt, shows, (1) that for a number of years prior to 1952 bells manufactured by Lucas and certain other foreign concerns with various numerals such as '30', '50' and '61' inscribed either on the bells or on their cartons were in the market, (2) that even after 1952 bells with inscriptions thereon, such as 'Berry 50', 'National 50' manufactured by one of the appellant companies, 'Five 50', 'Padam 50' 'Balco 50' etc., were sold in the market, (3) that Gupta Industrial Corporation, one of the appellant companies, claimed to have started the manufacture of bells since 1947, calling the "Gupta 50" and the National Bell Company likewise began to produce bells, calling them "National 50" since 1957. But both the learned Single Judge and the Division Bench clearly found, (i) that there was no evidence of any fraud having been committed by the respondent-company at the time of the registration; (2) that there was no averment by the appellant companies, much less any evidence that Lucas or any other foreign concerns had obtained registration of trade marks either of the numeral '50' or the word 'Fifty', that the indication, on the contrary, was that those concerns used the different numerals, '30', '61' '50' etc., for distinguishing one type of bell from the other manufactured by them; and (3) that about a year prior to the registration of the trade marks in question in 1953 foreign bells were prohibited from being imported. Obviously, therefore, the evidence as to purchases and sales by the dealers examined by the appellant companies related to bells which had remained unsold from out of the stock earlier imported. As regards the bells called "Gupta 50" said to have been manufactured by one of the appellant companies since 1947, no evidence was led to show either the extent of manufacture or sale between 1947 and 1953 or thereafter from which the High Court could be asked to draw any inference as to the likelihood of deception or confusion. Though there was some evidence that foreign made bells such as Lucas "30", "50" and "61" were being sold as late as 1958, such sales must have been few and far between as they could only be from the remaining stock out of the earlier imports. Such sales could hardly be considered as evidence showing a likelihood of confusion or deception as contemplated by Sec. 11 (a). In fact, the evidence was that purchasers used to call those bells not by their numerals but simply as Lucas' bells and those manufactured by the respondent company as "Asia bells", and in some cases "Asia 50". As against the voluminous sales by the respondent-company shown by the statements filed by it for the years 1949-50 to 1961-62, there was no such corresponding evidence indicating the sales of other bells with numerals, such as "50" inscribed on them from which any likelihood of confusion or deception could be deduced. Regarding deception, there was indeed no evidence whatsoever in that regard. There was no question of piracy also on the part of the respondent-company as argued by counsel as there was nothing to show that Lucas or any other foreign concerns used this numeral except for distinguishing one type of bell from another manufactured by them. In our view, Cl. (a) of Sec. 11, therefore, is clearly not attracted.

14. The next question is whether the trade mark "50" or "Fifty" is one which would otherwise be disentitled to protection in a Court as laid down in cl. (e) of Section 11 so as to attract cl. (b) of Section 32. While construing cl. (e) of Section 11, it is necessary to repeat that it deals with prohibition and not with requisites of registration. Therefore, although a mark cannot be registered for instance, because it is not distinctive as provided by Section 9, such a mark is not for that reason only one the registration of which is prohibited by Section 11. The Section lays down positive objection to registration and not to mere lack of qualification. This is clear from cl. (e) of Section 11, which uses the expression "disentitled to protection", and not the expression "not entitled to protection." The former contemplates some illegal or other disentanglement inherent in the mark itself. (See Kerly, 9th ed. 344).

15. In Imperial Tobacco Co., Ltd. v. De Pasquali & Co., (1918) 35 RPC 185 the appellant company was the proprietor of two trade marks consisting of "Regimental Cigarettes" and "Regimental Tobacco". The company brought an action for infringement of its trade marks and for passing off against the respondent who sold cigarettes under the name of "Pasquali's the Regiment" in packets and boxes decorated with regimental crests. The respondent moved to have the trade marks expunged contending that the word "regimental" was only a laudatory adjective in common use. It was proved that for many years it had been the practice of regiments to have their crests stamped on their mess cigarettes which were known as "Regimental Cigarettes". The appellant company, on the other hand, contended that under Section 41 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905 (equivalent to Sec. 32 of our Act) their trade mark could not be expunged and that Section 11 (equivalent also to our Section 11) read in conjunction with Section 41 was not relevant to the question whether or not a trade mark was registrable. The Trial Court held against the appellant company stating that if the appellant company's contention was correct, the combined effect of Sections 11 and 41 would be to perpetuate as distinctive a trade mark that was incapable of being distinctive and that such a contention was erroneous. On appeal, the Court of Appeal reversed the judgment and held that Section 11 was a qualification of Section 9, that Sections 11 and 41 must be construed together, that the mere fact that a mark did not comply with the requisites of Section 9 (i. e., not being distinctive and therefore not registrable) did not bring it within Section 11, that the marks did not offend against Section 11 and that under Section 41 their registration was valid. At page 203 of the Report, Swinfen Eady, M. R. observed that Section 11 contained a prohibition as to what it shall not be lawful to register and it followed upon Section 9 which provided for the essentials of trade mark. Section 9 laid down what a registrable trade mark must contain and unless it contained one or the other requisites there set out, it was not registrable and it was only registrable trade marks which were entitled to registration. But even if a mark were to fall within Section 9, that alone was not necessarily sufficient to entitle it to registration because it might offend against Section 11. Section 11, being a qualification of Section 9 and being a provision laying down a prohibition, it did not contemplate any enquiry on the question whether the trade mark complied with one or the other requisites enumerated in Section 9, e. g., whether it had the quality of being distinctive or not. Dealing with Section 41, he observed that it formed a new departure in dealing with trade marks and differed widely from the earlier Acts. The present section expressly enacted that the original registration shall, after a lapse of seven years be taken to be valid in all respects, that is to say, whether the mark originally consisted of or contained one or the other essential proofs, or not, that cannot be enquired into after the lapse of seven years. It had to be taken to be valid in all respects and what had to be taken to be valid in all respects was the registration of the trade mark unless it offended against the provisions of Section 11. That section was a prohibitive section as to a matter which was disentitled to protection in a Court, that is, it was intended to exclude from registration what would otherwise be included or covered under Section 9. It did not extend to a mark disentitled to protection because originally not containing one of the essential particulars. It applied to a different set of circumstances such as that its use was likely to deceive or confuse etc. The words "disentitled to protection", he further observed, were not equivalent to "not entitled to protection", which was the expression used in the earlier Acts. In other words, they did not mean that a trade mark was not entitled to protection because it ought not originally to have been registered as a valid trade mark falling within Section 9.

16. The construction of Cl. (e) of Section 11 contended for on behalf of the appellant companies is, therefore, not correct. The true construction of Clause (e) is that even assuming that the trade marks in question were not distinctive and for that reason not registrable as not falling within Section 9, that fact by itself would not mean that they became disentitled to the protection in a Court. That being the true import of Section 11 (e), the rule as to conclusiveness of the validity of registration embodied in Section 32 applies even to those cases where if full facts had been ascertained at the time of the registration that registration would not have been allowed provided of course that it does not offend against the provisions of Section 11, i. e., by there being a likelihood of deception or confusion or its being contrary to any law or containing obscene matter etc., or which would otherwise, i. e., in addition to the matters in Clauses (a) to (d) in Section 11 be disentitled to protection in a Court. Consequently, the appellant companies cannot bring their case for cancellation of the trade marks in question under Cl. (b) of Section 32.

17. There then remains the question whether Clause (c) of Section 32 applies, i. e., that the trade marks were not at the commencement of the proceedings distinctive of the goods of the respondent company. The distinctiveness of the trade mark in relation to the goods of a registered proprietor of such a trade mark may be lost in a variety of ways, e. g., by the goods not being capable of being distinguished as the goods of such a proprietor or by extensive piracy so that the marks become publici juris. The principle underlying Clause (c) of Section 32 is that the property in a trade mark exists so long as it continues to be distinctive of the goods of the registered proprietor in the eyes of the public or a section of the public. If the proprietor is not in a position to use the mark to distinguish his goods from those of others or has abandoned it or the mark has become so common in the market that it has ceased to connect him with his goods, there would hardly be any justification in retaining it on the register. The progressive increase in the sales of 'Asia Fifty' and 'Asia 50' bells from 1949-50 and onwards together with the evidence of witnesses examined by the respondent company shows that the said trade marks distinguished the goods of the respondent company from those of other manufacturers in the field. Under Section 32 (c) the marks have to be distinctive at the commencement of the proceedings. Prima facie, the expression "commencement of the proceedings" would mean the commencement of proceedings in which the question as to the conclusive character of the registration, as laid down in Section 32, arises. Such a question may arise in a suit for infringement of the trade mark in which the registered proprietor may rely on Section 32 to prove his title to the registered trade mark as also in rectification proceedings filed as a result of such a suit or otherwise, and the period of seven years would have to be calculated according to the particular proceedings in which the conclusive nature of the validity of registration is relied on. In the present case, whether the crucial date for the purpose of Section 32 (c) is taken to be 1959 when the suits were filed or 1961 when the appellant companies took out the rectification proceedings it makes no difference as it is not possible from the evidence on record to say that the trade marks in question were not or had ceased to be distinctive. The indication, on the contrary, is that they were distinctive. That is to be found from the zeal with which the respondent company tried to maintain its right in them. The evidence shows that when the respondent company found in 1954 that M/s. Indian Union Manufacturers Ltd., Calcutta had been inscribing the word

'Fifty' on its bells, it at once filed an infringement action. The action ended in a compromise by which the said company acknowledged the respondent company's rights in its trade marks of 'Fifty' and '50'. Again, when the attention of the respondent company was drawn to an advertisement "Five 50", it addressed a notice to the manufacturers of those bells. The case of the respondent company was that Gupta Industrial Corporation started using the word 'Fifty' on its bells in 1958 and not in 1948 as contended by Mr. Desai. In the absence of any evidence as to the extent of manufacture and sale of those bells it would not be possible to say with any certainty that the respondent company did not come to know about it till 1958, and therefore, presumed that Gupta Corporation had started using the word 'Fifty' on its bells in that year. According to the appellant National Bell Co., it went into production only in 1957 and in 1959 the respondent company commenced action against it. A similar notice of infringement followed by a suit was also given to M/s. Berry and Co., but the suit became infructuous on account of lack of the jurisdiction of the Court of Banaras where it was filed. This evidence negatives any abandonment of trade marks or letting infringements go unchallenged or misleading the other manufacturers that the respondent company would not interfere if they were to use the same marks. Rights in a mark can, of course be abandoned by its owner but so long as he remains the registered proprietor of the mark and carries on the business to which the mark is attached, a plea of abandonment is difficult to sustain. It would, however, be a different matter if it is shown that there were repeated, undisturbed infringements. The evidence in the present case does not show that there were repeated breaches which went unchallenged though known to the proprietor. Mere neglect to proceed does not necessarily constitute abandonment if it is in respect of infringements which are not sufficient to affect the distinctiveness of the mark even if the proprietor is aware of them [See Re. Farina, (1879) 27 WR 456]. Where neglect to challenge infringement is alleged, the character and extent of the trade of the infringers and their position have to be reckoned in considering whether the registered proprietor is barred by such neglect. [See Rowland v. Mitchell, (1897) 14 RPC 37]. The plea of common use must fail, for, to establish it the use by other persons should be substantial. Though evidence was produced by the appellant companies to show that there were other bells in the market with 'Fifty' or '50' inscribed on them, no evidence was led to show that the use of the word 'Fifty' or the numeral '50' was substantial. In these circumstances, it is impossible to sustain the contention founded on Clause (c) of Section 32.

18. Under Section 56, the power to rectify is undoubtedly discretionary. Where such discretion has been properly exercised, a court of appeal would refuse to interfere. In the present case, however, the Trial Court did not appreciate the principle embodied in Sections 32 and 11, with the result that the Division Bench was justified in interfering with the discretion exercised by the Trial Court.

19. In our view, the contentions urged on behalf of the appellant companies cannot be sustained and consequently the two appeals fail and are dismissed with costs. There will be one hearing fee.

Appeals dismissed.

Standing timber may ordinarily not be regarded as "goods" but by inclusive definition given in Section 2 (7), Sale of Goods Act, things which are attached to the land may be the subject matter of contract of sale provided that under the terms of the contract of sale they are severed before sale or under the contract of sale. Since it was expressly provided that the timber agreed to be sold shall be severed under the contract of sale, the timber was "goods" within meaning of Section 2 (7), Sale of Goods Act and the expression 'Sale of goods' in Entry 54, List II of Schedule VII having the same meaning as that expression has in the Sale of Goods Act, sale of timber agreed to be severed under the terms of the contract may be regarded as sale of goods. Mr. N. S. Bindra, Sr. Advocate, (Mr. S. P. Nayar, Advocate with him), for Petitioners; Mr. A. G. Ratnaparkhi, Advocate, for Respondent.

SHAH, J.: — Appeal No. 1878 of 1967 was ordered to be dismissed by this Court on July 17, 1969. The Court held that the sale of standing trees is not sale of goods chargeable to sales tax under the Bombay Sales Tax Act, 1959.

2. A petition for review of Judgment has been filed by the State contending that after the judgment of the High Court and before the appeal was heard, the Bombay Sales Tax Act, 1959 was amended by the Maharashtra Act 15 of 1967 with retrospective operation, and by the amendment "standing timber" was included in the definition of goods, but counsel for the State failed to invite the attention of the Court to that Act. Since the judgment of this Court it is claimed suffers from an error apparent from the face of the record, we have granted review of judgment.

3. The expression "goods" was defined in Section 2 (13) of the Bombay Sales Tax Act, 1959. By Maharashtra Act, 15 of 1967 by Section 2 the definition of "goods" was altered by providing that:

"In Section 2 of the Bombay Sales Tax Act, 1959 * * * in Clause (13), after the words "and commodities" the following shall be, and shall be deemed always to have been, added, namely:—

"and all standing timber which is agreed to be severed before sale or under the contract of sale".

The definition was retrospective in operation and the expression "goods" included at all relevant times standing timber agreed to be severed before sale or under the contract of sale.

4. The expression "sale of goods" in Entry 54, List II of Sch. VII of the Constitution has the same connotation as it has in the Sale of Goods Act, 1930. This Court in State of Madras v. Gannon Dunkerley and Co. (Madras) Ltd., (1959) SCR 379 = (AIR 1958 SC 560) observed that the expression "sale of goods" was, at the time when the Government of India Act, 1935, was enacted, a term of well-recognised legal import in the general law relating to sale of goods and in the legislative practice relating to that topic and must be interpreted in Entry 48 in List II in Sch. VII of the Act as having the same meaning as in the Sale of Goods Act, 1930: see also Banarsi Das Bhanot v. State of Madhya Pradesh, 1959 SCR 427 = (AIR 1958 SC 909). The expression "sale of goods" in Entry 54 in List II of Sch. VII of the Constitution has also the same meaning as that expression had in Entry 48 in List II of the Government of India Act, 1935. The State Legislature may not therefore extend the import of the expression "sale of goods" so as to impose liability for tax on transactions which are not sales of goods within the meaning of the Sale of Goods Act.

5. By Article 366 (12) of the Constitution the expression "goods" is defined as inclusive of "all materials, commodities and articles." That is, however an inclusive definition and does not throw much light on the meaning of the expression "goods." But the definition of "goods" in the Sale of Goods Act, 1930, as meaning "every kind of moveable property other than actionable claims and money; and includes stock and shares, growing crops, grass, and things attached to or forming part of the land which are agreed to be severed before sale or under the contract of sale". Standing timber may ordinarily not be regarded as "goods", but by the inclusive definition given in Section 2 (7) of the Sale of Goods Act things which are attached to the land may be the subject-matter of contract of sale provided that under the terms of the contract they are to be severed before sale or under the contract of sale.

6. In the present case it was expressly provided that the timber agreed to be sold shall be severed under the contract of sale. The timber was therefore "goods" within the meaning of Section 2 (7) of the Sale of Goods Act and the expression "sale of goods" in the Constitution in Entry 54 List II having the same meaning as that expression has in the Sale of Goods Act, sale of timber agreed to be severed under the terms of the contract may be regarded as sale of goods.

7. The appeal is allowed and the petition filed by the respondent must be dismissed. Since the State succeeds in this appeal, relying upon a statute which was passed after the Judgment of the High Court, there will be no order as to costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

Pt. Jayvant Rao and others, Appellants v. Pt. Chandrakant Rao and others, Respondents.

Civil Appeal No. 1370 of 1966, D/- 26-2-1970.

Constitution of India, Article 372 — "All the law in force" — Order dated 22-1-1938 passed by former Ruler of Kota determining nature of 'Sarola Jagir' and giving it the status of impartible estate governed by the rule of primogeniture, although in the past it had been treated as joint family property — Held Legislative and not executive.

Held, on facts and circumstances that order passed by the ruler was in exercise of his powers of laying down the law with respect to this single Jagir and was not a mere executive order. Since the law applicable to Jagir was changed for future, such order could only be made in exercise of his prerogative of laying down the law for this particular jagir specially when there was nothing to indicate that there was any recognised procedure of law-making in that State. AIR 1964 SC 1793, Applied; AIR 1964 SC 1043, Distinguished; ILR (1966) 16 Raj 497, Affirmed.

Patel, Sr. Advocate, (Mr. Janendra Lal, Advocate and Mr. B. R. Agarwala Advocate of M/s. Gagrut and Co., with him), for Respondents.

BHARGAVA, J.: — This appeal arises out of a suit for partition of properties in the family of one Lalaji Ramchandra who was the common ancestor of the parties to the suit. He had two sons, Govindraoji and Motilal alias Krishnaraoji. The plaintiffs/appellants and the non-contesting pro forma respondents are the descendants of Motilal, while the contesting respondents are the descendants of Govindraoji, the principal one being Chandrakant Rao who was defendant No. 1 in the suit. The appellants sought partition of all the family properties, including eight villages known as "the Sarola Jagir" which were situated in the erstwhile State of Kota. The trial Court dismissed the suit in its entirety, holding that none of the properties in suit was ancestral property. On appeal by the present appellants, the High Court of Rajasthan upheld the dismissal of the suit insofar as the appellants had claimed a share in the eight villages forming the Sarola Jagir, while the suit in respect of the other properties was decreed and a preliminary decree passed in respect of those properties. The appellants have come up to this Court in this appeal, by certificate granted by the High Court, against the order of the High Court refusing to grant partition of the eight villages of the Sarola Jagir.

2. In order to appreciate the point raised in this appeal, the history of this Jagir in this family may be recited briefly. Lalaji Ramchandra and his eldest son Govindraoji were awarded this Jagir by means of a Parwana, dated 8th April, 1838 issued by His Highness Maharao Ramsingh, Ruler of Kotah. It appears that the Maharao had contracted debts with the family of Lalaji Ramchandra even in the time of his ancestors and, at the relevant time, the amount of debt exceeded Rs. 9 lakhs. This debt was guaranteed by the British Government. In lieu of this debt, this Jagir, which was already being enjoyed by Lalaji Ramchandra with certain limitations, was given jointly to him and his son Govindraoji, stating that it was being conferred in perpetuity and was always to remain from sons to grandsons and was to be free from all taxes which were being exacted up to that time, such as Barar and Sewai. At the same time, Govind Raoji executed a deed of release by which he accepted the adjustment of the amount due from the Maharao against this grant of Jagir. These documents thus show that this Jagir was originally granted by Maharao Ramsingh, Ruler of Kotah, jointly in the names of Lalaji Ramchandra and his son, Govindraoji in lieu of the debt which the Maharao owed to them. Subsequently, this property was treated as property of the joint family of Lalaji Ramchandra. Motilal, the second son of Lalaji Ramchandra, was born after this grant and his name was also mutated against the Jagir villages. On the death of Govindraoji, the name of his adopted son, Ganpat Raoji, was brought in, while Motilal, the uncle, managed the property on behalf of the family. Motilal executed a will in respect of his properties including these villages, specifically stating that half of this property belonged to Ganpatraoji, while half would belong to his adopted son, Purshottam Raoji. After the death of Motilal, Ganpatraoji became the manager of the property and Purshottam Raoji's name was also entered against this property. On the death of Ganpat Raoji, the name of his eldest son Chandrakant Rao was mutated, while Purshottam Raoji, in the capacity of the eldest member of the family, started managing the property. The property thus remained in the family, being treated as joint family property and, even during the years between 1852 and 1868 when efforts were made by the Maharao of Kotah to dispossess this family, the British Government had intervened to ensure that the property remained with this family, insisting that the Maharao could only resume the Jagir on repayment of the loan in respect of which discharge had been obtained when this Jagir was conferred. The property was thus continued to be treated as joint family property until the death of Purshottam Raoji when a question arose as to the mutation of names of his descendants in his place. Chandrakant Rao desired that his name alone should be shown as the holder of this Jagir and, on 22nd October, 1937, gave a statement before the Revenue Commissioner claiming that the eldest son in the eldest branch had the right over the Jagir according to the custom and usage in Rajputana and, consequently mutation in the records should be in his name alone. A report was sent by the Revenue Commissioner and the matter was dealt with by the Maharao of Kota himself in Mehakma Khas. The order of the Maharao on that report was passed on 22nd January, 1938. By this Order, a direction was made that this Jagir, like all other Jagirs, should be given the status of an impartible estate and it should be given proper shape by being liable to render 'Chakri' and 'Subhchintki' to the Ruler. It was further ordered that the Jagir will be governed by the rule of primogeniture, so that Chandrakant Rao alone would be held to be the Jagirdar. As a result, all these eight villages of the Sarola Jagir came to be shown as the property of Chandrakant Rao alone.

3. The claim of the plaintiffs in this suit was that the Jagir having been joint Hindu family property, the rights of the plaintiffs, who are the successors-in-interest of Purshottam Raoji, cannot be defeated by the order of the Maharao dated 22nd January, 1938 and, consequently, the appellants together with the pro forma respondents who are also descendants of Purshottam Raoji are entitled to 1/2 share, whereas the other 1/2 share only can be claimed by the contesting defendants, including Chandrakant Rao, who are descendants of Ganpat-raoji. Both the trial Court and the High Court have held that, after the order of the Maharao of Kota dated 22nd January, 1938, this Jagir came to be governed by the rule of primogeniture, with the result that Chandrakant Rao alone was the owner of this property, while all other members of the family could only claim maintenance out of this property. Consequently, the claim of the appellants for a share in these villages on partition was negatived. It is the correctness of this decision that has been challenged before us.

4. Since, in this case, no effort was made on behalf of the respondents to contest the correctness of the finding given by the High Court that all these villages were joint family property and were treated as such right up to the year 1937 when Purshottam Raoji died, we need not enter into the details of the evidence on the basis of which this finding has been recorded. The question that falls for decision is whether the Maharao of Kota, by his Order dated 22nd January, 1938, could validly change the nature of the property, make it impartible and governed by the rule of primogeniture when the property was already joint family property. In deciding this question, the crucial point is that the Maharao of Kota was an independent and sovereign Ruler whose orders in his State were law. He had absolute power to make any orders, and the Order dated 22nd January, 1938 has, therefore to be given the force of law which, when it was passed, could not be challenged as invalid.

Counsel for the appellants, however, urged that all orders passed by an independent and sovereign Ruler do not have the force of law. It is only those orders which purport to lay down a law for the State which cannot be challenged and which would remain in force even after the merger of the Kota State in India and after the enforcement of the Constitution under Article 372 of the Constitution. His submission was that, when passing the Order dated 22nd January, 1938, the Ruler was only exercising executive powers of directing mutation of names and was not exercising any legislative powers. The nature of the Order passed by him, however, shows that this submission cannot be accepted. No doubt that Order was made on a report which was put up before the Maharao for deciding who should be held to be the owner of the Jagir when Purshottam Raoji died. The Order shows that the Maharao took notice of the fact that the Sanad had been granted in the name of Lalaji Ramchandra and his eldest son Govind Rao on executing a deed of release in respect of the debt, but it added that, when the unpaid debt was changed in the form of a Jagir and no special condition was laid down regarding it and the name of only the eldest son was written in the 'Sanad' though another brother was present there, it has to be held that the Jagir was intended to be given on the same rules on which the other Jagirs were granted. The Order then proceeds to take notice of the fact that, though the mutation should have been in the name of Chandrakant after the death of Ganpat Rao, a practice had developed of entering more than one person as the holders of this Jagir. It appears that, in order to give effect to the original intention that this Jagir should be governed by the same rules as all other Jagirs, the Maharao proceeded to lay down that this Jagir should also be impartible and should be held by the eldest member of the family in the eldest branch. The Ruler considered it desirable to make this Order, because it was envisaged that, if the entire Jagir was distributed amongst all the members of the family, then even the name of 'Thikana' would disappear. It was considered desirable that this Jagir should be governed according to the custom of the States in Rajputana including Kota State, under which the eldest son of the senior branch alone was entitled to hold the property. Thereafter, the Maharao proceeded to lay down that this Jagir should be equated with other Jagirs by making a direction that the holders of this Jagir should also render 'Chakri' and should continue to do 'Subhchintki'. Having made this direction, the Ruler then held that, since this 'Thikana' was being given proper shape, its custom and status must be similar to that of all other Jagirdars in the State. These directions given by the Ruler clearly show that, though the proceedings came to him on the basis of a report for directions as to the mutation entry to be made on the death of Pursnotam Rao, he proceeded to lay down the principles which were to govern this Jagir thereafter. The Ruler decided that this Jagir should be placed on equality with all other Jagirs in the State and should be governed by the same laws. The Order thus made was clearly an exercise of legislative power by which the Ruler was competent to lay down that, though this Jagir had in the past been joint family property, it was to be thereafter impartible property governed by the rule of primogeniture and Chandra Kant Rao as the eldest member of the senior branch was to be the sole Jagirdar. This was, therefore, a case where the Maharao exercised his powers of laying down the law with respect to this one single Jagir. It cannot be said that the Order passed by him was a mere executive order and did not result in exercise of his powers of making the law.

5. In this connection, counsel for the appellants relied on the principle laid down by this Court in Rajkumar Narsingh Pratap Singh Deo v. State of Orissa, (1964) 7 SCR 112 = (AIR 1964 SC 1793) to canvass his submission that the Maharao, in this case, was not exercising legislative powers when he passed the Order dated 22nd January, 1938. In that case, the effect of a Sanad granted by the Ruler of Dhenkanal State had to be considered and the question arose whether the Sanad could be treated as existing law within the meaning of Art. 372 of the Constitution. The Court, after taking notice of previous decisions, drew disinction between orders made by a Ruler having the force of law and orders which may be of executive nature and held:—

"The true legal position is that whenever a dispute arises as to whether an order passed by an absolute monarch represents a legislative act and continues to remain operative by virtue of Clause 4 (b) of the Order, all relevant factors must be considered before the question is answered; the nature of the order, the scope and effect of its provisions, its general setting and context, the method adopted by the Ruler in promulgating legislative as distinguished from executive orders, these and other allied matters will have to be examined before the character of the order is judicially determined."

On an application of these principles in that case, it was held that the Sanad in question could not be held to be a legislative act. In our opinion, even if these principles are applied to the case before us, it has to be held that the Order of the Maharao dated 22nd January, 1938 amounted to exercise of legislative power. As we have already indicated earlier, the very nature of the Order, which changes the law applicable to the Jagir, indicates that it was legislative act and not a mere executive order. The Maharao did not purport to lay down that the Jagir was already governed by the rule of primogeniture; what he did was to apply the rule of primogeniture to this Jagir for future. Such an order could only be made in exercise of his prerogative of laying down the law for the State. The mere fact that it was laid down for one single Jagir and was not a general law applicable to others in the State is immaterial, because it does not appear that there were any other similar Jagirs which also required alteration of the law applicable to them. There is also nothing to show that during the period of his rule, the Maharao had adopted any special procedure for promulgating the laws in his State. The manner in which the Order was passed indicates that, in this State, the Maharao considered himself competent to lay down the law at any time he liked.

6. Reliance was also placed on the decision of this Court in State of Gujarat v. Vora Fiddali Badruddin Mithibarwala, (1964) 6 SCR 461 = (AIR 1964 SC 1043), but that case, in our opinion, has no application at all. In that case, the question arose whether an agreement entered into by a Ruler had the force of law. In the case before us, there is no such question of any agreement. In dealing with that question, the Court relied on the following extract from a decision of the Court in an earlier case of Bengal Nagpur Cotton Mills Ltd. v. Board of Revenue, Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1964 SC 888.—

"It is plain that an agreement of the Ruler expressed in the shape of a contract cannot be regarded as a law. A law must follow the customary forms of law-making and must be expressed as a binding rule of conduct. There is generally an established method for the enactment of laws, and the laws, when enacted, have also a distinct form. It is not every indication of the will of the Ruler, however expressed, which amounts to a law. An indication of the will meant to bind as a rule of conduct and enacted with some formality either traditional or specially devised for the occasion, results in a law but not an agreement to which there are two parties, one of which is the Ruler".

Emphasis was laid by counsel on the views expressed in this passage that a law must follow the customary forms of law-making and must be expressed as a binding rule of conduct. In the present case, there is nothing to show that, in the State of Kota, there was any other customary form of law making. The Order of 22nd January, 1938 clearly expresses the direction of the Ruler that the Jagir must be governed by the same customary law as other Jagirs as a binding direction which was to govern the future conduct of the holders of this Jagir. The principle relied on, therefore, does not show that this Order of 22nd January, 1938 did not amount to a legislative act on the part of the Maharao.

7. Reference was also made to the decision of this Court in Major Ranjit Singh Rao Phalke v. Smt. Raja Bai Sahiba (dead) by her legal representatives & Vice Versa, Civil Appeals Nos. 982 and 983 of 1964, D/- 19-7-1967, where the Court said:—

"It is now settled law that every order of the Maharaja cannot be regarded as law, particularly those which were in violation of his own laws".

and again repeated:—

"The position today is that every order of the Ruler cannot be regarded as law but only such orders as contain some general rule of conduct and which follow a recognized procedure of law-making".

In that case, the particular order of the Ruler which was questioned had been made in contravention of one of the existing laws of the State and it was held that such an order could not be treated as law. In the case before us the position is quite different. There was no law of the Kota State which could be held to be contrary to the Order dated 22nd January, 1938. In fact, the general law governing all Jagirs in the State was the customary law under which the Jagirs were owned by the eldest member of the senior branch, and all that this Order did was to apply the same law to this Jagir also. It is true that no special procedure of law-making was adopted by the Maharao when making this Order; but that circumstance cannot change the nature of the Order specially when there is nothing to indicate that there was any recognised procedure of law-making in the Kota State at that time. In these circumstances, we hold that the High Court was quite correct in arriving at the decision that these eight villages, at the time when the suit for partition was instituted, were impartible property governed by the law of primogeniture and Chandrakant Rao respondent alone had to be treated as the owner of these villages.

8. It, however, appears that, during the pendency of the suit, Jagirs were resumed in Rajasthan including this Jagir which stood in the name of Chandrakant Rao and cash compensation was paid in respect of it. It was urged by counsel for the appellants that, even if the Jagir was impartible and governed by the rule of primogeniture, the right, which earlier vested in the members of the family when it was joint family property, would be exercisable when the Jagir was converted into cash and lost its status of impartible estate. It was, therefore, claimed that, after the Jagirs had been converted into cash under the Rajasthan Land Reforms and Resumption of Jagirs Act No. VI of 1952, the appellants should have been granted a share in the compensation received by Chandrakant Rao on the basis that this property was earlier joint Hindu family property. In the alternative, it was also urged that, even if this claim of the plaintiffs/appellants is not accepted, they would at least be entitled to claim a part of the compensation in lieu of their right of maintenance. These two aspects do not seem to have been considered by the trial Court and even the High Court in one sentence disposed of this matter by saying that, since the appellants were only entitled to maintenance, they could not claim any share in the compensation money paid under the Rajasthan Act VI of 1952. In dealing with this aspect, we are handicapped by the circumstance that the suit was instituted before this Act VI of 1952 was passed, so that there was no specific pleading in this behalf by the plaintiffs/appellants. The trial Court, therefore, ignored this aspect altogether and even the High Court did not take into account the effect of Act VI of 1952 in the two aspects which have been mentioned by us above. Since, however, this is an appeal against a preliminary decree in the suit and the suit is still to continue in the trial Court, we think it appropriate to direct that these questions should be properly raised in the trial Court by amendment of the pleadings in the plaint, if necessary, and should be considered and decided by that Court. It will be for that Court to give a fresh decision whether the appellants are entitled to claim a share in the compensation money received in lieu of these eight villages under Rajasthan Act VI of 1952.

9. The result is that this appeal is dismissed, subject to the modification that the case will go back to the trial Court for deciding the question whether the plaintiffs/appellants can claim a share in the compensation money or not, as indicated above. Costs of this appeal shall abide the decision on this claim of the plaintiffs/appellants to a share in the compensation money.

Case remanded.

(V 58 C 186)

(From: Gujarat)*

J. C. SHAH, K. S. HEGDE AND
A. N. GROVER, JJ.

Commissioner of Wealth Tax, Gujarat, Appellant v. Mrs. Arundhati Balkrishna, Respondent.

Civil Appeals Nos. 1991, 1992, 2010 and 2011 of 1968, D/- 25-2-1970.

(A) Wealth Tax Act (1957), S. 2 (e) (iv) — 'Annuity' — Meaning of — Trust deeds — Trustees to pay annually to assessee a share of income from trusts funds after deducting expenses — Assessee having only life interest in such payments which were not fixed sums of money — Payments are not annuities — Assessee not entitled to exclude them under Section 2 (e) (iv) from computation of net wealth.

The expression 'annuity' in S. 2 (e) (iv), means a right to receive a specified sum and not an aliquot share in the income arising from any fund or property. Ordinarily, an annuity is a money payment of a fixed sum annually made and is a charge personally on the grantor. (1859) 4 Drew 343 = 113 R. R. 390; Halsbury's Laws of England 3rd Edn. Vol. 32 P. 534 Para 899 & Jarman on Wills p. 1133, Rel. on. (Para 14)

Under certain trust deeds the trustees were required to pay each year the income of the trust fund after deducting expenses of administering the trust, to the assessee and her two brothers in equal shares. But after the death of the assessee her heirs were not entitled to any share in that income. For disposition of the corpus of the trust, it was provided that notwithstanding anything contained to the contrary in the deed of Trust after assessee attained majority and after the birth of her first child when and so often as might be required by the assessee, the trustees were required to pay a portion of the corpus of the trust fund not exceeding in the whole one-half thereof to the assessee and this payment of the corpus was to be absolutely freed and discharged from the trust and provisions of the trust deed.

Held that the payments which the assessee was entitled to receive under

those deeds were not annuities and as such she was not entitled to the benefit of S. 2 (e) (iv). (1966) 59 ITR 230 (Cal) & (1968) 69 ITR 586 (Cal), Rel. on. (Paras 15, 16)

(B) Wealth Tax Act (1957), S. 5 (1) — Jewellery intended for personal use of assessee only comes within S. 5 (1) (viii) — Its value cannot be included in computation of net wealth of assessee—S. 5 (1) (xv) deals with jewellery in general.

There are four provisions in Section 5 (1), dealing with jewellery viz. (1) jewellery intended for personal use of the assessee, S. 5 (1) (viii); (2) jewellery that is heirloom, S. 5 (1) (xiii); (3) jewellery in the possession of any ruler, S. 5 (1) (xiv) and (4) jewellery in general, S. 5 (1) (xv). Under S. 5 (1) (xv) as it stood at the relevant time every assessee was entitled to deduct a sum of Rs. 25,000/- from out of the value of the jewellery in her possession whether the same was intended for her personal use or not but under S. 5 (1) (viii) the value of all the jewellery intended for the personal use of the assessee stands excluded in the computation of the net wealth of an assessee. Mr. B. Sen, Sr. Advocate, (M/s. S. K. Aiyar and B. D. Sharma, Advocates, with him), for Appellant (In C. As. Nos. 1991 and 1992 of 1968) and for Respondent (In C. As. Nos. 2010 and 2011 of 1968); Mr. N. A. Palkhivala, Sr. Advocate, (I. N. Shroff, Advocate, with him), for Respondent (In C. As. Nos. 1991 and 1992 of 1968) and for Appellant (In C. As. Nos. 2010 and 2011 of 1968).

HEGDE, J.:— These appeals by certificate under section 29 of the Wealth Tax Act, 1957 (to be hereinafter referred to as the Act) arise from a reference under section 27 (1) of the Act to the High Court of Gujarat. Therein four questions were referred to the High Court for its opinion. These four questions really gave rise to two questions of law viz. (1) whether under the three trust deeds referred to therein the assessee got annuities falling within the scope of section 2 (e) (iv)? and (2) whether the value of the jewels owned by the assessee was exempt under section 5 (1) (viii) in computing the net wealth of the assessee?

2. The assessee is an individual and the assessment years with which we are concerned in these appeals are 1957-58 and 1958-59, the corresponding valuation dates being December 31, 1956 and December 31, 1957.

3. By a deed of settlement dated September 7, 1945 the father of the assessee settled certain shares of the Indian Companies of the estimated value of Rs. 5,50,325 upon trust for the benefit of his two sons and his daughter, the assessee. By another deed of settlement dated October 12, 1945 he settled certain other shares upon trust for the benefit of the assessee and her two brothers. All the terms of the two trust deeds relevant for our present purpose are identical. By a deed of settlement dated September 30, 1945, the mother-in-law of the assessee settled upon trust a sum of Rupees 3,88,931 and shares of some Indian Companies of the aggregate market value of Rs. 11,81,670. The assessee is one of the beneficiaries named in that deed. The assessee also possessed jewellery of the value of Rs. 80,000.

4. As regards the payments to be made to the assessee under the aforementioned three trust deeds, the contention of the assessee is that under each of those deeds, she has only a right to an 'annuity' and the terms and conditions relating thereto preclude the commutation of any portion thereof into a lump sum grant and hence in view of Section 2 (e) (iv), the value of those annuities cannot be included in the computation of her net wealth. As regards the jewellery her case is that they are articles of her personal use and therefore their value cannot be taken into consideration in ascertaining her net wealth. She contends that the value of those jewellery is exempt under section 5 (1) (viii). The Wealth Tax Officer rejected both those contentions and assessed her after including in her net wealth the value of the benefits receivable by her under the trust deeds in question as well as the value of the jewellery minus

Rs. 25,000, deduction given under S. 5 (1) (xv) as it stood at the relevant time.

5. Against that order the assessee went up in appeal to the Assistant Appellate Commissioner. That officer agreed with the conclusions reached by the Wealth Tax Officer and he accordingly dismissed the appeal of the assessee. Thereafter the assessee appealed to the Tribunal. The Tribunal held that the payments to be made to the assessee under the trust deed executed by her mother-in-law is an 'annuity' entitled to exemption under section 2 (e) (iv). As regards the payments to be made to the assessee under her father's settlement deeds, it opined that as the assessee was entitled to withdraw from the trust fund at her own discretion after she attained majority and after she gave birth to one child, one half of the corpus, to that extent commutation was possible. Therefore to the extent of one half of the value of the annual payments to be made to her under those deeds, the assessee was not entitled to exemption under section 2 (e) (iv) but she was entitled to exemption as regards the other half. The Tribunal rejected the assessee's claim for exemption under S. 5 (1) (viii) i.e. in respect of the value of the jewellery.

6. On a reference under S. 27 (1), the High Court of Gujarat held that the payments to be made to the assessee under the three settlement deeds do not come within section 2 (e) (iv) but the value of the jewellery is exempt under section 5 (1) (viii). Both the assessee as well as the Revenue have appealed against that decision.

7. We shall first take up the contention of the assessee that the payments to be made to her under the trust deeds are annuities which by the terms and conditions relating thereto preclude the commutation of any portion thereof into a lump sum grant and hence are within the scope of section 2 (e) (iv). If those payments fall within the scope of that provision, they cannot be considered as the assets of the assessee and therefore their value cannot be reckoned in determining her net wealth under section 2 (m). Under section 3, the charging section, only the net wealth of an assessee can be brought to tax. Hence we have to examine the terms of the settlement deeds to find out whether the benefits conferred on the assessee by any or all of those deeds can be considered as annuity.

8. As stated earlier the two settlement deeds executed by the father of the assessee are expressed more or less in identical language. It was conceded at the bar that whatever construction we may place on one, would be equally applicable to the other. Therefore we shall take up the deed executed on September 7, 1945 by the father of the assessee. Under Clause 3 of that deed it is provided that the trustees, after deducting from the income of the shares in question, all costs and expenses incurred in or about the administration of the trust, should at the end of every calendar year pay the whole residue to the assessee and her two brothers in equal shares. But after the death of the assessee her heirs are not entitled to any share in that income. Therein provision is made by the settlor for disposition of the corpus of the trust. But it is provided that notwithstanding anything contained to the contrary in the deed of Trust after assessee attained majority and after the birth of her first child when and so often as might be required by the assessee, the trustees are required to pay a portion of the corpus of the trust fund not exceeding in the whole one-half thereof to the assessee and this payment of the corpus was to be absolutely freed and discharged from the trust and provisions of the trust deed. The other provisions of the trust deed are not relevant for our present purpose.

9. Under the trust deed executed by the assessee's mother-in-law on December 30, 1945, the husband of the assessee and her two brothers-in-law were constituted as the Trustees. Under Clause (a) of that deed, the trustees were required to pay the income of the trust fund after deducting the expenses to the assessee during her lifetime. The rest of the clauses in that trust deed relate to disposition of the corpus to different beneficiaries after the lifetime of the assessee.

10. It is clear from the terms of the three trust deeds referred to earlier that the assessee had a life interest in each of those funds. Further under the trust deeds executed by her father, she was also entitled to a portion of the corpus under certain circumstances. The question for decision is whether the benefits obtained by the assessee under those deeds can be held to come within Section 2 (e) (iv).

11. The expression "annuity" is not defined in the Act. In Halsbury's Laws of England, 3rd Edn. Vol. 32 at p. 534 (paragraph 899), the meaning of the word "annuity" is explained thus:

"An annuity is a certain sum of money payable yearly either as a personal obligation of the grantor or out of property not consisting exclusively of land".

12. In Jarman on Wills at p. 1113 "annuity" is defined thus:

"An annuity is a right to receive de anno in annum a certain sum, that may be given for life, or for a series of years; it may be given during any particular period, or in perpetuity; and there is also this singularity about annuities, that, although payable out of the personal assets, they are capable of being given for the purpose of devolution, as real estate; they may be given to a man and his heirs, and may go to the heir as real estate".

13. In Williams on Executors and Administrators "annuity" is described as a yearly payment of a certain fixed sum of money granted for life or for years charging the person of the grantor only. In Bignold v. Giles, (1859) 4 Drew 343 = 113 RR 390 Kindersley V. C. described "annuity" in these words:

"An annuity is a right to receive de anno in annum a certain sum; that may be given for life, or for a series of years; it may be given during any particular period, or in perpetuity; and there is also this singularity about annuities, that although payable out of the personal assets, they are capable of being given for the purpose of devolution, as real estate; they may be given to a man and his heirs, and may go to the heir as real estate—so an annuity may be given to a man and the heirs of his body; that does not, it is true, constitute an estate tail, but that is by reason of the Statute De Donis, which contains only the word "tenements", and an annuity, though a hereditament, is not a tenement; and an annuity so given is a base fee". Proceeding further the learned Judge observed:

"But this appears to me at least clear; that if the gift of what is called an annuity is so made, that, on the face of the will itself, the testator shows his intention to give a certain portion of the dividends of a fund, that is a very different thing; and most of the cases proceed on that footing. The ground is, that the Court construes the intention of the testator to be, not merely to give an annuity, but to give an aliquot portion of the income arising from a certain capital fund".

14. Illustrations of annuity given in Section 173 of the Indian Succession Act also show that it is a right to receive a specified sum and not an aliquot share in the income arising from any fund or property. Ordinarily an annuity is a money payment of a fixed sum annually made and is a charge personally on the grantor.

15. On an analysis of the relevant clauses in three trust deeds, it is clear the assessee was given thereunder a share of the income arising from the funds settled on trust. Under those deeds she is not entitled to any fixed sum of money. Therefore it is not possible to hold that the payments that she is entitled to receive under those deeds are annuities. She has undoubtedly a life interest in those funds. In Ahmed G. H. Ariff v. Commr. of Wealth Tax Calcutta, (1966) 59 ITR 230 (Cal) a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that the right of a person to receive under a wakf an aliquot share of the net income of the wakf property is an 'asset' within the meaning of the Wealth Tax Act, 1957 and the capital value of such a right is assessable to wealth tax. Therein the Court repelled the contention that the right in question was an 'annuity'. This decision was approved by the Court in Civil Appeals Nos. 2129—2132 of 1968 decided on August 20, 1969 and the same is binding on us. A similar view was taken by another Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Commr. of Wealth Tax v. Mrs. Dorothy, Martin, (1968) 69 ITR 586 (Cal). In that case under the will of the assessee's father the assessee was entitled to receive for her life the annual interest accruing upon her share in the residuary trust fund. The Wealth Tax Officer included the entire value of the said share in the assessable wealth of the assessee and subjected the same to tax under Section 16 (3) of the Wealth Tax Act, 1957. That order was confirmed by the Assistant Appellate Commissioner

but the Tribunal in appeal excluded the same in the computation of the net wealth of the assessee. On a reference made to the High Court, it was held that on a construction of the various clauses in the will, the assessee was entitled to an aliquot share in the general income of the residuary trust fund and not a fixed sum payable periodically as "annuity" and, therefore, the value of her share was an asset to be included in computing his net wealth. These decisions in our view correctly lay down the legal position. In this view it is not necessary to consider whether the income receivable by the assessee under those deeds either wholly or in part is capable of being commuted into a lump sum grant.

16. For the reasons mentioned above we agree with the High Court that payments to be made to the assessee under the three trust deeds cannot be considered as annuities and hence she is not entitled to the benefit of Section 2 (e) (iv).

17. This takes us to the question whether the High Court was right in its view that the value of the assessee's jewellery should not be taken into consideration in determining her net wealth. The Tribunal has taken the view and the High Court has agreed with that view that the jewellery in question are articles intended for the personal use of the assessee. As mentioned earlier those jewels were valued at Rs. 80,000/-; out of that amount Wealth Tax Officer deducted Rs. 25,000/- under Section 5 (1) (viii). The assessee claims that in view of Section 5 (1) (viii), the value of those jewels cannot be included in the computation of her net wealth. Section 5 (1) (viii) reads:

"5. (1) Wealth-tax shall not be payable by the assessee in respect of the following assets, and such assets shall not be included in the net wealth of the assessee—(viii) furniture, household utensils, wearing apparel, provisions and other articles intended for the personal or household use of the assessee."

18. There is no dispute that the jewels in question were intended for the personal use of the assessee; but it is said on behalf of the revenue that Section 5 (1) (viii) does not apply to jewels as those articles are specifically provided for under Section 5 (1) (xv). On the other hand it is urged on behalf of the assessee that Section 5 (1) (xv) deals with jewellery which are not intended for personal use of the assessee such as heirloom or other jewellery which are retained as valuable assets or intended for the use of persons other than the assessee whereas Section 5 (1) (viii) takes in only such jewellery as are intended for personal use of the assessee. We think the contention advanced on behalf of the assessee is the correct one. It is well known that the jewellery is widely used as articles of personal use by the ladies in this country specially by those belonging to the richer classes. That being so jewellery intended for the personal use of the assessee comes within the scope of Section 5 (1) (viii). But the jewellery mentioned in Section 5 (1) (xv) need not be articles intended for personal use of the assessee. That provision deals with jewellery in general. The two provisions deal with different classes of jewellery. That is made further clear by Section 5 (1) (xiii) which says that wealth Tax shall not be payable by assessee in respect of any drawings, paintings, photographs, prints and other heirloom not falling within Clause (xii) and not intended for sale but not including jewellery. If the contention that the jewellery is exclusively dealt by Section 5 (1) (xv) is correct then there was no occasion for the legislature to refer to jewellery in Section 5 (1) (xiii). From an analysis of the various provisions in Section 5, it appears to us that therein there are four provisions dealing with jewellery viz., (1) jewellery intended for personal use of the assessee — Section 5 (1) (viii); (2) jewellery that is heirloom — Section 5 (1) (xiii); (3) jewellery in the possession of any ruler — Section 5 (1) (xiv) and (4) jewellery in general — Section 5 (1) (xv). Under Section 5 (1) (xv) as it stood at the relevant time every assessee was entitled to deduct a sum of Rs. 25,000 from out of the value of the jewellery in her possession whether the same was intended for her personal use or not but under Section 5 (1) (viii) the value of all the jewellery intended for the personal use of the assessee stands excluded in the computation of the net wealth of an assessee.

19. For the reasons mentioned above we think the High Court was right in answering the question relating to the value of the jewellery in favour of the assessee.

20. In the result these appeals fail and they are dismissed—no costs.

Appeals dismissed.

M/s. The Alote Estate, Alote and another, Appellants v. R. B. Seth Hiralal Kalyanmal Kasliwal and others, Respondents.

Civil Appeal No. 1010 of 1966, D/- 20-2-1970.

Companies Act (1913), Sections 156, 184 — Liability as contributory of present and past members — Shareholder of fully paid shares — Cannot be placed on list of contributories without rectifying register and determination of liability in appropriate proceedings.

The consideration for the allotment of shares may be money or money's worth e. g., the transfer to the company of property. If a valid contract is made for the acceptance by the company of specified property in payment of shares the Court will not whilst the contract stands inquire into the value of the consideration even at the instance of the liquidator. Where, however, the contract is fraudulent or shows on the face of it that the consideration given to the company is illusory or is clearly not equivalent to the nominal value of the shares the shares cannot, to this extent, be treated as fully paid and the shareholder may be held liable to pay for them in full if the register is rectified and it is determined in appropriate proceedings that he is not a fully paid up shareholder. M/s. S. V. Gupte and N. D. Karkhanis, Sr. Advocates, (Mr. A. G. Ratnaparkhi, Advocate, with them), for Appellants; Mr. Mohan Behari Lal, Advocate, for Respondent No. 1; Mr. C. K. Daphtary, Sr. Advocate, (M/s. C. P. Lal and N. N. Sharma, Advocates, with him), for Respondents Nos. 2 to 4.

GROVER, J.: — This is an appeal by special leave from a judgment of the Division Bench of the Madhya Pradesh High Court reversing the order of the Company Judge in an application made by respondent No. 1 for an inquiry into that allegation that the consideration for 18,000 shares of the Vikram Sugar Mills Ltd. (now under liquidation) valued at Rs. 18 lakhs was not fully paid up by the shareholders, namely, the present appellants.

2. The facts may be succinctly stated. Appellant No. 1, the Alote Estate, was a firm consisting of two partners at the material time. It came into existence in 1944 when Vikram Sugar Mills Ltd., hereinafter called the "company", was proposed to be floated. The two partners of the firm were His Highness Col. Sir Vikram Singh Rao Pawar, Ruler of the State of Dewas (senior) and R. K. N. Gajapati Raju of Vaizagapatnam who died sometime in 1946 with the result that the firm was dissolved. In 1947 the ruler of Dewas (senior) was taken in adoption by Her Highness the Senior Dowager Maharanisahaba of Kolhapur. He assumed the name and title of His Highness Maj. Gen. Sir Shahaji Chhatrapati Maharaja of Kolhapur. After the constitution of the firm called the Alote Estate, the company was incorporated in February, 1944. The firm held extensive agricultural land which was suitable for cultivation of sugarcane. It had transferred 6,000 acres out of its holding to the company in lieu of 18,000 fully paid shares of Rs. 100/- each which were registered in the name of the firm.

3. Respondent No. 1 was originally a director of the company. He made a proposal for advancing debenture loan of Rs. 20 lakhs to the company which proposal was accepted by the Board of Directors as also at an extraordinary general meeting of the company on September 16, 1946. He was appointed Managing Agent of the company. On the same date at the meeting the shareholders of the company passed a resolution that out of 6,000 acres of land acquired by the company from the Alote Estate 2,000 acres selected by respondent No. 1 or his representative be returned and retransferred to the Estate. In consideration of such transfer 9,000 shares were to be surrendered by the Estate. Effect was given to this resolution and in the list of shareholders the number of shares held by the firm was shown as 9,000 instead of 18,000 subject to confirmation by the Court. A resolution was passed on October 27, 1947 for reduction of the capital from 60 Lakhs to Rs. 35 lakhs. The Court was also moved for giving permission for reduction of the capital. On January 23, 1950, Prabhakar Parashuramji Pandit — a shareholder — filed before the High Court a petition under Sections 166 and 162 of the Companies Act 1913 for winding up the company. On April 2, 1951 two joint liquidators were appointed.

4. The liquidators took steps to settle the list of contributories and objections were raised by His Highness the Maharaja of Kolhapur as also by the firm against inclusion of their names in that list. While these proceedings were pending an application was filed by respondent No. 1 on October 31, 1961 praying that an inquiry be made in respect of the price paid for 6,000 acres of land before the allotment of the shares and "to hold the Alote Estate and His Highness the Maharaja of Kolhapur liable as contributories to the extent of money's worth not found to have been fully paid in addition to and independently of the liability for Rs. 9 lakhs" which according to the joint liquidators was the amount of liability of the Maharaja as a contributory. It was alleged, inter alia, that on an average the price per acre paid for 6,000 acres of land before the allotment of the shares was approximately Rs. 30/-. On that basis the Maharaja and the Alote Estate were liable as contributories in the sum of Rs. 16 lakhs as the shares were not fully paid by value in kind. The Maharaja and the Alote Estate in reply took up the position that in the absence of rectification of register by appropriate action they were not liable to pay as contributories because they held shares which were fully paid up. As regards the company's resolution to give up 2,000 acres out of 6,000 acres and reduce the value of shares allotted to 9 lakhs it was maintained that the same was an independent transaction and its effect could be considered only in appropriate proceedings in accordance with law.

5. The Learned Company Judge by his order dated July 31, 1962 held that in a proceeding for winding up and while settling the list of contributories it was not open to go behind the transaction entered into at the time of the formation of the Company and that the consideration which had been freely accepted by the company could not be challenged as being inadequate in the absence of any allegation of fraud. He was further of the view that the contention of respondent No. 1 that the valuation of the land was Rs. 30 and not Rs. 300/- per acre could not be inquired into and it was not necessary to consider whether such inquiry was barred by limitation in view of Section 235 of the Act. It was, however, observed that if the allegation of respondent No. 1 was that the Alote Estate as an officer of the company was guilty of misfeasance or breach of trust the application having been made more than three years from the date of first appointment of liquidators would be clearly barred. Reference was made to numerous English and Indian decisions for coming to the conclusion that a fully paid shareholder could not be called upon to contribute towards the assets of the company in respect of such shares held by him. Other points were left for decision after the petition for confirmation of the resolution of the company was disposed of.

6. Respondent No. 1 filed an appeal under the Letters Patent. The Division Bench hearing the appeal seems to have been influenced by the possibility that the land had been purchased by the Alote Estate at a small fraction of value for which it had been sold to the company largely owing to the Maharaja being all powerful in the conduct of its affairs. It was considered that an inquiry would be necessary when there was a prima facie indication that the allottee of the shares had paid only a fraction of the nominal value.

7. Now Section 156 of the Act deals with the liability as contributories. Clause (iv) of sub-section (1) provides that in the case of a company limited by shares no contribution shall be required from any member exceeding the amount unpaid on the shares in respect of which he is liable as a present or past member. Section 158 defines the term "contributory". It means every person liable to contribute to the assets of a company in the event of its being wound up. Under Section 184 the Court shall settle the list of contributories with power to rectify the register of members in all cases where rectification is required in pursuance of the Act. Sections 185 and 186 confer power on the Court to require delivery of property from a contributory and to order payment of debts determined by it.

8. The material question, therefore, was whether the appellants could be placed on the list of contributories. It could hardly be disputed that a shareholder of fully paid up shares will not be placed on the list of contributories and made to contribute towards the assets of the company unless the register is rectified and it is determined in appropriate proceedings that he is not a fully paid up shareholder.

9. In England the rule which has been accepted as settled is that although the court can inquire into an allegation that owing to fraud the contract relating to fully paid up shares was vitiated but unless the contract is impeached mere inadequacy of price is not sufficient of itself to invalidate the contract. In the words of Vaughan Williams L.J. in In re Innes and Co., Ltd., (1903) 2 Ch Div 254, at page 262.

"You must shew that, these shares not having been paid for at all, the contract for purchase was a colourable transaction, and that in truth and in fact, qua value, these shares were not part of the consideration...."

As stated in Palmer's Company Law, 21st Edition, pages 190-191, the consideration for the allotment of shares may be money or money's worth e. g., the transfer to the company of property. If a valid contract is made for the acceptance by the company of specified property in payment of shares the court will not whilst the contract stands inquire into the value of the consideration even at the instance of the liquidator. Where, however, the contract is fraudulent or shows on the face of it that the consideration given to the company is illusory or is clearly not equivalent to the nominal value of the shares the shares cannot, to this extent, be treated as fully paid and the shareholder may be held liable to pay for them in full. It is significant that no steps were taken by the liquidators to have the register rectified or the contract entered into by the company with the appellants avoided by means of appropriate proceedings. Even in the application filed by respondent No. 1 in October 1961 there was no allegation of fraud. The fact stated related more to inadequacy of price or consideration and not to its being illusory or the like. In our judgment the learned single judge was right and the Division Bench was in error in directing an inquiry into the question whether the appellants had paid consideration which was inadequate.

10. The appeal is consequently allowed and the order of the Division Bench is set aside and that of the learned single judge restored with costs.

Appeal allowed.

(A) Industrial Disputes Act (1947), Section 2 (s) (as amended by Act 36 of 1956) — Workman, who is — A person may not be a workman even though he does not come within the exceptions — Workman must be held to be doing that work which is his main work.

A person cannot be assumed to be a workman on the ground that he does not come within the four exceptions in Section 2 (s). The specification of the four types of work in the definition in Section 2 (s) obviously is intended to lay down that an employee is to become a workman only if he is employed to do work of one of those types, while there may be employees who, not doing any such work, would be out of the scope of the word 'workman' without having to resort to the exceptions.

In practice, quite a large number of employees are employed in Industries to do work of more than one of the kinds mentioned in the definition. In such cases, it would be necessary to determine under which classification he will fall for the purpose of finding out whether he does or does not go out of the definition of 'workman' under the exceptions. For this purpose, a workman must be held to be employed to do that work which is the main work he is required to do, even though he may be incidentally doing other type of work. Case law discussed. (Paras 5, 6)

(B) Industrial Disputes Act (1947), Section 2 (s) (as amended by Act 36 of 1956) — Workman — Transport Engineer in Burma Shell Oil Storage and Distributing Co. of India, Ltd. — Comes within exception (iv) and is not a workman.

A person with technical qualifications can on that account, be employed in a supervisory capacity and, in such a case, he will be held to be employed to do supervisory work, so that, in order to be a workman, he must not be exempted under exception (iv). In the case of Transport Engineer the major part of his duties consists of supervisory work rather than his own personal technical work which is only incidental to the main work of repair, servicing, maintenance and fabrication inasmuch as, in his supervisory capacity, he diagnoses the defects and later on inspects the work done, makes his personal test and certifies that it has been properly carried out. Even if the Transport Engineer uses his technical knowledge, it is used primarily for the purpose of supervising the work done by the skilled manual labourers who carry out the actual repairs, do the servicing or maintenance or complete the fabrication. Admittedly the Transport Engineer draws salary in excess of Rs. 500/- per mensem and ceases to be a workman under exception (iv) of the definition. (1938) 1 All ER 20 and AIR 1965 Mad 263 and (1958) 2 Lab LJ 556 (First Labour Court, West Bengal) and AIR 1966 SC 305, Rel. on.

(C) Industrial Disputes Act (1947), Section 2 (s) (as amended by Act 36 of 1956) — Workman — District Engineer in Burma Shell Oil Storage and Distributing Co. of India, Ltd. — Comes within exception (iv) and is not a workman.

The duties, which the District Engineer performs, consist of assessing suitability of sites for depots from the point of view of the technical and engineering aspects, suggesting layout for construction of depots, or service stations, seeing that the estimates prepared by the draughtsmen are correct from the technical point of view, scrutinising tenders for construction checking the construction work given to the contractor, certifying bills submitted by contractors for the work done by them, and preparing estimates for maintenance work in respect of depots. He also gives certificate as required by the Inspector of Explosives after satisfying himself about the technical fitness of the installation facilities. On the other hand, the principal work, for which he is employed, is that of supervision inasmuch as he is required to supervise work done by others instead of doing the work himself. Even though he has to use his technical knowledge for the purpose of properly carrying on supervision, it cannot be held that he is employed to do technical work. A District Engineer draws a salary in excess of Rs. 500/- per mensem and, consequently, he cannot be held to be a workman. (Para 19)

(D) Industrial Disputes Act (1947), Section 2 (s) (as amended by Act 36 of 1956) — Workman — Foreman (Chemicals) in Burmah Shell Oil Storage and Distributing Co. of India, Ltd. — His principal duties are of a supervisory nature and the manual work done by him personally is only incidental — Since he draws a salary in excess of Rs. 500 per mensem, he must be held not to be a workman under exception (iv). (Para 20)

(E) Industrial Disputes Act (1947), Section 2 (s) (as amended by Act 36 of 1956) — Workman — Fuelling Superintendent in Burma Shell Oil Storage and Distributing Co. of India, Ltd. — Main and substantial work which he does is not that of supervising the work done by the few workmen who assist him, but his own manual work which he carries out at the depot as well as when delivering oil to the aircraft — Fact that a Fuelling Superintendent is leader of the team which carries out the work of fuelling, cannot convert his work into that of a supervisory nature — Exception (iv) does not apply to a Fuelling Superintendent and, even though the salary exceeds Rs. 500 per mensem, must be held to be a workman.

(F) Industrial Disputes Act (1947), Section 2 (s) (as amended by Act 36 of 1956) — Workman — Chemist in Burma Shell Oil Storage and Distributing Co. of India, Ltd. — Work of chemist is of technical nature — Small amount of supervision in ensuring that workmen assisting him do their work properly is only incidental to his own technical work of testing and giving results of tests to the Company — He is a workman.

(Para 23)

(G) Industrial Disputes Act (1947), Section 2 (s) (as amended by Act 36 of 1956) — Workman — Sales Engineering Representative in Burma Shell Oil Storage and Distributing Co. of India, Ltd. — Main work to be performed by Sales Engineering Representative is promotion of sales which are canvassed primarily by District Sales Representative — The amount of technical work that a Sales Engineering Representative does is all ancillary to his chief duty of promoting sales and giving advice — He is not a workman.

(H) Industrial Disputes Act (1947), Section 2 (s) (as amended by Act 36 of 1956) — Workman — Blending Supervisors in Burma Shell Oil Storage and Distributing Co. of India, Ltd. — Some are workmen and some are not.

The major part of Blending Supervisor working in the blending section of Waditube plant consists in himself operating various parts of the machinery and ensuring that oils are blended properly. The supervisory work is a minor part of his duties and, to some extent, incidental to the main work which is manual in character. Blending Supervisors, who work at the plant in such manner are, therefore, persons employed on manual work and have to be held to be workmen.

Other type of work done by a Blending supervisor is at a stage when the blending of oils has been completed and the oils have been transferred to the settling tanks. No doubt, as a Supervisor, he has to set the weights on the machines and has to take samples of the products and send them to the laboratory; but the principal work entrusted to him is that of seeing that the barrels and other containers are properly filled up by the large number of workmen placed under his charge who actually carry out the physical work for that purpose. His duties are, thus, primarily supervisory; and he is not a workman because he draws a salary in excess of Rs. 500/- and comes within exception (iv).

(I) Industrial Disputes Act (1947), Section 2 (s) (as amended by Act 36 of 1956) — Workman — Foreman in Burma Shell Oil Storage and Distributing Co. of India Ltd. — Foreman (Tank Farm and Pump House) is not workman being employed in supervisory capacity and drawing salary in excess of Rs. 500 per mensem — Foreman (Tank Lorry loading, Tank Wagon Loading and Tank Wagon unloading) is also not workman for same reason.

(J) Industrial Disputes Act (1947), Section 2 (s) (as amended by Act 36 of 1956) — Workman — Depot Superintendent in Burma Shell Oil Storage and Distributing Co. of India, Ltd. — His principal duties are of a supervisory and managerial nature, while the clerical duties are only incidental — He is not workman as he draws salary in excess of Rs. 500 per mensem and comes under exception (iv) — (1954) 1 Lab LJ 21 (LATI — Luck) and (1954) 2 Lab LJ 155 (Mad) Distinguished; (1955) 2 Lab LJ 153 (LATI — Bom) and (1955) 2 Lab LJ 228 (LATI — Mad), Rel. on.

(K) Industrial Disputes Act (1947), Section 2 (s) (as amended by Act 36 of 1956) — Workman — District Sales Representative in Burma Shell Oil Storage and Distributing Co. of India, Ltd. — Not a workman.

District Sales Representative is principally employed for the purpose of promoting sales of the Company. His main work is to do canvassing and obtain orders. In that connection, of course, he has to carry on some correspondence, but that correspondence is incidental to the main work of pushing sales of the Company. The case of District Sales Representative is clearly that of a person who cannot fall within any of the four classes, in the definition because his work cannot be held to be either manual, clerical, technical or supervisory. He is, therefore, not a workman at all within the principal part of the definition. (Para 36)

No. 1477 of 1970).

BHARGAVA, J.: — These two connected appeals by special leave are directed against an interim award of the Industrial Tribunal, Maharashtra, Bombay, in a dispute referred by the Government, relating to the revision of scales and grades of pay, dearness allowance, overtime payment, duty allowance, other allowances, and bonus for the year 1965-66, between the employers, Messrs. Burmah Shell Oil Storage and Distributing Company of India Ltd., Bombay (hereinafter referred to as "the Company") and a set of employees who were designated as junior management staff and were members of the Burmah Shell Management Staff Association registered as a trade union. The reference was confined to the members of the junior management staff working in Maharashtra region. The main business of the Company is marketing of petroleum products and oils and the Marketing Area is the whole of India which is divided into four areas, viz., Bombay, Calcutta, Madras and Delhi. This reference related to the Bombay area. The organisation and management of each area is divided into four functions, Marketing, Distribution, Personnel and Finance. Each one of the four Areas is itself divided into several Marketing Divisions and each Division is further sub-divided into five or seven sales districts as the case may be. For the sale of commodities, in which the Company deals, there are various outlets, such as petrol pumps, storage depots, etc. The Company also undertakes the work of fuelling of aircraft at the Airfields which work is done by the Airfield Service Stations. For purposes of storage and distribution of products handled by the Company, the Company maintains port installations as well as upcountry depots. The staff concerned in this reference is employed at the installations or the depots in the Maharashtra region.

2. Though the members of the Association are described as junior management staff, they claimed that they were workmen as defined in the Industrial Disputes Act No. 14 of 1947 (hereinafter referred to as "the Act") and, on that basis, raised an industrial dispute relating to salary, etc., as mentioned above. The Association served a charter of demands on the Company on 29th November, 1966. The Government referred the dispute to the Industrial Tribunal on 28th October, 1967. On 2nd December, 1967, the Association put forward its statement of claim before the Tribunal. On behalf of the Company, a preliminary written statement was filed on 15th January, 1968, contending that none of the members of the Association was a workman, so that the reference was incompetent. In this written statement, it was stated that the Company would request the Tribunal to decide this question as a preliminary issue and that a written statement on merits would only be filed subsequently, if it is held that all or any of members of the Association are workmen within the Act. A rejoinder statement was filed on behalf of the Association on 27th March, 1968. The Tribunal gave its finding on the preliminary issue as an interim award on 9th January, 1970. The members of the Association were classified into various categories of whom we need mention only 10 which are involved in these two appeals. Out of these 10, members of 6 categories were held to be workmen and these are:—

- (1) Transport Engineer
- (2) District Engineers
- (3) Foreman (Chemicals)
- (4) Fuelling Superintendent.
- (5) Chemists.
- (6) Sales Engineering Representatives,

Members belonging to 4 categories were held not to be workmen. These categories are:—

- (1) Blending Supervisors
- (2) Foreman
- (3) Depot Superintendents
- (4) District Sales Representatives.

Civil Appeal No. 1477 of 1970 has been brought up by the Company challenging the decision of the Tribunal in respect of the 6 categories held to be workmen, while Civil Appeal No. 1478/1970 has been filed by the Association challenging the correctness of the decision of the Tribunal in respect of the 4 categories held not to be workmen.

3. Some general features with regard to the members of the Association involved in these appeals may be stated. At the time of the reference, the lowest basic salary drawn by a member of the Association was Rs. 535 per mensem, while the highest was Rs. 1500/- per mensem. In addition, the members of the Association are paid dearness allowance equal to 30 per cent of basic salary, House-rent allowance, leave fare assistance, and bonus. Medical benefits are also provided for them and their families. The company contributes to the Provident Fund of the members at 10 per cent of basic salary and these members on retirement are also entitled to pension which varies between 30 per cent and 50 per cent of basic salary. The number of persons involved in the reference in the Maharashtra region is 140. The effect of the decision of the Tribunal is that 98 employees belonging to 4 categories have been held not to be workmen, while 42 employees belonging to 6 categories have been held to be workmen. The decision in these appeals can, however, have wider repercussions because, in the whole of India, the total number of persons belonging to these categories would be 648. If the Tribunal's decision is upheld, 154 of them would be workmen and 494 would be non-workmen. It may also be noticed that the majority of the persons concerned in this reference originally started at a salary of Rs. 100/- to Rs. 200/- per mensem and it is only as a result of promotions, revision of salaries and length of service that they are now drawing basic pay at the rates mentioned above. All persons appointed to the posts now held by them were originally described as Supervisors or field staff; but, in the year 1962, they came to be designated as 'junior management staff. The Association got itself registered under the name "Burmah Shell Management Staff Association."

4. In order to decide whether the decision of the Tribunal with respect to the various categories is correct, it is necessary to consider the definition of "workmen" in the Act as amended by Industrial Disputes Amendment Act 36 of 1956. That definition is reproduced below:—

"2. (s) "workman" means any person (including an apprentice) employed in any industry to do any skilled or unskilled manual, supervisory, technical or clerical work for hire or reward, whether the terms of employment be express or implied, and for the purposes of any proceeding under this Act in relation to an industrial dispute, includes any such person who has been dismissed, discharged or retrenched in connection with, or as a consequence of, that dispute, or whose dismissal, discharge or retrenchment has led to that dispute, but does not include any such person—

(i) who is subject to the Army Act, 1950, or the Air Force Act, 1950, or the Navy (Discipline) Act, 1934; or

(ii) who is employed in the police service or as an officer or other employee of a prison; or

(iii) who is employed mainly in a managerial or administrative capacity; or

(iv) who, being employed in a supervisory capacity, draws wages exceeding five hundred rupees per mensem or exercises, either by the nature of the duties attached to the office or by reason of the powers vested in him functions mainly of a managerial nature".

For an employee in an industry to be a workman under this definition, it is manifest that he must be employed to do skilled or unskilled manual work, supervisory work, technical work or clerical work. If the work done by an employee is not of such a nature, he would not be a workman. Mr. Chari on behalf of the Association, however, put forward the argument that this definition is all comprehensive and contemplates that all persons employed in an industry must necessarily fall in one or the other of the four classes mentioned above and, consequently, the Court should proceed on the assumption that every person is a workman; but he may be taken out of the definition of 'workman' under the four exceptions contained in the definition. The two exceptions with which we are primarily concerned are exceptions (iii) and (iv). Under exception (iii), even a workman, who is employed mainly in a managerial or administrative capacity, goes out of the definition of 'workman', while under exception (iv), persons, who are employed in a supervisory capacity, go out of the definition, provided they either draw wages exceeding Rs. 500/- per mensem or exercise, by the nature of the duties attached to the office or by reason of the powers vested in them, functions mainly of a managerial nature.

5. We are unable to accept this submission. In the case of May and Baker (India), Ltd. v. Their Workmen, (1961) 2 Lab LJ 94 = (AIR 1967 SC 678) this Court had to consider the correctness of a decision of a Tribunal which had held that one Mukerjee, an employee in an industry, was a workman under the Act, because he was not employed in a supervisory capacity. The Court held:—

"The Tribunal seems to have been led away by the fact that Mukerjee had no supervisory duties and had to work under the directions of his superior officers. That, however, would not necessarily mean that Mukerjee's duties were mainly manual or clerical. From what the tribunal itself has found it is clear that Mukerjee's duties were mainly neither clerical nor manual. Therefore, as Mukerjee was not a workman, his case would not be covered by the Industrial Disputes Act and the tribunal would have no jurisdiction to order his reinstatement".

In that case, the Court thus held Mukerjee not to be a workman on the ground that his work was neither clerical nor manual which was the nature of the work envisaged in the definition to make an employee a workman. It is true that that decision was given on the definition of "workman" as it stood before the Amendment of 1956 when the words "supervisory" and "technical" did not occur in the definition. Mr. Chari's submission is that the amendment in 1956 introduced the words "supervisory" and "technical" with the object of making the definition all comprehensive; but, on the face of it, it cannot be so. If every employee of an industry was to be a workman except those mentioned in the four exceptions, these four classifications need not have been mentioned in the definition and a workman could have been defined as a person employed in an industry except in cases where he was covered by one of the exceptions. The specification of the four types of work, obviously is intended to lay down that an employee is to become a workman only if he is employed to do work of one of those types, while there may be employees who, not doing any such work, would be out of the scope of the word "workman" without having to resort to the exceptions. An example, which appears to be very clear, will be that of a person employed in canvassing sales for an industry. He may not be required to do any paper work, nor may he be required to have any technical knowledge. He may not be supervising the work of any other employees, nor would he be doing any skilled or unskilled manual work. He would still be an employee of the industry and, obviously, such an employee would not be a workman, because the work, for which he is employed, is not covered by the four types mentioned in the definition and not because he would be taken out of the definition under one of the exceptions.

6. The next aspect that has to be taken notice of is that, in practice, quite a large number of employees are employed in industries to do work of more than one of the kinds mentioned in the definition. In cases where an employee is employed to do purely skilled or unskilled manual work, or supervisory work, or technical work, or clerical work, there would be no difficulty in holding him to be a workman under the appropriate classification. Frequently, however, an employee is required to do more than one kind of work. He may be doing manual work as well as supervisory work, or he may be doing clerical work as well as supervisory work. He may be doing technical work as well as clerical work. He may be doing technical work as well as supervisory work. In such cases, it would be necessary to determine under which classification he will fall for the purpose of finding out whether he does or does not go out of the definition of "workman" under the exceptions. The principle is now well settled that, for this purpose, a workman must be held to be employed to do that work which is the main work he is required to do, even though he may be incidentally doing other type of work. In the case of May & Baker (India), Ltd., (1961) 2 Lab LJ 94 = (AIR 1967 SC 678) (supra), the Court, in the quotation cited above, noticed the fact that Mukerjee's duties were mainly neither clerical nor manual. The significance attaches to the word "mainly", because Mukerjee's duties did involve some clerical and manual work; yet, he was held not to be a workman.

7. In South Indian Bank Ltd. v. A. R. Chacko, (1964) 5 SCR 625 = (AIR 1964 SC 1522) the Court applied a similar test when it held:—

"We can find no mistake in the approach of the Labour Court to the question nor can we see any justification for interfering with its conclusion on the evidence in the case. All the relevant documents produced have been duly considered by the Labour Court in the light of the oral evidence given; and on such consideration it has come to the conclusion that though on paper certain rights and powers were assigned to him and occasionally he acted in the place of the Agent when the Agent was absent, such duties did not form part of his principal and main duties". The Court, thus, approved of the test of finding out which duties were the principal and main duties.

8. In Ananda Bazar Patrika (Private) Ltd. v. Its Workmen, (1969) 2 Lab LJ 670 (SC) this Court clearly enunciated the principle by stating:

"The principle which should be followed in deciding the question whether a person is employed in a supervisory capacity or on clerical work is that if a person is mainly doing supervisory work but incidentally or for a fraction of the time also does some clerical work, it would have to be held that he is employed in supervisory capacity, and, conversely, if the main work done is of clerical nature, the mere fact that some supervisory duties are also carried out incidentally or as a small fraction of the work done by him will not convert his employment as a clerk into one in supervisory capacity".

Dealing with the facts of that case, the Court found that Gupta, the employee concerned, was employed on clerical work and not in supervisory capacity. The principal work that Gupta was doing was that of maintaining and writing the cash-book and of preparing various returns. Being the senior-most clerk, he was put in charge of the provident fund section and was given a small amount of control over the other clerks working in his section. The only powers he could exercise over them was to allocate work between them, to permit them to leave during office hours, and to recommend their leave applications. These few minor duties of a supervisory nature could not convert his office of senior clerk in charge into that of a supervisor.

9. Assistance in this matter is also available from decisions by Courts in England where, in connection with the applicability of the Factories Act and other Acts, the Courts had to decide whether an employee was employed on manual labour or not. The earliest case is Re Dairymen's Foremen and Re Tailors' Cutters, (1911-12) 28 TLR 587. After referring to decisions on the Employers and Workmen's and Compensation Acts, Swinfen Eady, J., held that those cases really afforded assistance in determining the true meaning of this statute. In his opinion, although they might perform manual labour, the question was whether that was the real substantial employment for which they were engaged or whether it was not incidental or accessory to it. Applying this principle to the case of Tailors' Cutter, it was held:—

"The actual labour of cutting out cloth might be manual labour, but the position he really occupied was a manager of a business department. His duties therefore substantially were not those involving manual labour and he was not within the Act".

10. In Reid v. British and Irish Steam Packet Co. Ltd., (1921) 2 KBD 319, reference was made to an earlier decision by that very Court in Jacues v. Owners of Steam Tug Alexandra, which decision was rendered on November 18, 1920, and in which the Court adopted the definition which was given by the late Master of the Rolls sitting as a Judge of first instance, of the meaning of "employed otherwise than by way of manual labour". That meaning was approved by saying:—

"What that learned Judge said was, that the question whether a person is employed otherwise than by way of manual labour within the meaning of that section is to be determined by considering whether any manual labour that he may do in the course of his service is the real substantial work for which he is engaged, or whether it is only incidental or accessory thereto; if it be the latter, the employment is not in manual labour".

This principle was also later approved by the House of Lords in the appeal, which came before it against the decision in the case of Jacques v. Owners of Steam Tug Alexandra, decided on July 4, 1921, (1921) 2 AC 339, where Lord Buckmaster in his speech said:

"The difficulty that arises in the construction of the statute is due to the number of employments in which it is impossible to assert that the employment is solely manual labour or is solely exclusive of manual labour, and it has been held in a series of cases approved in the present instance by the Court of Appeal that in these circumstances the real test is the substantial nature of the employment. If that be manual labour the fact that there are other duties performed that could not be so described does not take the employee outside the benefit of the statute. If, on the other hand, the substantial part of the employment cannot be described as "manual" labour, the fact that manual work has to be performed does not bring him within. This test, which in my opinion is the only reasonable one that can be applied to the statute is, I think, the one that was accepted by the learned county Court Judge, and if that be so, unless the proved facts are of such a character that it was not open to him to hold that by their proper application the deceased was excluded from the Act, his finding is conclusive and cannot be questioned". A similar principle was indicated by Lord Wrenbury in the following words:—

"The question to be answered I think is this: When the employer offered and the man accepted the employment, was it substantially an offer of manual labour although it involved some other work, or was it an offer of other work although there was attached to it an obligation to do some manual labour? To put this particular case: Was the employment that of master of the tug with the duties and responsibilities attaching to that office but coupled with an obligation to take part with the crew in the manual work, or was the employment that of a manual labourer who was to be responsible for the tug as senior man among the crew?"

11. In J. & F. Stone Lighting & Radio Ltd. v. Havgarth, 1968 AC Pt. 3, 157 the same test of the substantial nature of the employment was applied in interpreting the words "employed in manual labour" in the Factories Act. Thus, in the present case also, in determining which of the employees in the various categories are covered by the definition of "workman", we have to see what is the main or substantial work which they are employed to do? If it is supervisory work, it would be held that they were employed to do supervisory work even though they may also be doing some technical, clerical or manual work. If, on the other hand, the supervisory work be incidental to the main or substantial work of any other type, viz., clerical, manual or technical, the employment would not be in a supervisory capacity. It is in the light of these principles that we shall now proceed to examine the correctness of the decision of the Tribunal in respect of various categories of workmen involved in this reference. We shall take them up in the order in which they were discussed by the counsel for parties in the course of their arguments.

1. Transport Engineer:

12. The Transport Engineer works in the Central Garage at Sewree Installations which is maintained for the purpose of repairs and maintenance of all motor vehicles owned by the Company as well as for fabrication of bodies of lorries. The Tribunal in its award has mentioned various duties carried on by the Transport Engineer, after considering the evidence given by Mathai who is working as a Transport Engineer and was examined as a witness by the Association, as well as the evidence of Varkie, the witness examined on behalf of the Company, and who was in charge of the Sewree Installations as a whole. It appears that Mathai obtained some technical qualifications by working as an apprentice in the Bombay Garage at

Santa Cruz for a period of 4 years and thus, gaining knowledge as an automobile mechanic. He worked as Fitter, Mechanic and, later, Assistant Foreman in the Bombay Garage. After that, he worked in the Bombay Electric Supply and Transport Undertaking as a Foreman. He was appointed as Transport Engineer in the Company in 1951. Previously, there used to be three Transport Engineers in the Central Garage with about 115 workmen under them. Since a period of six months preceding the order of reference, Mathai was the sole Transport Engineer posted in the Central Garage and he admitted that he was the senior-most officer in it. According to him, the Transport Engineer is responsible for the entire work of repairing, servicing and maintenance of vehicles as well as for the work of modification and fabrication of motor lorries. In that connection, he himself checks the vehicles that are brought to the Central Garage for repairs, has to locate faults by actually driving the vehicle for a road test, and then explains the manner in which the fault is to be removed or repaired to the workmen working under him. He has to see that the work of repair, servicing and maintenance is properly carried out by the mechanics, fitters, etc. After the work is completed, he has himself to inspect and check the vehicle and thereafter certify its roadworthiness. Originally, when there were three Transport Engineers in the Central Garage, they had 115 workmen carrying on the work of repair, servicing and maintenance and fabrication, etc. From the time that Mathai has been the sole Transport Engineer, the persons working under him are 58 in number. Amongst these 58 workmen are 13 Mechanics, 22 Fitters in three different grades, 3 Turners, 2 Welders, 5 Auto-electricians, 2 Carpenters, 3 Painters and remaining 8 are semi-skilled or unskilled Mazdoors. All these men work as direct subordinates of Mathai. Mathai admits that he has to guide them as to how the job is to be done, though he adds that, in fact, he works with them. He gives them directions as to how the work is to be done if it is not being carried out properly. He allocates the job to the workmen and also re-allocates the jobs when necessary. Every-day, there are roughly 15 to 20 jobs to be carried out. He goes round to see how the jobs are being done by the workmen. The work of dismantling, repairing, etc., is generally done by skilled or highly skilled workmen and it is only when the work is of a special technical character that he himself has to attend to it. Varkie's evidence, as reproduced by the Tribunal in the award, shows that Mathai supervises the work of the mechanics, fitters, etc., and ensures that repair schedules are adhered to by them. Varkie also stated that Mathai instructs and guides the workmen in diagnosing the defects as and when necessary, so that he partly contradicts Mathai who stated that defects in all vehicles are first diagnosed by him. Varkie also stated that the Transport Engineer maintains discipline in his department, initiates disciplinary action as and when necessary, ensures that operations in the Garage are carried out efficiently, reports on the performance of the workmen working under him, and sanctions leave in the case of labour staff working under him, while, in some other cases, he recommends leave to be granted to a workman. The statement of Varkie that Mathai sanctions leave is denied by Mathai in his evidence. The Tribunal has not recorded a clear finding accepting the version of one witness or the other. Some documentary evidence was produced to show that, in cases where the leave asked for did not exceed 18 days, the chits were signed by Mathai as In-charge Department which, according to Mathai, indicated that he was recommending leave and not sanctioning leave. In this connection, our attention was also drawn to Rule 19 (b) of the Standing Orders of the Company under which only the Manager was authorised to grant leave, except in cases where he may delegate his authority to some other officer. Varkie stated that he had delegated his authority to Foreman working under him and equated a Transport Engineer with a Foreman; but no written authority was produced. We shall, therefore, proceed on the basis that, in the matter of leave, all that is established is that Mathai had to recommend leave applications and, as admitted by him, his recommendations were almost invariably accepted. It is not necessary to give further details of other minor duties carried on by Mathai; but the above facts relied upon by the Tribunal show that the major part of the work done by Mathai is that of supervision of the work of repair, maintenance, servicing and fabrication which is actually carried on by mechanics, fitters and other skilled or unskilled workmen working under him. His own personal work comes in at the first stage when he may have to diagnose the defect by actually driving a vehicle, if necessary, and, again, when he himself tests the vehicle after the work on it has been completed and certifies it as road-worthy. As many as 15 to 20 jobs are carried on in a day simultaneously and it is obvious that he could not himself perform those jobs personally. In respect of these jobs, all he could do was to supervise the work being done by the skilled and unskilled workmen to ensure that the jobs were properly done. On the face of it, the major part of his duties, thus, consists of supervisory work rather than his own personal technical work which is only incidental to the main work of repair, servicing, maintenance and fabrication inasmuch as, in his supervisory capacity, he diagnoses the defects and later on inspects the work done, makes his personal test and certifies that it has been properly carried out.

13. Despite these facts, the Tribunal held the Transport Engineer to be a workman on the ground that he was employed because of his technical knowledge and, even in supervising the work of the workmen, he is required to make use of his technical knowledge, and, consequently, rejected the plea of the Company that the Transport Engineer cannot be said to be employed to do supervisory work. It appears to us that, in giving this decision, the Tribunal misdirected itself. Even if the Transport Engineer uses his technical knowledge, it is used primarily for the purpose of supervising the work done by the skilled manual labourers who carry out the actual repairs, do the servicing or maintenance or complete the fabrication. The other supervisory duties, mentioned above, have been ignored by the Tribunal on the ground that, in the matter of allocation of work, the Transport Engineer does it on equitable basis, that it is his duty to get the job done in a proper manner, that, in distributing or allocating or reallocating the work, the main consideration which weighs with the Transport Engineer is whether the work is executed efficiently from a technical point of view. These appear to us to be no grounds for holding that the main and substantial work being done by the Transport Engineer is not supervisory in character.

14. In this connection, we may take notice of the argument advanced by Mr. Chari on behalf of the Association that, whenever a technical man is employed in an industry, it must be held that he is employed to do technical work irrespective of the manner in which and the occasions on which the technical knowledge of that person is actually brought into use. The general proposition put forward by him was that, if a technical employee even gives advice or guides other workmen, it must be held that he is doing technical work and not supervisory work. He elaborated this submission by urging that, if we hold the supervisory work done by a technician as not amounting to his being employed to do technical work, the result would be that only those persons would be held to be employed on technical work who actually do manual work themselves. According to him, this would result in making the word "technical" redundant in the definition of 'workman' even though it was later introduced to amplify the scope of the definition. We are unable to accept these submissions. The argument that, if we hold that supervisory work done by a technical man is not employment to do technical work, it would result in only manual work being held to be technical work, is not at all correct. There is a clear distinction between technical work and manual work. Similarly there is a distinction between employments which are substantially for manual duties, and employments where the principal duties are supervisory or other type, though incidentally involving some manual work. Even though the law in India is different from that in England, the views expressed by Branson, J., in Appeal of Gardner; In re Maschek; In re Tyrrell, (1938) 1 All ER 20 are helpful, because, there also, the nature of the work had to be examined to see whether it was manual work. As examples of duties different from manual labour, though incidentally involving manual work, he mentioned cases where a worker (a) is mainly occupied in clerical or accounting work or (b) is mainly occupied in supervising the work of others, or (c) is mainly occupied in managing a business or a department, or (d) is mainly engaged in salesmanship, or (e) if the successful execution of his work depends mainly upon the display of taste or imagination or the exercise of some special mental or artistic faculty or the application of scientific knowledge as distinguished from manual dexterity. Another helpful illustration given by him of the contrast between the two types of cases was in the following words:—

"If one finds a man employed because he has the artistic faculties which will enable him to produce something wanted in the shape of a creation of his own, then obviously, although it involves a good deal of manual labour, he is employed in order that the employer may get the benefit of his creative faculty".

The example (e), given above, very appropriately applies to the case of a person employed to do technical work. His work depends upon special mental training or scientific or technical knowledge. If the man is employed because he possesses such faculties and they enable him to produce something as a creation of his own, he will have to be held to be employed on technical work, even though, in carrying out that work, he may have to go through a lot of manual labour. If, on the other hand, he is merely employed in supervising the work of others, the fact that, for the purpose of proper supervision, he is required to have technical knowledge will not convert his supervisory work into technical work. The work of giving advice and guidance cannot be held to be an employment to do technical work.

15. We may, to clarify this aspect, take an example of a qualified technical Engineer who is concerned with manufacture of machines. If he himself creates a machine with the use of his technical knowledge, he will certainly be held to be employed to do technical work. On the other hand, if the machine is being made by others and all he does is to give advice or guidance, the actual technical work will have to be held to be done by the mechanics carrying on the work, while his duty will only be supervisory. A more clear illustration which may be useful is that of a painter. If a person is employed to paint walls of a house or paint furniture, it would clearly be employment to do manual labour. If, on the other hand, he is an artist who paints works of art as a result of his own creative and imaginative faculty, he would be held to be employed on technical work, even though, in creating the work, he will all the time be using his own hands to paint the picture. There can be a third case where a good artist may have pupils working under him who paint artistic pictures and he only guides their work. He may, on occasions, even make some improvements by re-touching the work done by the pupils. On the face of it, such a person cannot be held to be employed to do technical work; he would be a technical supervisor. These examples clearly indicate that, in the case of the Transport Engineer, whose principal duties are to see that the work is properly done by the skilled and unskilled workmen working under him, he is really employed to do supervisory work and not technical work.

16. Reference may be made in this connection to a decision of a learned single Judge of the Madras High Court in Murugalli Estate, Hardypet v. Industrial Tribunal, Madras, (1964) 2 Lab LJ 164 = (AIR 1965 Mad 263). In that case, he was considering the question whether one Dr. Srinivasan, a medical attendant employed in an industry, was a workman. The learned Judge held:—

"In my opinion, this view overlooks the fact that Dr. Srinivasan was charged with particular duties of supervisory character, because of his technical qualification and level of his ability and skill. It is that qualification which the management recognized as enabling the doctor to be in charge of the supervisory work of the nature mentioned above. That being the purpose of the employment, merely because, being a technical man Dr. Srinivasan was called upon to attend to patients, it could not be stated that he did any the less supervisory work. It may be that if the duties are measured by time, he spent more time in attending to patients. But that, I consider, cannot be regarded as determining the main functions of Dr. Srinivasan. The main function for which he was appointed may not occupy as much time as the medical attendance on patients. All the same, the fact that it is a technical employment for a particular purpose, because of particular qualifications, they should not be lost sight of in determining the character of the employment. The test to be applied, to my mind, to cases of technical employment, such as in this case, should be the purpose for which the employment is made, irrespective of whether the performance of the duties may or may not occupy the entire time of the employee. That is because the employment is made on the basis of the particular level of professional efficiency and technical qualifications. If an employee is found suitable for supervisory work, because of those reasons, it cannot be said that his functions are mainly those of a medical attendant, as, on account of his professional qualification, he happened to be engaged in that capacity as well".

This case, thus, recognises that a person with technical qualifications can on that account, be employed in a supervisory capacity and, in such a case, he will be held to be employed to do supervisory work, so that, in order to be a workman, he must not be exempted under exception (iv).

17. The First Labour Court, West Bengal, in Indamer Company (Private) Ltd. v. Barin De, (1958) 2 Lab LJ 556 (Cal), applied the same test in determining whether an Aircraft Maintenance Engineer (A. M. E.) is a workman or not. The Court found that the Aircraft Company was employing 5 A. M. Es. and they had 30/35 skilled and unskilled mechanics working under them. The daily maintenance of an aircraft was a considerable task and the work had to be done at recurring intervals. The A. M. Es. could not physically undertake all the task and that was why the Company had a larger staff of qualified mechanics, who actually did the job under the supervision of the A. M. Es. After the actual servicing work of the aircraft was done, the A. M. E. was to inspect that the various jobs had been completed to his satisfaction, and he then certified the aircraft as air-worthy. For this purpose, he proceeded to the various machines, gave advice to the mechanics, so that the job was completed, visually inspected the job installation or repair, and gave a certificate if it was found to be to his satisfaction. He signed the log book entries. On these facts, the Labour Court held that the A. M. Es. were employed to do supervisory work and, since they were drawing a salary in excess of Rs. 500/- per mensem, they were not workmen. That Labour Court distinguished the decision given by the National Industrial Tribunal, Lucknow, in the case of The Indian Airlines Corporation v. The Air Corporation Employees' Union, Bombay and others which Award is printed in the Gazette of India Extraordinary Part II—Section 3 — Sub-section (ii) dated March 20, 1958. That case was distinguished on the ground that the duties of the A. M. Es. were not specified in the Award and there was, furthermore, an admission in that case that certain parts of checking work had to be done by the A. M. Es. themselves. We have been taken through the Award of the National Industrial Tribunal, Lucknow, and we are unable to hold that that decision can be of any assistance in determining the general question whether a person, possessing technical qualifications, employed on supervisory duties, must be held to be employed to do technical work and not supervisory work.

18. In determining the nature of employment of Mathai, and in holding that he is employed to do supervisory work, we have taken into account not only the work of supervision which he carries on in ensuring that the skilled and unskilled manual workmen employed under him are properly doing the work of repairs, maintenance, servicing and fabrication, etc., but also the fact that the workmen function under his control and directions that he allocates and re-allocates work to them, that he initiates disciplinary proceedings, etc. The exercise of such powers is clearly a part of his supervisory duty. That such functions indicate that the employment is of supervisory character was laid down by this Court in All India Reserve Bank Employees' Association v. Reserve Bank of India, (1966) 1 SCR 25 = (AIR 1966 SC 305) where Hidayatullah, J., as he then was, expressed the view of the Court in the following words:—

"These employees distribute work, detect faults, report for penalty, make arrangements for filling vacancies, to mention only a few of the duties which are supervisory and not merely clerical."

Thus, in the case of a Transport Engineer, there is a combination of supervisory duties of two types. The Transport Engineer actually supervises the work of repairs, maintenance, servicing and fabrication which is carried on in the Central Garage by the skilled mechanics, fitters, and other workmen, and, at the same time, he has the supervision over those men in the matter of giving directions, recommending leave, initiating disciplinary proceedings, etc. In this view, the decision of the Tribunal holding that the Transport Engineer is a workman has to be set aside, because, admittedly, the Transport Engineer is drawing salary in excess of Rs. 500/- per mensem and ceases to be a workman under exception (iv) of the definition.

2. District Engineers:

19. In the case of District Engineers, the Tribunal had to consider the evidence of the Association's witness, Sirdesai, one of the District Engineers employed by the Company, and the evidence of the Company's witness, Manoharlal Chopra. The duties, which the District Engineer performs, consist of assessing suitability of sites for depots from the point of view of the technical and engineering aspects, suggesting lay-out for construction of depots or service stations, seeing that the estimates prepared by the draughtsman are correct from the technical point of view, scrutinising tenders for construction, checking the construction work given to the contractor, certifying bills submitted by contractors for the work done by them, and preparing estimates for maintenance work in respect of depots. He also gives certificate as required by the Inspector of Explosives after satisfying himself about the technical fitness of the installation facilities. On the other hand, it appears that the principal work, for which he is employed, is that of supervision inasmuch as he is required to supervise work done by others instead of doing the work himself. The estimates are prepared by draughtsman and he only checks them. The scrutiny of tenders given by the contractors as well as checking the construction work done by the contractors is in the nature of supervision, so as also certification of bills. He himself admitted that he controlled and directed construction and maintenance and looked after construction and maintenance work of the company-owned depots in his district. He had to look after filling and servicing stations and company's office and staff quarters. He controlled and directed the work of draughtsmen, fitters and painters throughout the district. He also kept contact with Electric Supply Undertakings, Public Works Department and Municipality in connection with the construction work. He has one draughtsman and eight fitters working under him. In view of these admissions made by him, a question was put to him at the end of his cross-examination as follows:—

"I put it to you that you are employed principally to supervise, control and coordinate the activities of the contractors and the company's men in the district for all the construction and maintenance work?"

His answer was:—

"Yes, that is true".

The Tribunal took notice of the admission made by Sirdesai that he was employed principally to supervise, control and co-ordinate the activities of the contractors and the company's men in the district for all construction and maintenance work, but added that the nature of supervision and control was essentially technical, and, so far as fitters and draughtsman were concerned, the guidance and instructions given by the District Engineer to them were also of technical character. Holding that there was no supervision in the sense of any administrative control or powers exercised over them, the Tribunal concluded that the District Engineer was employed to do technical work and not supervisory work. On the face of it, the decision is incorrect. The principles that we have explained above, in dealing with the case of Transport Engineer, manifestly show that a District Engineer is also principally employed to do work which is of a supervisory character and, even though he has to use his technical knowledge for the purpose of properly carrying on supervision, it cannot be held that he is employed to do technical work. A District Engineer also draws a salary in excess of Rs. 500 per mensem and, consequently, he cannot be held to be a workman. The decision of the Tribunal is, therefore, set aside in respect of the District Engineers also.

3. Foreman (Chemicals):

20. The Foreman (Chemicals) examined is M. D. Daniel. The claim of the Association was that he was employed essentially to do technical and manual work. In his evidence, he first described the work done by a Chemist which was a post held by him earlier. Giving the duties of the Foreman (Chemicals), he stated that the main part of his duties as Foreman is to be responsible for the blending of the chemicals. He admitted that the work of packing, capping and filling is done by labourers under his supervision. He himself makes only random checks in order to ensure that the labourers are doing the work properly. He admitted that he allots the work to the workmen under him who are 20 in number. Further, he had another 20 workmen under him for lorry filling of furnace oil. Though he denied that he was responsible for their discipline, he admitted that he makes reports to the officer-in-charge, chemicals, whenever an occasion arises. He signs gate passes and material vouchers. He recommends promotions of the men working under him and he is entitled to select a person for acting in a higher capacity for the day when the person occupying the higher job is absent. It is his duty to ensure maximum utilisation of man-power. Like Mathai, he has also signed chits for leave not exceeding 18 days as I/C. Department; but he has also pleaded that this signature was made in token of recommendation, and not sanction. The 20 workmen working under him in the chemical department include checkers, general workmen, packers and chemical mixers. These duties, which are performed by Daniel, on the face of it, are primarily and substantially those of a supervisory nature. His own manual work is only incidental and forms a small part of his duties. In dealing with his case, the Tribunal got slightly mixed up inasmuch as the facts relating to duties of Chemists were also taken into account. Daniel, who is now Foreman (Chemicals) was earlier a Chemist. The work performed by a Chemist should not, therefore, have been taken into account when determining what work Daniel is employed to do. The duties, mentioned above, clearly show that his principal duties are of a supervisory nature and the manual work done by him personally is only incidental. Since he also draws a salary in excess of Rs. 500/- per mensem, he must be held not to be a workman under exception (iv).

4. Fuelling Superintendents:

21. The duties of a Fuelling Superintendent were given to the Tribunal in the affidavit and evidence of V. M. Nabar who has been working as such since 1953. These duties can be broadly divided into two parts. Some duties he has to carry on at the depot where he personally takes charge and checks and counts the packed stocks, that is, cans, barrels, full and empty, and he maintains the packed stocks register. He dips every storage tank for quantity, quality and water. He himself carries to every storage tank equipment like manhole cover, dip tape, water finding paper and other articles. He takes the dip with the tape and notes down the reading. He checks the condition of the water finding paper by gently rubbing a finger on it. He removes water traces from the tank by swabbing, if necessary. He conducts continuity tests of discharge hoses. He calculates the quantity according to the dip from the calibration tables and completes the paper showing the dips and quantities for all the storage tanks. He makes similar entries in every tank book, and enters the loss or gain in the same book. He also carries out checks of static facilities, and maintains a book called quality control register. He himself notes down the time of arrival of the tank lorry on log sheet and carries out checks in accordance with the details of consignment forms. In the other part of the work, whenever oil is required to be delivered to an aircraft, the Fuelling Superintendent himself drives the tractor, on which are loaded oil pourers and a ladder, to the aircraft. It is he who takes the oil tank to the aircraft and then ensures the delivery of that oil to the aircraft in the required quantity. In this work, of course, he is assisted by some other workmen who actually do the work of connecting the oil tank to the tank of the aircraft or disconnecting it. Similar other minor manual work is done by the workmen who function under his control and direction. It is, however, clear that the main and substantial work which he does is not that of supervising the work done by the few workmen who assist him, but is his own manual work which he carries out at the depot as well as when delivering oil to the aircraft.

22. The Company's witness in respect of the Fuelling Superintendent is Des Raj Bhatia who tried to indicate that the manual or clerical work carried on by the Fuelling Superintendent is incidental or in emergent situations, while the Fuelling Superintendent is employed primarily to take over responsibility for all matters connected with the fuelling and oiling of aircraft with the use of oil dispensers, fuellers, and/or hydrant fuelling equipment. He compared the position of a Fuelling Superintendent to that of a playing captain of a hockey or football team and says that, while he himself has to work along with other members of the team, he is also required to assume over all responsibility for all operations prior to, during and after the delivery of fuel/oil to aircraft including the observance of a time schedule, safety and quality control. The fact that a Fuelling Superintendent is the leader of the team which carries out the work of fuelling, cannot convert his work into that of a supervisory nature. In fact, the admission that he is a member of the team implies that his principal work would be to do his own personal manual work as such member and, incidentally, he has also to be in charge of seeing that others, whose work has to be coordinated with his, do their work properly. The Tribunal was, therefore, correct in holding that a Fuelling Superintendent is not employed mainly or substantially to do supervisory work. On the other hand, his duties are mainly manual. Exception (iv) does not, therefore, apply to a Fuelling Superintendent and, even though the salary exceeds Rs. 500/- per mensem, a Fuelling Superintendent must be held to be a workman.

5. Chemists:

23. On the question of the duties carried out by a Chemist, the Association examined three witnesses. One of them is M. D. Daniel who had once worked as a Chemist and is now Foreman (Chemicals). The other two are A. N. Dalal and P. N. Marolia who are both working as Chemists. They have given their qualifications and the nature of work done by them. There are, no doubt, Assistants who assist the Chemists in the laboratory where their work is carried on; but all the Chemists do their own work which is of technical nature. The Chemists have to personally test the various products received, and also test the products as they are altered in the installations at various stages. All the tests are carried out by the Chemists personally and there are only a few Assistants who do mere routine work in order to assist the Chemist. The Chemists no doubt, ensure that the workmen assisting them do their work properly; but that small amount of supervisor is only incidental to their own technical work of testing and giving the results of tests to the Company. Even the Company's witness Harish Bhargava admitted that the Chemists do a large part of the work themselves, though he added that the Chemists do guide and direct the Analysts and Laboratory Attendant so as to ensure that the work in the laboratory is performed efficiently and properly. Even his evidence does not show that this guidance and direction to the laboratory attendant and analysts is the principal or substantial work for which a Chemist is employed. In fact, that work is ancillary to the main work which is done by the Chemists themselves. The decision of the Tribunal, consequently, in respect of the Chemists, holding them to be employed on technical work and not in supervisory capacity, must be upheld. They have rightly been held to be workmen.

6. Sales Engineering Representatives:

24. The witness on behalf of the Association is K. V. Rajan who filed an affidavit and was also cross-examined. He holds a Diploma in Mechanical and Electrical Engineering and has worked as a Sales Engineering Representative since 1955 at various places. In giving the duties of the Sales Engineering Representative, he first mentioned items of work that the Representative has to do himself. According to him, he has to guide the industrial concerns in use of different grades of fuels and lubricants, and has to give demonstrations and trials of Company's fuels and lubricants in major industrial concerns which are the customers. He says that the manual labour by him consists of demonstrating the method and manner in which the fuels and lubricants should be used and applied. He explains all details with regard to application of fuels and lubricants to the staff of the customer concerns, and he also attends to the difficulties experienced by the customers in the use of Company's products. He writes to the Divisional Office which, in turn, instructs the Sales Engineering Representative to attend to such complaints of the customers. He also gives technical advice to eliminate the complaints of the customers, and writes down the survey reports and submits them to the Divisional Office. He has to maintain files up-to-date regarding lubrication recommendation sheets sent by the Head Office to his Division. Then, in cross-examination, he admitted that the work that he does is for promoting the sales of lubricants and fuel oils, though he added that, in doing so, he uses his technical knowledge.

25. Manmohan Singh, Marketing Services and Planning Manager of the Company, explained that a Sales Engineering Representative is employed primarily to support the sales efforts by providing after sales service and advice to the customers on optimum utilisation of fuels and lubricants. According to him, the principal duty of a Sales Engineering Representative is to provide such service and to guide and supervise the workers employed in customers' plants to ensure efficient use of fuels and lubricants. His duties have been described as complementary to the duties of the District Sales Representative. He, however, did admit that the Sales Engineering Representative has to give demonstrations regarding use of fuels and lubricants, and such demonstrations are conducted by him, though part of the work in the demonstration is done by the workers of the customer concerns. It is true that there is no subordinate personnel attached to him. The Tribunal itself held that the main work to be performed by Sales Engineering Representative is promotion of sales which are canvassed primarily by District Sales Representative. This the Sales Engineering Representative does by giving technical advice, holding demonstrations and suggesting methods for making best use of the products sold. On these facts, the Tribunal, in our opinion, rightly held that the Sales Engineering Representative is not employed on supervisory work; but the Tribunal did not proceed further to examine whether he was employed on any other work of such a type that he could be brought within the definition of a workman. There is no suggestion at all that he was employed on clerical work or manual work. Reliance was placed on the word "technical" used in the definition of a workman. The amount of technical work that a Sales Engineering Representative does is all ancillary to his chief duty of promoting sales and giving advice. As we have held earlier, the mere fact that he is required to have technical knowledge for such a purpose does not make his work technical work. The work of advising and removing complaints so as to promote sales remains outside the scope of technical work. Consequently, the Tribunal's decision that the Sales Engineering Representative is a workman is set aside.

26. Next we take up the categories of members of the Association whose cases have been brought up by the Association in Civil Appeal No. 1478/1970. Mr. Chari on behalf of the appellant in this appeal did not argue all the cases of the four categories mentioned above. We, therefore, proceed to deal with only those categories of members of the Association whose cases have been argued before us by him.

1. Blending Supervisors:

27. It appears that there are two sets of persons working at the Wadilube Installations who are all designated as Blending Supervisors. Harish Bhargava, the Manager of the Installations, has described all Blending Supervisors as Foreman-Blending Supervisors. As we have said earlier, the mere description is, however, immaterial. What we have to see is the actual work done by them and to determine whether the work, which they are employed to do, makes them workmen or not.

28. V. V. Lele is the witness in respect of one set of Supervisors who work in the blending section of Wadilube plant. He works in the blending pump house and in the plant where the actual blending takes place. According to Lele, in connection with the duties to be performed by him, he receives a daily blending programme from the Operations Officer, and the blending has to be done in accordance with that programme and in conformity with the formulations supplied by the laboratory. For that purpose, he receives a test note from the laboratory before he starts the work of blending. He has himself to test the tank in order to find out whether it is clean or not. He personally connects by means of a hose pipe the blending tank to the pump line coming from the pump house on the ground floor. He then advises the pump house Foreman to start the pump, while he himself has to be constantly vigilant at the tank to ensure that the required quantity is taken up in the tank. As soon as the required quantity is received, he stops the pump by means of a remote control. He changes the hose pipe and puts it on to another line and keeps on this process as each tank is filled up. While receipt of the oil in the tank is going on, he himself operates steam and air valves in order to keep the oil at the required temperature and also maintains air agitation for mixing different basic oils. After the blending in the tank is over, he takes out samples personally, labels them properly and sends them to the laboratory for test purposes. On receipt of the test reports from the laboratory, he fills in the blending test notes quantity of different oils taken and sends them back to the laboratory. There are about 25 blending tanks which have to be attended to in this manner by two Blending Supervisors. After the blending is over, the Supervisor advises the barrel filling section and, if the blended oil is needed in that section, he sends the blended oil to that section; if that section does not require it, he transfers the blended oil to the settling tank. For these purposes, he again operates different line valves, so that the blends may drop into the particular settling tank. There are 20 such settling tanks. He has also to note the readings of the levels of the blending tanks as well as the settling tanks. He has to take stock personally of the barrels and other packages used and left unused in his section and writes down the same in the prescribed form. It is true that he has two persons working under him as Mazdoors and a Clerk comes to assist him only at the time of monthly checking. The Mazdoors, according to him, do only incidental work in aid of the main process of blending, such as moving empty tins, cleaning them, etc. He also does some work at the Port when a tanker arrives with oil from a foreign country and has to discharge it at the Port.

At that stage, no doubt, he supervises the work of discharge of the oil from the tanker and its receipt in the tanks at the Port. This supervisory work, it is clear, is a very minor part of his duties. The major part of his duties consists in himself operating various parts of the machinery and ensuring that oils are blended properly. Mr. Chari, in these circumstances, rightly claimed that a person employed as Blending Supervisor in the type of the work done by Lele is employed to do manual work and not supervisory work. The supervisory work is a minor part of his duties and, to some extent, incidental to the main work which is manual in character. Blending Supervisors, who work at the Plant in the manner indicated by Lele, are, therefore, persons employed on manual work and have to be held to be workmen. The decision of the Tribunal in respect of them is incorrect and is set aside.

29. Another set of persons are employed as Blending Supervisors at a different stage of the operations. The witness, who has come to give the duties of such Blending Supervisors, is M. C. Gomes. The Tribunal, in dealing with the work done by Gomes, appears to have got mixed up when it held that his duties are similar to the duties mentioned by Lele. Consequently, we were taken through the relevant evidence of Gomes and of Harish Bhargava on this point. It appears that, though Gomes is described as a Blending Supervisor, his employment is at a stage where the blending of oils has already been completed and the oils have been transferred to the settling tanks. According to Gomes, the Operations Officer gives him the programme for filling different oils in different packages, and he has to carry out that programme. He has first to see that oil in the settling tank is transferred to the small package tank by operating a pump. At this stage, he himself operates the pump by starting it, watching the gauge and stopping the running of the pump when the small package tank is full. Then, the oil is transferred from the small package tank to the filling machines. The fillers at the filling machines are then operated by other workmen to transfer the oil into the small package containers. Gomes has to see that this work of transferring the oil from the small package tank to the filling machines and from the filling machines into the containers is properly carried out by the persons working under him. All the work of bringing the barrels to the filling machines, of actually seeing that the barrels are filled up properly, and of sealing and labelling them properly, is physically done not by Gomes himself, but by men working under him whose work he supervises. No doubt, as a Supervisor, he has to set the weights on the machines and has to take samples of the products and send them to the laboratory; but the principal work entrusted to him is that of seeing that the barrels and other containers are properly filled up by the large number of workmen placed under his charge who actually carry out the physical work for that purpose. His duties are, thus, primarily supervisory; and the Tribunal's decision that Blending Supervisors doing the work of the nature done by Gomes are not workmen because they are all drawing a salary in excess of Rs. 500/- per mensem, is correct and is upheld.

30. It was mentioned that there was a third type of Blending Supervisors described as Supervisors (Small Packages Filling). Their work is quite similar to the work done by Gomes and, consequently, the decision of the Tribunal in respect of them is also correct and is upheld.

2. Foremen:

31. (i) One class of Foremen, whose case was argued before us by Mr. Chari, are described as Foremen (Tank Farm and Pump House) at the Sewree Installations. The witness on behalf of the Association is D. M. Telang. In his affidavit and evidence he tried to make out that he has to carry out three types of duties, technical, skilled manual and supervisory; but, on a careful examination of his evidence, the Tribunal has come to the finding that, of the three types of duties, his supervisory duties are the main and substantial part of his work, while other duties are only incidental. We are unable to find any error in the view taken by the Tribunal. He has about 25 workmen under him whose work he supervises. The Tribunal accepted the evidence of Company's witnesses, Harish Bhargava and Varkie for holding that such Foremen are primarily entrusted with the duty of supervising the work of the workmen in their respective sections. No technical knowledge is involved. Even when the oils are tested, the dips are not necessarily taken by the Foremen. The dips are usually taken by gaugers. The work of taking the dips, of reading the dips and of temperature readings does not require any technical knowledge. All that is necessary is to push a button. Varkie stated that quality control in Burmah Shell is a simple process which has to be carried out with the object of ensuring a clean product free of impurities. Even the work of draining of water from the tank is done by the gaugers under the supervision of the Foreman. It is the gauger who takes the pressure and, if it is abnormal, he informs the Foreman. Even Telang himself admitted that he was employed in a supervisory capacity, though he insisted that the work done by him was of technical, skilled manual, and supervisory character. It also appears that he has to supervise the work of as many as 25 workmen. It is for him to decide whether a man, who has asked for leave, can be spared. The Company's case was that, in fact, he grants leave to men working under him; but he denied this suggestion. Documentary evidence was, however, brought to our notice which shows that he has been actually sanctioning leave to workmen subordinate to him, when the leave asked for is earned leave. We looked at the leave applications and found that, in one case at least, he signed as recommending the leave, but cut out that signature and then signed it again at the place where the officer sanctioning the leave is required to sign. Even other persons, doing the same duty as Telang, were found to be similarly sanctioning leave. There was even one application where the recommendation for leave was by some other person, while Telang signed as the sanctioning officer. In a third case, Telang actually recorded reasons for refusing to sanction the leave. It appears that, at least in the case of Foremen (Tank Farm and Pump House), Varkie is right in stating that he had empowered the Foremen to grant leave, and Harish Bhargava is also correct in saying that powers of sanctioning leave are not retained by the Operations Officer. Telang admitted that he has to maintain discipline and has to report cases of indiscipline in his department. He allocates work to those who are working under him, and then gets it done by giving guidance. It is his job to see that the man-power is so utilised as to give maximum output. Considering all these duties, it is quite clear that the Tribunal was right in holding these Foremen not to be workmen, as they are employed in supervisory capacity and are drawing salary in excess of Rs. 500/- per mensem.

32. (ii) The other class of Foremen are described as Foremen (Tank Lorry Loading, Tank Wagon Loading and Tank Wagon Unloading). Mr. Chari claimed that these persons should be held to be workmen as they were employed to do skilled manual work. The facts found by the Tribunal clearly show that the actual loading and unloading in all cases is done by other persons and not by the Foremen themselves. The Foremen are, no doubt, responsible for proper loading and unloading; but this duty is discharged by supervising the work of manual labourers who actually perform the work of loading and unloading. Of course, when occasions arise, the Foreman may also lend a hand; but that would not make him a skilled manual worker. On the findings of fact recorded by the Tribunal, therefore, the decision that Foremen (Tank Lorry Loading, Tank Wagon Loading, and Tank Wagon Unloading) are not workmen is correct, as they also all draw a salary in excess of Rs. 500/- p. m.

3. Depot Superintendents:

33. With regard to the classification of Depot Superintendents, reliance was placed by the Association on the evidence of G. B. Athalye, and on some decisions in respect of Depot Superintendents of this very Company in other regions. After considering the evidence of Athalye and the Company's witnesses, the Tribunal, as a fact, held that a Depot Superintendent is in charge of all the stocks at a depot and his principal duty is to see that these stocks are properly received, stored and sent out. These stocks range in value between Rs. 4 lakhs to Rs. 6 lakhs. The Tribunal found that a Depot Superintendent has a complement of men working under him, the strength of which may vary from depot to depot. On an average, the persons employed are 5 to 7 out of whom 2 would be clerks, 3 to 4 would be workmen and one or two drivers. The Depot Superintendent has to get all the jobs done by these men and he guides them in their work. He is the senior-most officer at the Depot. He is not required to have any technical background. He allocates the work to the men working under him and sanctions leave to them. He is empowered to engage casual labour. He takes a review of the position of the strength prevailing and makes recommendations about the required strength. Within the area which is served by the depot, the Depot Superintendent plans and delivers the necessary supply. He can take decision regarding overtime work of the staff subordinate to him. He has to maintain discipline and has to report cases of indiscipline to the Head Office. Sometimes, he is empowered to hold inquiry in cases of indiscipline. Cases of minor indiscipline can be dealt with by him himself. In addition, the Depot Superintendent functions as Factory Manager under the Factories Act and also under the Shops and Establishments Act. The Depot Superintendent does the merit-rating of the clerks working under him. He also represents the management to some extent before outsiders. He is authorised to spend amounts within prescribed limits on behalf of the Company. He represents the Company and the Depot in dealings with the Railway and Municipal authorities. Of course, while carrying on these duties, he has also to ensure that the stock-registers are properly maintained. Where there is a clerk, the actual work of writing is done by the clerk; but, where there is no clerk, the Depot Superintendent may himself have to do all the writing work. This writing work done by the Depot Superintendent cannot be treated to be the substantial and main duty entrusted to him. On the facts enumerated above, it is quite clear that his principal duties are of a supervisory and managerial nature, while the clerical duties are only incidental.

34. Reliance was placed on the decision of the Labour Appellate Tribunal in Burmah-Shell Oil Storage and Distributing Company of India, Ltd. v. Their Employees, (1954) 1 Lab LJ 21 (LATI—Luck). In that case, it appears that the Depot Superintendent was found to be comparable with a mere store-keeper. The Depot Superintendent, in most cases, was the only person posted at the depot and, in very few cases, a clerk was given to assist him. It was found that the Depot Superintendent himself had to maintain the correspondence, and was responsible for stock receipt, storage and issue. He had to remain busy most of the time with completing company's standard forms and returns, and he had no powers of supervision over other members of the staff. On these facts, the Labour Appellate Tribunal held that his job was substantially of that of an intelligent and skilled clerk. This decision was upheld by the Madras High Court in Burmah-Shell Oil Storage and Distributing Co. of India, Ltd. v. Labour Appellate Tribunal of India, (1954) 2 Lab LJ 155 (Mad), when the decision of the Labour Appellate Tribunal was challenged by means of a writ. The High Court dismissed the writ petition and upheld the decision of the Labour Appellate Tribunal. These two decisions can be of no help, because the Depot Superintendents, with whom we are concerned, work under very different conditions. They are in charge of large depots and have, on an average, 5 to 7 employees working under them. The amount of clerical work done by them is only a minor part of their duties, while the principal duty is that of working as Manager of the depot and of supervising the work of the subordinates posted there.

35. As against these cases, there are two decisions of the Labour Appellate Tribunal in Burmah-Shell Oil Storage and Distributing Co. of India, Ltd. v. Their Workmen, (1955) 2 Lab LJ 153 (LATI—Bom) and Burmah-Shell Oil Storage and Distributing Co. of India, Ltd. v. Their Workmen, (1955) 2 Lab LJ 228 (LATI—Mad) in which the Labour Appellate Tribunal, after examining the evidence in detail, came to the view that the principal and substantial work done by a Depot Superintendent was administrative or supervisory and that the clerical work done was merely incidental. The facts of these two cases resemble more the facts found by the Tribunal in the case before us. Consequently, the decision given by the Tribunal that Depot Superintendents are employed on managerial or supervisory work and are not workmen is correct, because they all also draw a salary in excess of Rs. 500/- per mensem.

parties to bear their own costs in both the appeals.

Appeals partly allowed.

4. District Sales Representatives:

36. The case of the last category, viz., District Sales Representatives could not be seriously pressed by Mr. Chari before us. He did state that his claim is that they are employed to do clerical work; but the facts make it manifest that District Sales Representative is principally employed for the purpose of promoting sales of the Company. His main work is to do canvassing and obtain orders. In that connection, of course, he has to carry on some correspondence, but that correspondence is incidental to the main work of pushing sales of the Company. In connection with promotion of sales, he has to make recommendations for selection of agents and dealers; extension or curtailment of credit facilities to agents, dealers and customers; investments on capital and revenue in the shape of facilities at Agents' premises or retail outlets; and selection of suitable sites for retail outlets to maximise sales and negotiations for terms of new sites. He is, in fact, Company's representative in his district responsible for all matters affecting the Company's interests and, in particular, the profitable sale of all its products. His case was urged primarily on the basis of the argument advanced by Mr. Chari that the definition of "workman" is now exhaustive and every employee of an industry must be classed amongst one of the four classes described in the definition of workman. We have already given our reasons for rejecting this submission. The case of District Sales Representative is clearly that of a person who cannot fall within any of the four classes, because his work cannot be held to be either manual, clerical, technical or supervisory. The work of canvassing and promoting sales cannot be included in any of these four classifications. He is, therefore, not a workman at all within the principal part of the definition, and the decision of the Tribunal is correct.

37. As a result, both the appeals are partly allowed, and the decision of the Tribunal is varied to the extent indicated above. In the circumstances of this case, we direct

(A) Houses and Rents — Mysore Rent Control Act (22 of 1961), Section 21 (1), Proviso (j) — Eviction of tenant — Ground of — Reasonable and bona fide requirement of landlord for immediate demolition and rebuilding — Landlord need not prove that condition of building is such that it immediately requires demolition — (1964) 2 Mad LJ 147, Overruled.

A landlord who seeks recovery of possession of a premises under clause (j) of proviso to Section 21 (1) must satisfy the Court that he reasonably and bona fide requires the premises for the immediate purpose of demolishing it and erecting a new building in the place of the old one. Whether the landlord's requirement is reasonable and bona fide has to be judged by the surrounding circumstances, which will include his means for reconstruction of the building, and other steps taken by him in that regard. So also the desire of the landlord to put the property to a more profitable use after demolition and reconstruction is also a factor that may be taken into account in favour of the landlord. It is not necessary that the landlord should go further and establish under this clause that the condition of the building is such that it requires immediate demolition. In view of the specific provision in Cl. (k) with regard to the condition of the building requiring immediate demolition, Clause (j) can have no reference to that condition. Mr. M. C. Chagla, Sr. Advocate (Mr. R. Gopalakrishnan, Advocate, with him), for Appellant; Mr. M. K. Ramamurthi, Sr. Advocate (M/s. S. S. Javali and M. Veerappa, Advocates, with him), for Respondent.

VAIDIALINGAM, J.: — This appeal, by special leave, is against the judgment of the Mysore High Court, dated June 8, 1966 in Civil Revision Petition No. 1118 of 1964.

2. The respondent landlord filed an application, dated July 6, 1962 under Sec. 21 (1) (i) of the Mysore Rent Control Act, 1961 (Mysore Act XXII of 1961) (hereinafter called the Act) before the Rent Controller for eviction of the tenants (the appellants herein) on the ground that the premises were reasonably and bona fide required by him for the immediate purpose of demolishing and erecting of a new building. According to the respondent the premises were old and were not suitable for continued occupation. The respondent had also stated in his application that he had obtained the necessary licence for erecting a new building after demolition of the existing building and that he had made all preparations for demolition and erection of new buildings on the site. The appellant-tenant contested the claim of the landlord on several grounds. He pleaded that the premises were not old and that it was quite suitable for occupation and it does not require any reconstruction or re-modelling. The allegations that the building was old and required to be re-constructed were not bona fide and had been made by the landlord only as a pretext for evicting the tenant. The tenant further pleaded that the requirement of the landlord was neither reasonable nor bona fide. In any event, the tenant claimed that he should be entitled to be paid the value of the improvements that had been effected by him.

3. The Rent Controller, by his order dated January 22, 1964 accepted the claim of the respondent and ordered eviction of the appellant granting the tenant one month's time for delivering vacant possession. Though the Consulting Engineer who gave evidence as P. W. 2 on behalf of the respondent had stated that the building was over 60 years old but nevertheless it could go on for about 15 years more, the Rent Controller actually found that the building was more than 50 years old and that it was an old-fashioned one. He further found that when the landlord desired to pull it down and put up a modern building thereon, it could not, under the circumstances, be said that his claim was not bona fide or reasonable and that the intention of the landlord in pulling down the building and erecting a new one to get a better return was certainly understandable. The Rent Controller further found that the landlord had proved that he had sufficient means to construct the building and that he had also obtained the necessary sanction from the Municipality concerned for reconstruction of the building. In view of all these circumstances, the Rent Controller found that the requirement of the landlord was quite reasonable and bona fide. Regarding the claim of the tenant for payment of improvements before eviction is ordered, the Rent Controller found that such a claim even if established, could not stand in the way of landlord getting possession of the premises. Ultimately the application filed by the landlord was allowed.

4. The findings recorded by the Rent Controller were confirmed by the learned District Judge, by his judgment dated October 19, 1964 in A. S. No. 43 of 1964 taken before him by the tenant.

5. The revision filed by the appellant before the High Court was rejected by order dated June 8, 1966.

6. Mr. Chagla, learned counsel appearing for the appellant, contended that the interpretation placed by all the Courts on Section 21 (1) (i) of the Act was erroneous. According to the learned counsel, unless the landlord was able to establish that the condition of the building was such that it required immediate demolition and reconstruction, no eviction of the tenant could be ordered under Section 21 (1) (j) of the Act. On the findings of the Courts, based upon the evidence of the Engineer, that though the building was old it could continue to exist for another 15 years, it should have been held that the conditions mentioned in Section 21 (1) (j) were not attracted to justify an order of eviction of the tenant.

7. Mr. Ramamurthi, learned counsel for the respondent, pointed out that in order to attract Sec. 21 (1) (j) it was not necessary that the landlord should establish that the condition of the building was such that it required to be demolished immediately. On the other hand, the sub-section made it clear that the requirement contemplated was that of the landlord and once his requirement had been held by all the Courts to be reasonable and bona fide, the order passed for eviction of the tenant was fully justified.

8. Having due regard to the scheme of the Act, we are satisfied that the interpretation placed upon Section 21 (1) (j) by the High Court is correct.

9. Section 21 (1), while placing a general embargo against a landlord from evicting a tenant, recognises, in its proviso the circumstances under which a landlord could seek recovery of possession of a premises. The ground upon which the landlord asked for eviction, in the present case, was based on Section 21 (1) (j). The material provision is as follows:

"21. (1) Notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in any other law or contract, no order or decree for the recovery of possession of any premises shall be made by any Court or other authority in favour of the landlord against the tenant:

Provided that the Court may on an application made to it, make an order for the recovery of possession of a premises on one or more of the following grounds only, namely:—

(i) that the premises are reasonably and bona fide required by the landlord for the immediate purpose of demolishing them and such demolition is to be made for the purpose of erecting a new building in place of the premises sought to be demolished;

According to Mr. Chagla, the words 'reasonably and bona fide required', occurring in this clause, must be interpreted to have reference to the condition of the building, the demolition of which is sought to be made and those words have no reference to any intention entertained by the landlord. The mere fact that a landlord may bona fide and reasonably entertain an idea of demolishing the building and reconstructing the same with a view to putting the property to a more profitable use after construction, will not satisfy the requirements of the said clause. That is, according to the learned counsel, the condition of the building must be such that it is immediately necessary to demolish it, in which case alone eviction under Clause (j) could be ordered.

10. We are not inclined to accept this construction sought to be placed by the appellant on the clause in question.

11. The proviso to Section 21 (1) enumerates the various circumstances under which a landlord may seek to recover possession of the property from his tenant. The requirement contemplated under clause (i) of the proviso to sub-section (1) is that of the landlord and it does not have any reference to the condition of the building as such. What is necessary under that clause is that the landlord must satisfy the Court that he reasonably and bona fide requires the premises for the immediate purpose of demolishing it and the demolition is for the purpose of erecting a new building in the place of the old one. No doubt, as to whether the landlord's requirement is reasonable and bona fide has to be judged by the surrounding circumstances, which will include his means for reconstruction of the building, and other steps taken by him in that regard.

12. In considering the reasonable and bona fide requirement of the landlord under this clause, the desire of the landlord to put the property to a more profitable use after demolition and reconstruction is also a factor that may be taken into account in favour of the landlord. In our opinion, it is not necessary that the landlord should go further and establish under this clause that the condition of the building is such that it requires immediate demolition. That the condition of the property may be such which requires immediate demolition is emphasized in clause (k) of the proviso. When such a specific provision has been made in clause [k], the condition of the building cannot come into the picture nor could it have been dealt with again in Clause (j). So the requirement under Clause (j) is that of the landlord and cannot have any reference to the building.

13. This Court, in Neta Ram v. Jiwan Lal, (1962) Supp. 2 SCR 623 = (AIR 1963 SC 499) in interpreting no doubt a slightly differently worded provision in Section 13 (3) (a) (iii) of the Patiala and East Punjab States Union Urban Rent Restriction Ordinance, 2006 B. K. (8 of 2006 BK) held that one of the circumstances which could be taken into account in considering the requirements of the landlord with reference to the existing building is 'the possibility of its being put to a more profitable use after construction.' In the case before us all the Courts have concurrently held that the requirement of the landlord is reasonable and bona fide and that he had obtained the necessary sanction from the municipality concerned and that the landlord had also the means for reconstruction of the building. If the landlord does not commence demolition of the premises within the period specified in the order of the Court, the tenant is given a right under Section 26 (1) to issue a notice to the landlord of his intention to occupy the premises from which he had been evicted and also to apply to the Court for relief if the landlord does not comply with his request. Again, under Section 27, the tenant has got a right to occupy the new building on its completion provided he satisfies the requirements contained in that section. Under Section 28 (1), the landlord is bound to intimate the tenant from whom he had received a notice under Section 27 the date on which the erection of the new building will be completed from which date the tenant will be entitled to occupy the same.

14. Mr. Chagla has referred us to a decision of the Madras High Court in Mehsin Bhai v. Hale & Company, (1964) 2 Mad LJ 147. The section which came up for consideration before the Madras High Court was Section 14 (3) of the Madras Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act, 1960 (Act XVII of 1960) which was as follows:

"14 (1) (b) that the building is bona fide required by the landlord for the immediate purpose of demolishing it and such demolition is to be made for the purpose of erecting a new building on the site of the building sought to be demolished, pass an order directing the tenant to deliver possession of the building to the landlord before a specified date."

That clause is substantially similar to Section 21 (1) (j) of the Act. In the Madras case it is seen that the building from which the tenant was sought to be evicted was in good condition and there was no danger of its falling for another 20 years though the building was old. Under those circumstances when the landlord applied under Section 14 (1) (h) of the Madras Act for eviction on the ground that he wished to demolish the building for the purpose of erecting a new building thereon, the High Court affirmed the decision of the Subordinate Court declining relief to the landlord. Though the learned Judge states that landlords may bona fide require such buildings, particularly old buildings in their own interest for demolition and reconstruction, he holds that it is equally possible that the mere fact that a building is old may be taken advantage of by a landlord to put forth such pretext, his real object being ulterior and not bona fide for the purpose of reconstruction.

15. We have no hesitation in agreeing with the learned Judge's observation that the landlord must prove the reasonableness and bona fide nature of his requirement. But, if the learned Judge intended to lay down a proposition of law that under Section 14 (1) (h) of the Madras Act, similar to Section 21 (1) (j) of the Act a landlord cannot recover possession of the property for the purpose of reconstruction so as to put the property to a more profitable use, we are of the view that the decision of the Madras High Court must be considered to be erroneous. There is absolutely no justification for putting such a narrow interpretation on the clause in question.

16. Mr. Chagla further urged that before his client is evicted his claim for compensation should have been considered by the Rent Controller. It is enough to say that, as pointed out by the High Court, that claim does not arise for consideration in these proceedings. We may also state that a further contention regarding the validity of the notice to quit issued by the landlord which was taken before the High Court and held against the appellant, has not been canvassed before us.

17. In the result, the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. The petitioner/appellant undertakes to vacate the premises within a month from today.

Appeal dismissed.

Ashoka Marketing Ltd., Appellant
v. The State of Bihar and another, Respondents.

Civil Appeal No. 2004 of 1966, D/-30-1-1970.

(A) Sales Tax — Bihar Sales Tax Act (19 of 1959) (as amended by Act 20 of 1962), Section 20-A (3), (4), (5) and (8) — Sub-sections (3), (4) and (5) are ultra vires State Legislature — Sub-sections (6) and (8), as corollary thereto, are invalid.

Sub-sections (3), (4) and (5) of Section 20-A are ultra vires the State Legislature. As a corollary thereto sub-sections (6) and (8) are deemed invalid. C. W. J. C. No. 143 of 1966 D/- 14-3-1966 (Patna), Reversed; AIR 1964 SC 922, Rel. on; AIR 1961 SC 1438, Dist. (Para 18)

The intention underlying sub-sections (3), (4) and (5) is to enable the State to collect from the dealer tax which the State is not entitled to levy and to appropriate it to itself except in the very rare cases in which the purchaser may approach the State and be able to satisfy that he has a claim, that the claim is in order and that it is within limitation. Notwithstanding the addition of sub-section (8) the amount received or appropriated by the State continues to have the character of a tax collected which the State is not entitled to collect.

Entry 54, List II of the Seventh Schedule of the Constitution com-

prehends the power to impose tax, to prescribe machinery for collecting the tax, to designate officers by whom the liability may be imposed and to prescribe the authority, obligation and indemnity of the officers. The State Legislature may under the Entry be competent to enact a law in respect of matters necessarily incidental to "taxes on the sale and purchase of goods". But the provision contained in sub-sections (3), (4) and (5) compelling a dealer who has deliberately or erroneously recovered an amount from the purchaser on a representation that he is entitled to recover it to recoup himself for payment of tax, to pay over that amount to the State cannot be regarded as necessarily incidental to the entry. In effect the provision is one for levying an amount as tax which the State is incompetent to levy. A mere device cannot be permitted to defeat the provisions of the Constitution by clothing the claim in the form of a demand for depositing the money with the State which the dealer has collected but which he was not entitled to collect. (Para 12)

The power to demand an amount collected by the dealer applies to transaction governed by the Bihar Sales Tax Act, 1959 as well as to the pre-existing Acts. There is no period of limitation prescribed within which the demand for payment of tax collected by the dealer may be made. But an application under sub-section (8) for refund by the purchaser from whom the dealer has collected the amount is to be made before the expiry of the period within which the purchaser could have claimed the amount from the dealer by a Civil suit. In the light of the scheme of the Act it would be futile to expect that a purchaser would normally be able to enforce the liability of the State to pay the amount collected by the dealer and which is deposited or deemed to be deposited with the Government. The period of limitation does not commence to run from the date on which the money is deposited or deemed to be deposited into the Government treasury but from the date on which the purchaser may be entitled to file a suit against the dealer in civil Court and the State is in law under no obligation to hold the amount as trustee of the purchaser.

The power to legislate in respect of sub-sections (3), (4) and (5) does not fall under Entries 6, 7 and 13 of List III expressly nor can it be said that the power to legislate is necessarily incidental to the power contained in those entries. (Para 16)

It cannot be said that the first proviso of sub-section (8), which prescribes the period of limitation, alone may be declared ultra vires. For the first proviso does not invest the recovery with the character of tax. (Para 15)

(B) Sales Tax — Bihar Sales Tax Act (19 of 1959), Sections 3 and 7 — Liability of tax under Act is not on purchaser.

The liability to pay tax under the Act lies upon the dealer; he does not collect any tax for and on behalf of the Government. The dealer may recover from the purchaser the tax payable by him as part of the price but on that account the purchaser is not the person liable to pay tax on the sale to the State. (Para 11)

SHAH, J.: — Ashoka Marketing Ltd.—hereinafter called 'the assessee'—returned for the year 1956-57 under the Bihar Sales Tax Act, 1947, an amount of Rs. 2,46,67,517-1-6 as its turnover from sale of cement and other commodities. The Superintendent of Sales Tax brought to tax an additional amount of Rs. 7,67,702-13-0 being the railway freight paid in respect of the goods supplied by the assessee. By order dated April 2, 1961 the Appellate Authority set aside the order directing inclusion of the railway freight in the turnover, and ordered that the assessment be revised.

2. In the meantime the Bihar Sales Tax Act, 1947, was repealed and was replaced by the Bihar Sales Tax Act, 19 of 1959. By Act 20 of 1962, Section 20-A was introduced in the Bihar Sales Tax Act 19 of 1959. The relevant provisions of Section 20-A were:

"(1) No person who is not a registered dealer shall collect from any person any amount, by whatever name or description it may be called, towards or purporting to be tax on sale of goods.

(2) No registered dealer shall collect from any person any such amount, except in a case in which and to the extent to which such dealer is liable to pay tax under this Act.

(3) (a) Notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in any law or contract or any judgment, decree or order of any Tribunal, Court or authority, if the prescribed authority has reason to believe that any dealer has or had, at any time, whether before or after the commencement of this Act, collected any such amount, in a case in which or to an extent to which the said dealer was or is not liable to pay such amount, it shall serve on such dealer a notice in the prescribed manner requiring him on a date and at a time and place to be specified therein either to attend in person or through authorised representative to show cause why he should not deposit into the Government treasury the amount so collected by him.

(b) On the day specified in the notice under Clause (a) or as soon thereafter as may be, the prescribed authority may, after giving the dealer or his authorised representative a reasonable opportunity of being heard and examining such accounts and other evidence as may be produced by or on behalf of the dealer and making such further enquiry as it may deem necessary, order that the dealer shall deposit forthwith into the Government treasury, the amount found to have been so collected by the dealer and not refunded prior to the receipt of the notice aforesaid to the person from whom it had been collected.

"(4) Where any amount so collected by the dealer and deposited by him into the Government treasury has already been refunded to the dealer in pursuance of, or as a result of any judgment, decree or order of any Tribunal, Court or authority, but the dealer has not refunded the amount to the person from whom he had collected it, the prescribed authority shall, notwithstanding such refund to the dealer, proceed to take action in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (3) for securing deposit of such amount.

(5) Where any such amount has not been refunded to the dealer before the commencement of this Act but a refund has been directed by a Court, Tribunal or authority, the amount shall notwithstanding such direction, be deemed to be a deposit made in pursuance of an order under sub-section (3).

(6) * * *

(7) Notwithstanding anything to the contrary in any law or contract, when any amount is deposited by a dealer in compliance with an order under sub-section (3) or sub-section (4) or is deemed, under sub-section (5), to have been so deposited, such deposit shall constitute a good and complete discharge of the liability of the dealer in respect of such amount to the person from whom it was collected.

(8) The person from whom the dealer has collected the amount deposited in pursuance of an order under sub-section (3) or sub-section (4) or deemed, under sub-section (5), to have been so deposited shall be entitled to apply to the prescribed authority in the prescribed manner for refund of the amount to him and the said authority shall allow the refund if it is satisfied that the claim is in order:

Provided that no such refund shall be allowed unless the application is made before the expiry of the period within which the applicant could have claimed the amount from the dealer by a civil suit had his liability not been discharged in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (7):

Provided further that no claim for such refund shall be rejected without giving the applicant a reasonable opportunity of being heard.

3. On July 31, 1963, the Assistant Commissioner of Commercial Taxes, Shahabad Circle, issued a notice under Section 20-A (3) of the Bihar Sales Tax Act, 1959, requiring the assessee to show cause why an amount of Rs. 23,990-11-0 being the sales-tax on the railway freight which had become refundable under the order of assessment be not forfeited. The assessee in reply contended, inter alia, that Section 20-A of the Bihar Sales Tax Act was ultra vires the State Legislature and that in any case it had no application to his case. The Assistant Commissioner of Commercial Taxes rejected the contention and passed an order directing that the amount of Rs. 23,990-11-0 do stand forfeited to the Government and further directed that the amount be deposited in the Government treasury.

4. The assessee then moved a petition before the High Court of Patna under Article 226 of the Constitution for a writ quashing the order of the Assistant Commissioner of Commercial Taxes and for consequential orders restraining recovery of the amount. The High Court of Patna, relying upon the judgment of this Court in The Orient Paper Mills Ltd. v. The State of Orissa, (1962) 1 SCR 549 = (AIR 1961 SC 1438) rejected the petition. With special leave, this appeal has been preferred.

5. Two questions fall to be determined in this appeal:—

(1) Whether Section 20-A of the Bihar Sales Tax Act, 1959 is within the competence of the State Legislature; and

(2) Whether an order may be made under Section 20-A for depositing with the State Government an amount collected by a registered dealer from his constituent to recoup himself for payment of sales-tax under the Bihar Sales Tax Act, 1947 which amount, according to law then in force the constituent was not liable to pay. Counsel for the assessee, relying upon the judgment in R. Abdul Quader and Co. v. Sales Tax Officer, Hyderabad, (1964) 6 SCR 867 = (AIR 1964 SC 922) contended that an Act passed by a State Legislature authorising the State Government to recover an amount collected under a sale, by a registered dealer from the purchaser, to recoup himself for payment of sales-tax, which was not liable to tax, is beyond the competence of the State Legislature. In Abdul Quader's case, (1964) 6 SCR 867 = (AIR 1964 SC 922) the Court was dealing with the interpretation of Section 11 (2) of the Hyderabad

General Sales Tax Act 14 of 1950. By Section 11 (2) it was provided:

"Notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in any order of an officer or tribunal or judgment, decree or order of a Court, every person who has collected or collects on or before the 1st May, 1950, any amount by way of tax otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of this Act shall pay over to the Government within such time and in such manner as may be prescribed the amount so collected by him, and in default of such payment the said amount shall be recovered from him as if it were arrears of land revenue".

This Court held that Section 11 (2) of the Hyderabad General Sales Tax Act provided for recovery of an amount collected by way of tax, as arrears of land revenue though the amount was not due as tax under the Act. In rejecting the contention that the provision fell within Entry 54, List II, the Court observed (at p. 872 of SCR) = (at p. 924 of AIR):

"The provision however is attempted to be justified on the ground that though it may not be open to a State legislature to make provision for the recovery of an amount which is not a tax under Entry 54 of List II in a law made for that purpose, it would still be open to the legislature to provide for paying over all the amounts collected by way of tax by persons, even though they really are not exigible as tax, as part of the incidental and ancillary power to make provision for the levy and collection of such tax. * * * * *

"* * * But where the legislation under the relevant entry proceeds on the basis that the amount concerned is not a tax exigible under the law made under that entry, but even so lays down that though it is not exigible under the law, it shall be paid over to Government, merely because some dealers by mistake or otherwise have collected it as tax, it is difficult to see how such provision can be ancillary or incidental to the collection of tax legitimately due under a law made under the relevant taxing entry".

An attempt to sustain the validity of the provision as one imposing a penalty was also negatived, and the Court held that Section 11 (2) of the Hyderabad General Sales Tax Act was not within the competence of the State Legislature.

6. In Abdul Quader's case, (1964) 6 SCR 867 = (AIR 1964 SC 922) this Court held that in exercise of the power under Entry 54 List II, the State Legislature is incompetent to enact a law authorising the State Government to call upon a dealer to pay an amount which he has collected from the purchaser of goods under a sale, to recoup himself for payment of tax which he is not liable to pay in respect of that transaction, for such a law authorises a levy of tax which the State Legislature is incompetent to levy.

7. The learned Advocate General for the State of Bihar, however, contended that the legislation impugned in this case is in truth not for levy or collection of an amount as tax which the State is not competent to levy or collect, but for compelling a registered dealer to pay over the amount collected on behalf of the State as tax so that it may be made available to a person from whom it was unlawfully recovered. He contends that the legislation which is not of the nature which this Court was called upon to interpret in Abdul Quader's case, (1964) 6 SCR 867 = (AIR 1964 SC 922) falls within Entry 54, List II, and that in any event it falls within Entries 6, 7 and 13 of List III.

8. Counsel strongly relied upon the judgment of this Court in The Orient Paper Mill's case, (1962) 1 SCR 549 = (AIR 1961 SC 1438). But the principle of that case, in our judgment, has no bearing on the question whether the State by statute was competent to enact Section 20-A of the Bihar Sales Tax Act in exercise of the power under Entry 54, List II of the Seventh Schedule. In that case a registered dealer had collected, in respect of sales-tax, from the purchasers amounts for recoupment of tax which he would have to pay to the State Government under the Orissa Sales Tax Act, 1947, in the belief that the tax was payable. The dealer was assessed to and paid tax on the turnover which included inter-State sales. After the decision of this Court in State of Bombay v. United Motors (India), Ltd., (1953) 3 SCR 1069 = (AIR 1953 SC 252) the dealer applied under Section 14 of the Act for refund of tax paid on the plea that the turnover from inter-State sales was not taxable. The High Court of Orissa issued writs directing the amount of tax collected by the State to be refunded. Therefore by an amendment of the Act, the State Legislature incorporated Section 14, providing that refund of tax may be claimed only by the person from whom the dealer had realised the amount by way of sales-tax or otherwise. At the hearing of the petition, the tax-payer challenged the levy on the ground that it infringed his fundamental right under Article 19 (1) (f) and did not press the contention that the State Legislature was incompetent to enact Section 14-A of the Orissa Sales Tax Act. This Court observed that the power to legislate with respect to a tax comprehends the power to impose the tax, to prescribe machinery for collecting the tax to designate the officers by whom the liability may be enforced and to prescribe the authority, obligation and indemnity of these officers. It was then observed:

"The Legislature of the Orissa State was therefore competent to exercise power in respect of the subsidiary or ancillary matter of granting refund of tax improperly or illegally collected, and the competence of the Legislature in this behalf is not canvassed by counsel for the assessee. If competence to legislate for granting refund of sales-tax improperly collected be granted, is there any reason to exclude the power to declare that refund shall be claimable only by the person from whom the dealer has actually realised the amounts by way of sales-tax or otherwise? We see none."

The Court then rejected the contention that Section 14-A was invalid, because it impaired the fundamental right under Art. 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution. That case does not support the plea that the State Legislature is competent to legislate for demanding payment of or retaining amounts recovered by registered dealer but which are not due as sales-tax to the State.

9. The learned Advocate-General contended that in any event the impugned provision is not of the nature which this Court was concerned to interpret in Abdul Quader's case, (1964) 6 SCR 867 = (AIR 1964 SC 922). He said that whereas in Abdul Quader's case, (1964) 6 SCR 867 = (AIR 1964 SC 922) the Court was dealing with a case in which the State Legislature enacted a law authorising the State to recover and appropriate to itself amounts collected by a dealer on the representation that he—the dealer was entitled to recoup himself for payment of sales-tax which he was not liable to pay, in the present case the amount either collected or retained by the State from the dealer is to be held for the benefit of the person from whom it has been improperly collected. On that account, the Advocate-General contended, the Legislature exercised its power for setting up machinery for compelling refund of amounts collected by the dealer under the authority of the Legislature (sic) which he could not in law collect. Counsel, argued that Entry 54, List II authorises the State Legislature to legislate for collection of an amount which has been improperly collected by a registered dealer as tax on behalf of the State and for refunding the amount to the person from whom it has been improperly collected.

10. This argument proceeds upon two assumptions: (1) that under the Bihar Sales Tax Act the purchaser of goods is liable to pay sales-tax to the State, and the registered dealer collects the tax from the purchaser as an agent of the State; and (2) that the amount recovered from the registered dealer under Section 20-A is intended only to be refunded to the person from whom it has been collected by the registered dealer, and the State is merely an agency for enforcing the obligation of the dealer.

11. The first assumption is plainly contrary to the scheme of the Bihar Sales Tax Act, 1959. By Section 3 charge of tax lies upon every dealer whose gross turnover during a period not exceeding twelve months immediately preceding exceeds the specified amount. The expression "gross turnover" is defined in Section 2 (k) as meaning "the aggregate of the amounts of sale-prices received and receivable by a dealer, during any given period, in respect of sale of goods (x x x)", and the expression "sale-price" is defined in Section 2 (q) as meaning "the amount payable to a dealer as valuable consideration in respect of the sale of goods". By subsection (2) of Section 3 tax is made payable by a dealer on sales made inside the State, and when the dealer sells goods, the price received by him for sale of goods forms a component of the gross turnover and the dealer is liable to pay tax on the turnover. The Act does not impose liability to pay tax upon the purchaser either directly or indirectly. Under Section 7, it is true, the taxable turnover of a dealer is determined to be that part of the gross turnover which remains after deducting several items including the amount of sales-tax actually "collected as such", along with the sale-price received or receivable in respect of sale of goods. It is implicit that the dealer may recover from the purchaser in addition to the value of the goods a certain amount which he will have to pay as tax on that value. The price payable by the purchaser on that account is the value of the goods and the amount paid for recouping the dealer for payment of tax. The Act enables the dealer to pass on the liability of sales-tax to the purchaser and if by invoice or otherwise the dealer charges in respect of the goods sold by him the value of the goods and the tax which he may have to pay on the value, sales-tax will be computed on the value of the goods and not on the total amount paid by the purchaser. The amount payable by the purchaser is however the consideration paid by him for purchasing the goods. The dealer may apportion the value of the goods and the sales-tax payable by him on the sale to the State. If he does so, he is liable to pay sales-tax only on the value and not on the amount of tax collected by him which he is payable as sales-tax to the State. If he does not apportion the value and the tax, he is liable to pay sales-tax on the total amount received by him, calculated at the appropriate rate. In either case the liability to pay tax under the Act lies upon the dealer: he does not collect any tax for and on behalf of the Government. The dealer may recover from the purchaser the tax payable by him as part of the price, but on that account the purchaser is not the person liable to pay tax on the sale to the State.

12. A provision which enables the dealer to pass on the liability for payment of tax is incidental to legislation for sales-tax. But we are unable to hold that a provision under which a dealer is called upon to pay to the State an amount which has been collected by him on a representation—express or implied—that an equal amount is payable by him under the Bihar Sales Tax Act, is a provision incidental to the power to levy "tax on sale or purchase of goods" within the meaning of Entry 54, List II of the Seventh Schedule. Entry 54, List II of the Seventh Schedule, comprehends the power to impose tax, to prescribe machinery for collecting the tax, to designate officers by whom the liability may be imposed and to prescribe the authority, obligation and indemnity of the officers. The State Legislature may under Entry 54, List II be competent to enact a law in respect of matters necessarily incidental to "taxes on the sale and purchase of goods". But a provision compelling a dealer who has deliberately or erroneously recovered an amount from the purchaser on a representation that he is entitled to recover it to recoup himself for payment of tax, to pay over that amount to the State cannot, in our judgment, be regarded as necessarily incidental to Entry 54, List II. In effect the provision is one for levying an amount as tax which the State is incompetent to levy. A mere device cannot be permitted to defeat the provisions of the Constitution by clothing the claim in the form of a demand for depositing the money with the State which the dealer has collected, but which he was not entitled to collect.

13. The learned Advocate-General contended that sub-section (8) of Section 20-A authorises the person from whom the dealer has collected the amount deposited in pursuance of an order under sub-sections (3), (4), or deemed to have been so deposited under sub-section (5), to apply to the prescribed authority for refund of the amount to him and the authority is obliged, if satisfied about the claim, to make that refund. The power to demand an amount collected by the dealer applies to transactions governed by the Bihar Sales Tax Act, 1959, as well as to the pre-existing Acts. There is no period of limitation prescribed within which the demand for payment of amounts collected by the dealer may be made. But an application for refund is to be made before the expiry of the period within which the purchaser could have claimed the amount from the dealer by a civil suit. In the light of the scheme of the Act and the various provisions made, it would be futile to expect that a purchaser would normally be able to enforce the liability of the State to pay the amount collected by the dealer and which is deposited or deemed to be deposited with the Government. The period of limitation does not commence to run from the date on which the money is deposited or deemed to be deposited into the Government treasury but from the date on which the purchaser may be entitled to file a suit against the dealer in a civil Court. The State is in law under no obligation to hold the amount as trustee for the purchaser. The amount to be recovered or appropriated remains part of the Consolidated Fund of the State and becomes the property of the State.

14. Sub-section (8) of S. 20-A, in our judgment does not alter the true nature of the demand or appropriation which can be made under sub-sections (3), (4) and (5) of Section 20-A. The intention underlying sub-sections (3), (4) and (5) is to enable the State to collect from the dealer tax which the State is not entitled to levy and to appropriate it to itself except in the very rare cases in which the purchaser may approach the State and be able to satisfy that he has a claim, that the claim is in order, and that it is within limitation. Notwithstanding the addition of sub-section (8), in our judgment, the amount received by the State or appropriated by the State continues to have the character of a tax collected which the State is not entitled to collect.

15. The learned Advocate-General contended that assuming that the first proviso of sub-section (8) of Section 20-A which prescribes the period of limitation is indicative of the nature of the claim, that proviso alone may be declared ultra vires, and the remaining provisions declared valid. But the first proviso to sub-section (8) does not invest the recovery with the character of tax: the provisions of sub-sections (3), (4) and (5) invest the recovery with the nature of a levy of tax which the State is not entitled to collect, and sub-section (8) is merely an attempt to disguise the true nature of the claim. We are, therefore, unable to accede to the contention of the learned Advocate-General.

16. It was then contended that the power to legislate in respect of recovery of the amount collected by a dealer which in law he is not entitled to collect, falls within Entries 6, 7 and 13 of List III. These entries are in the Concurrent List and provide:

"6. Transfer of property other than agricultural land; registration of deeds and documents.

7. Contracts, including partnership, agency, contracts of carriage, and other special forms of contracts, but not including contracts relating to agricultural land.

13. Civil Procedure, including all matters included in the Code of Civil Procedure at the commencement of this Constitution, limitation and arbitration."

We fail to appreciate how power to legislate in respect of Entries 6, 7 and 13 would authorise the State Legislature to legislate in respect of recovery from the dealer of an amount which the dealer was in law not entitled to collect, but which he has collected. The power to legislate in respect of sub-sections (3), (4) and (5) of Sec. 20A does not fall under Entries 6, 7 and 13 of List III expressly, nor can it be said that the power to legislate is necessarily incidental to the power contained in Entries 6, 7 and 13 List III. As already pointed out, this Court in the judgment in Abdul Quader's case, (1964) 6 SCR 867 = (AIR 1964 SC 922) has clearly held that the State has no power to legislate for recovering amount which is collected by the taxpayer in order to recoup himself for payment of tax which under the law he is not bound to pay. Even though the competence of the State to legislate was not sought to be supported under Entries 6, 7 and 13 of List III, the decision of the Court plainly implies that the State has no such power under any Entry in the third List.

17. On the view we have expressed, we do not deem it necessary to express any opinion on the second question. We may observe that validity of sub-sections (1) and (2) of Section 20-A has not been challenged.

18. We are of the view that the appeal must be allowed, and the petition of the assessee must be granted. It is declared that sub-sections (3), (4) and (5) of Section 20-A are ultra vires the State Legislature. As a corollary thereto sub-sections (6) and (8) shall be deemed invalid. The assessee will be entitled to its costs in this Court and the High Court. There will be one hearing fee in C. As. 2004 and 2005 of 1966.

Appeal allowed.

Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 423 (1) (a) — High Court has no power to set aside acquittal in appeal without giving due weight to the reasons given by trial Court in rejecting prosecution evidence — AIR 1968 SC 1390, Rel. on; Judgment of Bom. High Court in Criminal Appeal No. 1758 of 1966, decided on 15-1-1968, Reversed.

In appeals against acquittal while the powers of the High Court are no different from its powers in ordinary appeal against conviction, the High Court has to consider all the matters which weighed with the Trial Court and the reasons given by it for disbelieving the witnesses whose demeanour it had opportunity of observing. The High Court must dispel the reasons effectively before taking a contrary view of the matter.

of murder under Section 302 read with Section 34 of the Indian Penal Code. Against this Judgment the Appellants have come up in an Appeal before us by special leave.

2. The prosecution case is that the deceased Shantaram Sakharam Chawan, Dinker Pednekar P. W. 1. Sadu Shetty, P. W. 8 and Krishnan Chandan P. W. 10 as well as the first accused Keshav Gangaram Navge and one Gopal Parab were working in the Digvijay Mills at Bombay. In the Mills there were two workers Unions. one was Rastriya Mill Mazdur Sangh (also known as INTUC) hereinafter called Mazdur Sangh and the other was Girri Kamgar Union hereinafter called the Kamgar Union. A large number of workers belonged to the Mazdur Sangh while the Kamgar Union which was stated to have communist affiliation did not have sufficient following and was generally engaged in trying to get more workers to join it in which attempt it came into conflict with the Mazdur Sangh. The deceased Shantaram and the prosecution witnesses Dinker, Sadu Shetty and Krishnan Chandan belonged to the Kamgar Union while the accused Keshav and Gopal who is not examined, belonged to the Mazdur Sangh.

3. It appears that the Digvijay Mills had declared bonus for the year 1963 in consultation with the Government and the leaders of the Mazdur Sangh but the Kamgar Union was of the view that that bonus was very low, and blamed the Mazdur Sangh for not making sufficient efforts to procure a higher rate of bonus. This dispute between the two Unions went on for about a year before the incident. On 19th October, 1965 the deceased and the prosecution witnesses referred to above and the accused and Gopal Parab hereinafter referred to as Gopal worked in the 1st shift which started at 7 a. m. and ended at 3 p. m. The prosecution case is that after the first shift was over the workers gathered in the Mill compound in the open space in front of the Manager's office and wanted the Manager to give an explanation as to why the bonus for the year 1963 was low and how it was that the Mazdur Sangh had been party to the agreement arrived at between the owners and the leaders of that Mazdur Sangh. At that meeting which it is said was not pre-arranged but spontaneous, the deceased and Dinker spoke on behalf of the Kamgar Union. They said that though the Mills have made good profit in the year 1963 the bonus declared by them were very low and wanted to know from the Manager as to why that bonus was so low. The Manager told the workers that the bonus was declared after consultation with the Mazdur Sangh leaders and it was justified. The first accused also spoke at the meeting as representative of the Mazdur Sangh. He told them that the bonus was decided in consultation with the Mill owners and the leaders of the Mazdur Sangh, that he as ordinary worker of the Mazdur Sangh could not give any explanation as to why the bonus for 1963 was low. The workers however, insisted that the Manager should send for the Mazdur Sangh leaders and should be asked to give their explanation. The Manager accordingly phoned the Mazdur Sangh office and asked them to send their representative to address the meeting but the Mazdur Sangh told the Manager that they were not in a position to send anybody from the office and if any worker wanted to know the real position they should be directed to the Mazdur Sangh Office. This message the Manager conveyed to the workers but the workers were in no mood to go to the Mazdur Sangh Office. After some discussion amongst the workers the meeting came to an end at about 5.30 p. m. After the meeting the deceased Shantaram, Dinker, Sadu Shetty left the Mills to go to the Bus stop which is some distance away from the Mills as Sadu Shetty wanted to go by bus to Chembur where he lived. They reached the bus stop and as they were waiting for a bus Accused 1, Accused 2 Bhagwan who was not working in the Mills and Gopal who also worked in the Mills came from the direction of Digvijay Mills to the bus stop and on seeing the deceased Shantaram, Dinker and Sadu Shetty, Accused Bhagwan rushed at Dinker, caught hold of his shirt and gave a fist blow in his stomach. Keshav A-1 took out a knife and gave a stab blow in the abdomen of Shantaram. On receiving the stab blow Shantaram pressed his injury with one hand and bent down. Gopal tried to intervene but accused 2 took out a hammer from under his shirt and hit the deceased on his head. Thereafter both the accused and Gopal ran away. Dinker took Shantaram across the Lalbaug Road which is on the other side of the Road, hailed a Taxi and took him in that Taxi to Kala-Chowki Police Station. At the Police Station Dinker reported about the incident to S. I. Jayawantrao Suryavanshi P. W. 17. Suryavanshi immediately directed the P. C. Kadam P. W. 4 to take Shantaram to the K. E. M. Hospital in that Taxi which he did. After sending the deceased to the Hospital Suryavanshi recorded the statement of Dinker and issued the F. I. R. at about 6 p. m. after which he went to the K. E. M. Hospital and recorded Shantaram's statement at about 6.45 or 7 p. m. It is also the prosecution case that on the way to the Hospital Kadam asked the deceased about the incident and the deceased is said to have made a statement to him which he recorded in his notebook at the Hospital before he left for the Police Station at 7 p. m. It is after this, that the S. I. Suryavanshi came and recorded the statement of Shantaram. Sita Ram P. W. 15 brother of Shantaram, who is said to have learnt from his wife that Shantaram was stabbed by some one went to the K. E. M. Hospital after first making enquiries at the Police Station. On seeing the deceased when Sita Ram enquired from him as to what had happened, the deceased told him that Keshav Navge had stabbed him in the stomach and Bhagwan hit him on his head with the hammer. After recording the statement of the deceased Suryavanshi along with Dinker went to Lalbaug bus stop where the assault on Shantaram is said to have taken place and made a Panchnama. He made enquiries from the persons living near the bus stop where there were shops and returned to the Police Station. It may be stated that the deceased died at 2 A. M. on the 20th. Accused 2 was arrested on the morning of 21st while Accused 1 came to the Kala Chowki Police Station and surrendered himself.

3-A. The case of the accused in the statement under Section 342, Criminal Procedure Code is that he has been working for the INTUC for the past 16 years and before the incident he was working for the Digvijay Mills and that the incident did not take place as alleged by the prosecution nor did it take place at the bus stop. According to him there has always been rivalry between him and the deceased because of the activities of the rival Trade Unions. In the afternoon of the day of the incident a meeting had taken place of the workers of the Mill in the Mill compound immediately after the end of the 1st shift at 3 p. m. and that in the meeting the bonus issue was discussed and he spoke at that meeting. He narrated all that took place at that meeting and how Shantaram and Dinkar attacked him while speaking in that meeting, etc., and how he had to defend himself and had to give an explanation. According to him the workers insisted that he should go to the INTUC office and get INTUC leaders to the Mill but he said this was beyond his powers. Bhagwan A-2 who was once employed in the Mills but had lost his job and wanted him to help, did come to see him that afternoon as he had asked him to do so. After leaving the Mills Bhagwan, Gopal and he went to a tea shop which is near the Mill and after spending 10/15 minutes there all of them started for the INTUC office. A-1 further stated that as generally there are gangs of communists on the way to the INTUC office he avoided going through the lane, but all of them walked along the Ambedkar Road and went to the cross roads and when they were near the Lamp post on that road he heard Shantaram accosting him by name and began to abuse him. The deceased said, "You are a pimp of the Mill owners, you take money from the Mill owners and do harm to the workers". When the accused protested Shantaram took out a knife on seeing which the accused got frightened and caught his hand in which he was holding the knife. Gopal intervened. Dinkar, Sadu Shetty and Krishnan Chandan came to Shantaram's help. He and Shantaram struggled with each other but A-1 says he caught hold of Shantaram's hand tightly. Dinkar took out a hammer from below his shirt and wanted to rush at him and hit him on the head but when he moved aside and evaded the blow, the hammer blow accidentally landed on Shantaram's head. On receiving this blow on his head the deceased started falling down and while falling down the knife which the deceased was holding in his hand struck against his stomach and he fell down. He further states that he was warned and as he apprehended being assaulted he did not go to his house or the Mills. Accused Bhagwan also made a similar statement and denied that he had assaulted Dinkar or that he had assaulted the deceased Shantaram.

4. The learned Sessions Judge disbelieved the evidence of the 3 eye witnesses Dinkar, Sadu Shetty and Krishnan Chandan and held that these three, the deceased and all other Union workers of the Mill were in a fighting mood, that the deceased, spoke contemptuously about Accused No. 1 and he and the aforesaid persons were on the war path on the day of the incident. He disbelieved the version of the eye witnesses that the incident took place at Lalbaug bus stop and gave four reasons for this conclusion which are: (1) No blood was found on the Lalbaug bus stop; (2) No persons from the locality were examined by the prosecution to support this version; (3) The eye witnesses were admittedly members of the Kamgar Union which is on inimical terms with the INTUC to which Accused No. 1 belongs, and; (4) All the three eye witnesses have personal enmity with accused No. 1 and that they had insulted him in the open meeting.

5. The evidence of the eye witnesses was examined in great detail and the discrepancies in each of the witnesses was pointed out. For the reasons stated by him the Additional Sessions Judge disbelieved the evidence of the eye witnesses who he said had spoken about the incident in a parrot like manner. He likewise examined the probative value of the 3 dying declarations and rejected them. He placed no reliance on the version of P. C. Kadam that he had made an entry of what the deceased told him in the Taxi immediately after he went to the Hospital nor on the statement of Inspector Keshav Kagji P. W. 18 because when he recorded the statement of Kadam who had produced the entry he did not take charge of his Diary. The learned Judge did not therefore attach any credence either to the oral evidence of Kadam or on the entry made in the Diary. The dying declaration spoken to by Sitaram brother of the deceased was also disbelieved because not only was there a possibility of Sitaram finding out from the Police Station that the deceased had been assaulted by accused Keshav and Bhagwan but also that he could not be considered to be disinterested. The dying declaration recorded by Suryavanshi was rejected because on his own version the possibility of Suryavanshi putting some leading question to the deceased and recording suitable answers from the deceased could not be ruled out. He also disbelieved the evidence relating to the recovery of the hammer from accused No. 2. The learned Judge further held that the evidence given by the witnesses Dinkar, Sadu Shetty and Krishnan Chandan supports and corroborates the version of Accused No. 1 that he was apprehending danger to his life and therefore had gone to the house of a relation in Bombay and consequently his absence from the Mill and his residence would not amount to his having absconded.

6. The High Court relied on the dying declaration made by deceased to Kadam as also on that recorded by Suryavanshi though it rejected the dying declaration spoken to by Sitaram, the brother of the deceased.

7. In so far as the evidence of eye witnesses was concerned the reasons given by the Additional Sessions Judge, the discrepancies and the improbabilities of the version of those witnesses pointed out by him have not been considered by the learned Judges of the High Court. The general comment of the High Court was that the allegation that Dinker and the deceased referred to the incident of India United Mills and their speeches in which violence was advocated against Accused 1 and the office bearers of the Mazdur Sangh and the alleged previous enmity between accused 1 and the deceased due to which there was a likelihood of the deceased, Dinkar and Krishnan Chandan planning an attack against accused 1 who was going along with Accused 2 was ingeniously built up and depended only on mere suggestions which was denied by witnesses. The criticism that Dinkar did not take deceased to the Police Chowki which was opposite but had taken him to the Kala Chowki Police Station or that the Police did not get independent witnesses even though the incident is said to have taken place in front of shops when there would be passers-by, was not considered valid. With respect to the allegation that the police did not try to contact the Taxi driver or examine him, the High Court observed that there is another aspect of this matter namely that the police had no inkling about the case which the accused were going to develop till it was made in the Sessions Court and had it been set up earlier probably the Police Officers would not have left this lacuna in their investigation. On this aspect it was observed "when Accused No. 2 was arrested and when Accused No. 1 surrendered himself at the Police Station, the Police would have examined the spot now spoken of by these two accused. In every probability the accused may either have admitted their guilt before the police or may have kept their mouth shut which they are, in law, entitled to do any..... Therefore it is impossible to think that the police officer should have inquired of the whole of Bombay city in order to find out whether at any of the place there was blood on the ground in support of the case of the accused. In this connection we must also point out that it was only during the examination of the witnesses that the defence story was suggested". On an appraisal of the evidence the High Court came to a contrary view and convicted the accused.

8. The evidence against the accused depends upon the oral testimony of the eye witnesses, the recovery of the hammer alleged to be at the instance of Accused 2 and the dying declaration said to have been made by the deceased to Kadam and to S. I. Suryavanshi. We have gone through this evidence and find that the High Court has not given due weight to the reasons given by the Additional Sessions Judge in rejecting that evidence. In appeals against acquittal while the powers of the High Court are no different from its powers in ordinary appeal against conviction, the High Court has to consider all the matters which weighed with the Trial Court and the reasons given by it for disbelieving the witnesses whose demeanor it had opportunity of observing. This Court had in Laxman Kalu v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1968 SC 1390 observed at page 1392:

"We may say here that it is now the settled law that the powers of the High Court in an appeal against the acquittal are not different from the powers of the same Court in hearing an appeal against a conviction. The High Court in dealing with such an appeal can go into all questions of fact and law and reach its own conclusions on evidence provided it pays due regard to the fact that the matter had been before the Court of Session and the Sessions Judge had the chance and opportunity of seeing the witnesses depose to the facts. Further the High Court in reversing the Judgment of the Sessions Judge must pay due regard to all the reasons given by the Sessions Judge for disbelieving a particular witness and must attempt to dispel those reasons effectively before taking a contrary view of the matter. It may also be pointed out that an accused starts with a presumption of innocence when he is put up for trial and his acquittal in no sense weakens that presumption and this presumption must also receive adequate consideration from the High Court".

9. The Additional Sessions Judge had pointed out in respect of each eye witness a large number of contradictions and given detailed reasons for disbelieving them. He had also given cogent grounds for not accepting the evidence relating to the dying declarations and for disbelieving the evidence relating to the recovery of the hammer. No doubt the defence version of the accused admits the prosecution story that a meeting was held immediately after the 1st shift and that after the meeting the deceased, Dinkar and Sadu Shetty and the 2 accused and Gopal had left the mill though at different times and that an incident took place at about 5.30 p. m. in which all these persons were involved but with respect to the place of the incident and the manner in which it took place the story of the prosecution has not been admitted by the accused. The prosecution case is that the incident took place at the bus stop while the defence case is that it took place at cross roads where the Hospital Road and Shirodkar Road meet. While the prosecution alleges that the accused were the aggressors and had attacked the deceased, the defence version is that the deceased and the eye witnesses were the aggressors and had attacked the accused but in the scuffle in which they tried to defend themselves, the deceased who had a knife in his hands injured himself when falling down after a hammer blow which was aimed by Dinkar at A-1, missed and hit the deceased. Whether the defence story is probable or not is not immediately relevant as what we have to see is whether the prosecution has established beyond doubt that the incident took place at the bus stop and as alleged by the prosecution the accused had attacked the deceased and caused his death. That there was trade Union rivalry between the accused and the deceased who are members of the rival Unions is clearly established on the evidence. The two eye witnesses Dinkar and Shetty and the deceased took leading part in the affairs of their Union while accused 1 was an active worker in the Kamgar Union. The meeting at which the question of bonus was discussed on the day of the incident was accremonious is also established by the evidence. The only question is whether the accused had any immediate motive to cause injuries. It is stated that the deceased and the eye witnesses had called accused 1 and hurled abuses against him and it said that according to the deceased and Dinkar the only way that the Mazdur Sangh will settle the bonus question is when they are given a good beating, like in the case of India United Mills where the bonus was less but subsequently when the INTUC group was flogged the bonus was increased. The case of the defence was put to all the 3 eye witnesses.

10. In so far as the evidence of the three eye witnesses are concerned the learned Advocate for the Appellants contends that at least the presence of Krishnan Chandan has nowhere been mentioned either in the F.I.R. or in any of the alleged dying declarations but that he has been subsequently got up. Similarly he submits that Bhagwan Accused 2 was not an employee of the Mill nor did he have any enmity with the deceased but it is said that he was the first one to attack which is not credible. Dinkar is a partisan and is inimical to Accused 1. There is no doubt that neither in the F. I. R. which is recorded at about 6 p. m. nor in the dying declaration Ex. 10 recorded by Kadam, nor in that recorded by the P. S. I. Suryavanshi Ex. 19 is the name of Krishnan Chandan mentioned as the person who was with the deceased. Dinkar in the F. I. R. merely states that he along with Shantaram and Sadu Shetty went walking to Lalbaug Naka. Similarly in Ex. 10 and Ex. 18 there is only a mention of presence of Dinkar and Sadu Shetty along with the deceased.

11. According to Krishnan Chandan he came to the bus stop later, witnessed the incident did not shout or go to the assistance of the deceased, nor help Dinkar take the deceased across the Road but went home had his dinner and slept. The next morning he went to the Mills took leave for the day and went to the Police Station to give his statement. The explanation given by him for going to the Police is that a Police constable had come to his house but when informed that he was asleep went away. This story is difficult to believe because there was no indication either in the statement of Dinkar or in the dying declarations that he was present; if so there was no way in which police could have known of his presence that night. The Additional Sessions Judge was justified in his comment that the witness had invented the story to explain the delay that was made in recording his statement. It may also be noticed that Dinkar one of the eye witnesses denies that Krishnan Chandan was present. Apart from this defect, the witness all through refers to Gopal as Bable and in spite of persistent cross-examination tried to pretend that he did not know who Gopal Parab was but in the end when he was confronted with his Police statement admitted that he referred to this person as Gopal Parab. When asked why he pretended he attributed it to the failure of his memory. There is no doubt on a perusal of his evidence which is contrary to the evidence of other witnesses he was got up to buttress the evidence of the other two eye witnesses who incidentally were partisan witnesses. Though Krishnan pretends to be an independent witness Dinkar admitted this witness and Sadu Shetty were workers of the Communist party.

12. Dinker and Sadu Shetty's evidence is full of contradictions, improbabilities and on relevant matters unreliable. A reading of their evidence shows that they have little regard for truth and are constantly prevaricating.

13. The reason for the deceased, Dinker and Sadu Shetty going to the bus stop was that Sadu Shetty wanted to catch a bus to Chembur, when it is admitted Sadu Shetty has a Railway pass, which is cheaper than by going in bus. It is also not probable that he would go in a bus when the Railway Station Chinchpokli from which he catches the train is in the lane opposite to the Mills. His explanation that because he had to change trains and wait for the connecting train to Chembur he sometimes goes in a bus particularly when it is late, has been found to be not free from doubt by the Trial Court. Further when he was having a pass it was not considered possible that he would spend money to go in a bus, and also when the houses of Dinker and the deceased are in the lane opposite to the Digvijay Mills there was no reason for these persons to go to the bus stop which is somewhat farther away from the Mills. It may be pointed out that Dinker when questioned about the residence of deceased Shantaram said that he was having residence at two places but later admitted that he was living in a Chawl situated in a lane opposite to the Mill. This was indeed an attempt to meet the objections that there was no reason for them to go to the bus stop. Similarly in order not to disclose that any provoking speeches were made at the meeting by reference to what happened about the bonus dispute of India Mills he disclaimed all knowledge. Later, however, he not only admitted knowledge of the dispute but admitted that he told his audience that it was only when the workers of INTUC were flogged by the workers of the Kamgar Union that they exerted themselves and got a higher bonus for the workers of those Mills. Again he at first denied all knowledge of who called the meeting but later admitted after persistent cross-examination that the deceased, Sadu Shetty and another worker Shanker called the meeting. For fear he will be confronted with the question why he did not take the deceased to the Police Chowky opposite to the Bus stop instead of waiting for a taxi to take him to a Police Station which was far off he said the Police Chowky was closed but it appears from the evidence of Inspector Kogje that the Chowky is open 24 hours and a police constable is present throughout. Another important contradiction which is motivated and is deliberate falsehood is that he did not see any blood coming after the deceased was injured but later admitted when confronted by his Police statement that the deceased was bleeding heavily from his injuries on the stomach and in the head. Even while forced to admit this he nonetheless wants it to be believed that all this blood flowed on the clothes of the deceased but did not fall on the ground. This explanation shows an anxiety to meet the criticism that the site of the incident was not the bus stop as otherwise blood should have been found at that place.

14. Sadu Shetty's evidence also suffers from similar infirmities and is unreliable. The witness creates a third Union of workers namely Kamgar Sangatna which is not spoken to by any other witness. He said he was a member of the Sangatna because he was anxious to avoid admitting that he belongs to the Kamgar Union to which the deceased and Dinker belongs. He is anxious like Krishnan to show that he is an independent witness but in the end he had to admit that there are only two Unions. The witness is also anxious to show that he was not at the meeting because he says he went to the office of the Co-operative Society to get some money but when he was made to produce the passbook which showed that no amount was credited he was forced to invent an explanation that as the Clerk was on leave he could not draw any money and no entries were made. Again the witnesses conduct at the Bus stand when the deceased was being stabbed was unnatural. He says that throughout the attack on the deceased he stood in the queue and did not shout for help nor leave it to go to the help of the deceased nor did he accompany Dinker to take the deceased across the Road or try to help him get a taxi. As pointed out by the Trial Judge the statement of this witness that after the incident he went to the house of the deceased and informed his people is also untrue because he was unable to say where the deceased lived nor was he able to give the location of that house. There are other infirmities in his statement to which it is unnecessary to refer. None of these matters adverted to by the Additional Sessions Judge were considered by the High Court nor the reasons given by the Additional Sessions Judge for disbelieving the witnesses noticed or dealt by it. The Additional Sessions Judge said that the evidence of the eye witnesses is not rejected by him simply because they have shifted the scene of offence but because he has heard their evidence carefully and had perused it in detail. He gave cogent and convincing reasons for rejecting this evidence and we agree that no reliance can be placed on these witnesses without a corroboration in material particulars which is lacking in this case.

15. There is no evidence of blood being found at the bus stop nor at the place where Dinker hailed a taxi to take the deceased to the Police Station. Even if the explanation is accepted that because it was a thoroughfare and signs of bloodstains may have been obliterated, there was other evidence which could have been produced. The evidence of Dinker is that blood was dripping in the Taxi but the Taxi driver has not been examined though he was present at the Police Station and a constable had accompanied him to the Hospital in that taxi. The Taxi driver's name could have been taken and the Taxi number noted. We, however, cannot assume that neither the name of the Taxi driver nor the Taxi number was taken. It is no answer for the prosecution to say that since accused had not disclosed his defence till the Trial in the Sessions Court they could not have examined the Taxi driver. Even apart from the defence, the Taxi driver was an independent witness and could have corroborated the prosecution case as to the place of the incident which the prosecution in any case has to prove. When the oral evidence in respect of this matter is partisan it could have been only proved either from the discovery of the bloodstains on the spot through independent Panch witness by Panchnama of the scene of occurrence or by some independent evidence such as the evidence of the taxi driver. Further the discovery of the hammer alleged to be at the instance of A-2 has not been satisfactorily proved. The story of the hammer being brought out from under the shirt also appears to be somewhat incongruous. In any case there is nothing to connect that story of the hammer with the accused.

16. The dying declarations also as we have noticed earlier have not been relied upon by the Additional Sessions Judge and cannot therefore corroborate the testimony of the eye witnesses. A perusal of the Ex. 10 the Diary entry of Kadam would negative his statement that he made this entry in his diary on the day of the incident at about 7 p. m. in the Hospital. The entry is as follows:

"Attended 'parade' at 4.30 p. m. At 5.5 p. m. relieved the District Staff on day duty. At 6 p. m. as per the order of S. I. Suryavanshi I was taking, the injured person, Shantaram Sakharam Chavan to K. E. M. Hospital in a taxi. I then asked him as to what had happened. He said 'Keshav Nagave hit me with a knife in the abdomen and Bhagwan hit me with a hammer on the rear portion of my head'. He further said that along with him there were on the Lalbaug Bus stop Dinker, Sitaram and Sadu Shetty. The injured person Shantaram Sakharam was admitted in Ward No. 20 of the Hospital. Just then Suryavanshi Saheb came and I joined him in the investigation of the case. After we arrived at the Police Station the Inspector recorded my statement. Thereafter at 10.30 p. m. I went for tea and returned at 11 p. m. Thereafter at 9 a. m. on the date the 20-1-65, I went home".

A perusal of this entry would show that this is a continuous record and would indicate as if it is made after 9 a. m. on 20-10-65, before he went home. The High Court said that the fact of this entry being made next day was not put to Kadam in cross-examination but a reference to the evidence of Kadam would show that the diary entry was put to him, suggesting that he had not made an entry in the personal diary of what Shantaram told him but he denied that suggestion as false. It could not be expected that what could be inferred from the contents of the diary have also to be put to him. In this view the Additional Sessions Judge was right in rejecting the evidence in respect of the several matters referred to above. Similarly the dying declarations recorded by Suryavanshi cannot also be relied upon. Suryavanshi says that he first asked the deceased how the incident took place and after he had told him what happened he put him questions in Marathi and got the answers also in Marathi but recorded it in a narrative form in English. It is pointed out by the learned Advocate for the Appellant that there is nothing to indicate what questions were put and what answers were given nor is there anything to show that it was correctly recorded. The suggestion is that the Police Inspector may have added his own version of it while recording the dying declaration. To some extent this contention seems to be justified because Suryavanshi in his deposition stated "In the narration made by him the injured persons had given detail but he did not state what I wanted regarding his address, profession and other things. It is not that my questions put to the injured person were directed only to his address and profession. I wanted to get other details too from him". This shows that he was not content to record what the deceased wanted to say but wanted him to say what he wanted. That apart, there was sufficient time for him to have called a Magistrate, and although he admits that a Magistrate should be called he did not do so because according to him the injured was in a serious condition. We have already pointed out that the injured died at 2 a. m. There was considerable time, for him to have called a Magistrate. At any rate there is nothing to show that the injured became unconscious immediately or that he made any attempt to call the Magistrate.

17. In view of this we cannot rely on this dying declaration also. Our own conclusion on a re-appraisal of the evidence is that the eye witnesses account of where the incident took place and how it took place is not reliable nor is there any corroboration of any of their statements in material particulars. In this view it is unnecessary to determine whether the version given by the accused as to what actually took place and where it took place is credible. The probability that it did not take place at the bus stand but it took place elsewhere and in a manner different to that spoken to by the eye witnesses which does not exclude the possibility of the deceased and the eye witnesses being the aggressors or the incident taking place as alleged to by the accused, cannot be ruled out.

18. The Appeal is accordingly allowed, the conviction and sentences are set aside and the accused acquitted. They are directed to be released if not required for any other offence.

Appeal allowed

S. M. Nandy and others, Appellants v. The State of West Bengal and others, Respondents.

Civil Appeal No. 500 of 1967, D/-19-2-1971.

W. B. Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act (2 of 1948) — Act is not ultra vires the Constitution under Article 19 (1) (f) read with Article 19 (5) — (X-Ref: Constitution of India, Article 19 (1) (f)). (Para 10)

It cannot be held that restrictions imposed by the impugned Act are unreasonable. Fair compensation has been provided for requisitioning, which is determinable by a Civil Court and ultimately by the High Court or the Supreme Court. Regarding the necessity for requisitioning it must necessarily be left to the State Government. It is true that there is no express provision to make a representation against an order of requisition but there is no bar to a representation being made after an order is served under Section 3 (2) of the Act. If the representation raises a point which overrides the public purpose it would be favourably considered by the State Government or other Government authorities as the case may be. (Para 9)

SIKRI, C. J.: — The following question has been referred to the Constitution Bench under the proviso to Article 145 (3) of the Constitution:

1971 S. C./61 V G—10

“Whether the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948 is ultra vires the Constitution under Article 19 (1) (f) read with Article 19 (5)?”

2. The learned counsel for the appellants, Shri Arun Kumar Dutta, challenges the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948 — hereinafter referred to as the impugned Act — on the ground that it does not impose reasonable restrictions within Article 19 (5) of the Constitution. He urges three grounds in this respect. First, he says, that there is no provision for a notice to the owner or the occupier of the property before an order of requisition is passed. Secondly, there is no provision for an appeal against the order of requisition, and thirdly, a civil suit is barred under Section 11 of the impugned Act.

3. In order to appreciate the points raised by the learned counsel it is necessary to set out the scheme of the Act. The impugned Act was enacted in order to provide for requisitioning and speedy acquisition of land for a number of public purposes. These purposes are: (1) maintaining supplies and services essential to the life of the community; (2) provide proper facilities for transport, communication, irrigation or drainage; and (3) creation of better living conditions in urban or rural areas by the construction or re-construction of dwelling places in such areas. The State of West Bengal was faced with many emergent problems created by the partition of India, and this Act was designed to meet these problems in a speedy manner. Section 3 enables the State Government to requisition land for the purposes mentioned above. A Collector of a district, an Additional District Magistrate or the First Land Acquisition Collector, Calcutta, when authorised by the State Government in this behalf, may exercise within his jurisdiction the powers of requisitioning conferred by sub-section (1). Sub-section (2) of Section 3 provides for service of this order in the prescribed manner on the owner of land and also on the occupier not being owner of land. Under sub-section (3) of Section 3 the Collector, or any person authorised by him in writing in this behalf, is entitled to execute the order in the manner mentioned therein, if the order passed under sub-section (2) is not complied with by any person. There is nothing in the impugned Act which prevents a person on whom an order has been served under sub-section (2) to make a representation to the Collector or the State Government against the order of requisition. Section 4 enables the State Government to use or deal with the land for the purposes aforesaid.

4. We are not concerned with acquisition in this case but we may mention that the State Government may acquire any land requisitioned under the Act by publishing a notice in the official gazette that such land is required for a public purpose referred to in sub-section (1) of Section 3.

5. Section 6 enables the State Government to derequisition or release from requisition any land.

6. The impugned Act provides for fair compensation in respect of the requisitioned land under Section 7 (3) and Section 7 (4). Sub-section (3) provides that where any land is requisitioned under Section 3, there shall be paid to every person interested compensation in respect of—

(a) the requisition of such land; and

(b) any damage done during the period of requisition to such land other than what may have been sustained by natural causes.

Sub-section (4) lays down the principles to be followed in determining the compensation. If the Collector and the person interested agree to the compensation the Collector is enabled to make an award ordering payment of the agreed compensation. If there is disagreement, sub-section (4) provides that the compensation payable shall be the amount determined by the Court on reference made by the Collector under Clause (b) of sub-section (1) of Section 8. Under Section 8 the Collector is obliged to refer the matter to the decision of the Court if there is any disagreement with regard to compensation, and sub-section (2) of Section 8 prescribes the same procedure as the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, in this regard, and the State Government is directed to apply the principles set out in sub-section (1) of Section 23 of that Act, and in Clause (a) of sub-section (2) of Section 7 of the impugned Act, which provides:

"7 (2) (a) When the compensation has been determined under sub-section

(1) the Collector shall make an award in accordance with the principles set out in Section 11 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, and no amount referred to in sub-section (2) of Section 23 of that Act, shall be included in the award:

Provided that interest at the rate of six per centum per annum on the amount of compensation under the award from the date of the publication of the notice under sub-section (1-A) of Section 4 until payment shall be included in the amount payable under award".

7. It seems to us that these provisions give fair compensation and enable a Civil Court to determine the question in case of a dispute. An appeal lies under Section 8-A from the award made by a Court on a reference under Section 8 as if such award was an original decree passed by the Court in exercise of its civil jurisdiction. Not only therefore a fair compensation is provided but the determination of the amount of compensation rests with a Civil Court in case of a dispute. Although the learned counsel took objection to the Court which has to make an award, we see nothing wrong with the definition of the word "Court". The word "Court" has been defined to mean:

" "Court" means a principal civil Court of original jurisdiction, and includes the Court of any Additional Judge, Subordinate Judge or Munsif whom the State Government may appoint, by name or by virtue of his office, to perform concurrently with any such principal Civil Court, all or any of the functions of the Court under this Act within any specified local limits and, in the case of a Munsif, up to the limits of the pecuniary jurisdiction with which he is vested under Section 19 of the Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act, 1887".

8. Section 11 provides that "save as otherwise expressly provided in this Act, no decision or order made in exercise of any power conferred by or under this Act shall be called in question in any Court". It seems to us that if any order is made for any collateral purpose or has been made for purposes not mentioned in Section 3, or is mala fide, it can always be challenged.

9. We are, therefore, of the opinion that it is difficult to hold that restrictions imposed by the impugned Act are unreasonable. Fair compensation has been provided for requisitioning, which is determinable by a Civil Court and ultimately by the High Court or the Supreme Court. Regarding the necessity for requisitioning it must necessarily be left to the State Government. It is true that there is no express provision to make a representation against an order of requisition but there is no bar to a representation being made after an order is served under Section 3 (2) of the Act. We have no doubt that if the representation raises a point which overrides the public purpose it would be favourably considered by the State Government or other Government authorities as the case may be.

10. Accordingly the question referred to us is answered in the negative. The case will now go back to the Division Bench for disposal according to law.

Answered in the negative.

S. M. SIKRI C. J., C. A. VAIDIALINGAM AND V. BHARGAVA, JJ.

Sachindra Mohan Nandy and others, Appellants v. The State of West Bengal and others, Respondents.

Civil Appeal No. 500 of 1967, D/- 19-2-1971.

Chandernagore (Merger) Act (1954), S. 17—W. B. Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act (2 of 1948), applies to Chandernagore. — It was "law" within S. 2 (c) of Chandernagore (Assimilation of Laws) Act (W. B. Act 4 of 1955)—(X-Ref.: W. B. Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act (2 of 1948), S. 17) — Judgment of Calcutta High Court in Appeal From Original Order No. 104 of 1963, dated 13-1-65 (Cal), Affirmed. (Para 10)

Section 3 of the Chandernagore (Merger) Act, 1954, made Chandernagore part of the State of West Bengal and S. 17 extended the W. B. Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948, to it. The W. B. Act was a law as contained in S. 2 (c) of the Chan-dernagore (Assimilation of Laws) Act because it related to a matter enumerated in Entry 36 List II (as it then existed) in the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution. (Para 10)

In so far as the Acquisition Act related to entry 42 of List III it was applied by S. 3 of the Chandernagore (Assimilation of Laws) Act, 1955, and S. 17 of the Chandernagore (Merger) Act, 1954, read with the definition of the word "law" in S. 2 (d) of the latter Act. (Para 10)

As by virtue of S. 3 of the Assimilation of Laws Act, the Acquisition Act became applicable to Chandernagore, all privileges and immunities from requisitioning available in the French territory, in conflict with that Act ceased to exist. (Para 13)

The Collector of Hooghly had the authority to issue the orders of requisition under the Acquisition Act of 1948, in respect of land situated in Chandernagore by virtue of Notification No. 3775-LA dated 11-5-48 because Chandernagore had come within the limits of his jurisdiction. The notification must be construed to refer to the limits of the District as it exists on the date of the exercise of the powers conferred by the notification. (Para 14)

M/s. Arun K. Dutt, D. N. Mukherjee and S. Dey, Advocates, for Appellants; Mr. Niren De, Attorney General for India (Mr. P. K. Chakravarti, Advocate, with him), for Respondents.

SIKRI, C. J.: In our order dated March 10, 1970, we stated that we will give our reasons later for rejecting the points raised before us. We now proceed to give those reasons.

2. This is an appeal against the judgment of the High Court of Calcutta (Bose, C. J., and Mitra, J.) dismissing the appeal of Sachindra Mohan Nandy and Jnanendra Mohan Nandy, now appellants before us, against the judgment of Mukherjee, J., discharging the rule obtained by the appellants under Art. 226 of the Constitution. In order to appreciate the points raised before us it is necessary to state the relevant facts.

3. On October 9, 1960 and October 10, 1960, the Collector of Hooghly made two orders under S. 3 (1) of the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948 hereinafter referred to as the Acquisition Act. The Collector purported to requisition land belonging to the appellants for certain public purposes. He had issued the orders in exercise of the powers which had been conferred upon him by notification No. 3775-L. A. dated May, 11, 1948, published in the Calcutta Gazette, Part I, on May 27, 1948. This notification had authorised the Collector to exercise the powers under S. 3 (1) of the Acquisition Act. When this notification was passed Chandernagore, where the requisitioned land is situate, was not part of West Bengal and it is on this fact that one argument, shortly to be mentioned, rests.

4. According to the appellants the Acquisition Act has never been extended and made applicable to Chandernagore. For appreciating this particular point it is necessary to state the history of Chandernagore. It is well known that it was a French settlement in India, and it was only on October 2, 1954, that it was merged in the State of Bengal. Section 3 of the Chandernagore (Merger) Act, 1954 (XXXVI of 1954) provided that Chandernagore shall form part of the State of West Bengal, District of Hoogly, and the State Government shall provide for the administration of Chandernagore by constituting it into a new sub-division of the District of Hoogly. Section 17 provided that "all laws which immediately before the appointed day extend to, or are in force in, the State of West Bengal generally shall, as from that day, extend to, or, as the case may be, come into force in, Chandernagore." Section 18 has not much relevance but the learned counsel relied on it. Section 18 (1) reads thus:

"18 (1) Repeal of corresponding laws and savings:— Any law in force in Chandernagore immediately before the appointed day (hereafter in this Act referred to as the "corresponding law") which corresponds to any law referred to in section 17, whether such corresponding law is in force in Chandernagore by virtue of the Chandernagore (Application of Laws) Order, 1950, or by virtue of any notification issued under the Chandernagore (Administration) Regulation, 1952 (Reg. 1 of 1952) or otherwise, shall, as from that day, stand repealed in Chandernagore."

5. The word "law" was defined in the Chandernagore (Merger) Act, 1954, as follows (S. 2 (d)):

" "law" means so much of any enactment, Ordinance, Regulation, order, rule, scheme, notification, bye-law or any other instrument having the force of law as relates to matters enumerated in List I and List III in the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution."

6. After this the Legislature of West Bengal enacted the Chandernagore (Assimilation of Laws) Act, 1955. Section 2 (c) of this Act defined "law" to mean "so much of any Act, Ordinance, Regulation, order, rule, scheme, notification, bye-law or any other instrument having the force of law as relates to matters enumerated in List II in the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution of India." Section 3 provides that "all laws which immediately before the appointed day extend to, or are in force in, the State of West Bengal generally shall, as from that day, extend to, or, as the case may be, come into force in Chandernagore." Section 4 (1) provided for repeal of corresponding laws and reads:

"4 (1) Any law in force in Chandernagore immediately before the appointed day (hereinafter in this Act referred to as "corresponding law") which corresponds to any law referred to in section 3, whether such corresponding law is in force in Chandernagore by virtue of the Chandernagore (Application of Laws) Order, 1950 or by virtue of any notification issued under the Chandernagore (Administration) Regulation, 1952, or otherwise, shall as from the day stand repealed in Chandernagore"

Section 8, which was inserted in 1959, removed certain doubts regarding the extension of certain Acts to Chandernagore, in the following terms:

"8. Notwithstanding anything to the contrary, in any judgment or decision of any court, tribunal or authority, the following Acts, that is to say, The West Bengal Land Development and Planning Act, 1948, The West Bengal Non-Agricultural Tenancy Act, 1949 and The West Bengal Estates Acquisition Act, 1953 shall extend to and be deemed always to have extended to Chandernagore with effect from the appointed day."

7. We may here set out the notifications empowering Sri B. K.

Chatterjee, I. A. S., to perform the functions of the Collector in the District of Hooghly under the Acquisition Act. By the first notification dated September 15, 1959, the Governor was pleased "to specially appoint Sri B. K. Chatterjee, I. A. S., Additional District Magistrate, Hooghly, to perform the functions of a Collector under the said Act in the District of Hooghly." Another notification issued on the same day had authorised Sri B. K. Chatterjee, I. A. S., Additional District Magistrate, Hooghly, to requisition by order in writing any land within the local limits of the District of Hooghly. The two requisition orders purport to have been signed by the Collector of Hooghly.

8. The notification dated May 11, 1948, to which reference has been made above reads as follows:

"No. 3775 L. A. (P. W.) 11th May, 1948. In exercise of the powers conferred by Sub-section (1) of Section 3 of the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act 1948 (West Bengal Act II of 1948), the Governor is pleased hereby to authorise each of the Collector and the Deputy Commissioners mentioned in the Schedule below to requisition, by order in writing, in pursuance of the provisions of the said sub-section (1) of the said Section 3, (torn) land within the local limits of his jurisdiction and (torn) to make such further orders as appear to him to be necessary or expedient in connection with the requisitioning Schedule.

Collector of Hooghly District

9. The learned counsel has raised the following points before us: (1) that the orders of requisition were illegal as the Acquisition Act under which they were issued did not apply to the territory previously known as French Chandernagore; and (2) that under the notification dated May 11, 1948, the Collector could exercise the powers of requisition only in respect of lands within the local limits of the territories then forming part of the Hooghly District.

10. Regarding the first point, it seems to us that there is no force in the contentions. Section 3 of the Chandernagore (Merger) Act, 1954, made Chandernagore part of the State of West Bengal and S. 17 extended the Acquisition Act to it. The Acquisition Act was a law within the meaning of "law" contained in S. 2 (c) of the Chandernagore (Assimilation of Laws) Act because it related to a matter enumerated in List II in the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution. List II, as it then existed, contained the following entries:

"36. Acquisition or requisitioning of property, except for the purposes of the Union, subject to the provisions of entry 42 of List III."

Entry 42 of List III was to the following effect:

"Principles on which compensation for property acquired or requisitioned for the purposes of the Union or of a State or for any other public purpose is to be determined, and the form and the manner in which such compensation is to be given."

Insofar as the Acquisition Act related to entry 42 of List III it was applied by S. 3 of the Chandernagore (Assimilation of Laws) Act, 1955, and S. 17 of the Chandernagore (Merger) Act, 1954, read with the definition of the word "law" in S. 2 (d) of the latter Act.

11. The learned counsel further urged before us that this law was not in force in the State of West Bengal "generally" because it provided that it shall remain in force upto a certain date and this date had been changed from time to time. In 1954 it was provided that it shall remain in force upto March 31, 1957. We are unable to appreciate how the word "generally" has any reference to the duration of the time during which an Act has to operate. We agree with the High Court that the word "generally" refers to the territory of West Bengal.

12. Another argument that was urged before us was that because there was no corresponding law within the meaning of S. 17 of the Chandernagore (Merger) Act, 1954, and S. 4 of the Chandernagore (Assimilation of Laws) Act, 1955, S. 3 of the latter Act did not have the effect of extending the Acquisition Act to Chandernagore. We are unable to appreciate this reasoning. Section 4 has a limited effect and that is that if there is a corresponding law then that law shall, as from that date, stand repealed in Chandernagore. If there is no corresponding law then S. 4 does not operate and it has no effect on the scope of S. 3.

13. It was finally urged in this connection that there was no law on the subject of requisitioning of property in French territory, the citizens enjoyed the privilege of immunity and any order to deprive the citizens of that immunity should have been much more specific. We agree with the High Court that there is no force in this contention. If by virtue of S. 3 of the Assimilation of Laws Act an Act becomes applicable to Chandernagore all privileges and immunities in conflict with that Act would cease to exist.

14. Coming to the second point, we agree with the High Court that the Collector of Hooghly had the authority to issue the orders of requisition in question. If the order of requisition is by a Collector then the notification of 1948 applies and the Collector of Hooghly would be authorised to issue orders requisitioning land existing in Chandernagore because Chandernagore had come within the limits of his jurisdiction. The notification must be construed to refer to the limits of the District as it exists on the date of the exercise of the powers conferred by the notification. If the orders of requisition were issued by Shri B. K. Chatterjee, I. A. S., Additional District Magistrate, then he had authority by virtue of the notification dated September 15, 1959, mentioned above.

15. The learned counsel, referring to the Acquisition Act, as it stood in 1959, and the definition of "Collector" ("the Collector of a district and includes a Deputy Commissioner and any officer specially appointed by the State Government to perform the functions of a Collector under this Act) urged that the Additional District Magistrate was not "specially appointed." There is no force in this point. The notification of September 15, 1959, amounts to special appointment within the definition of "Collector."

16. We referred the following question to the Constitution Bench which has answered it in the negative:

"Whether the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act 1948 is ultra vires the Constitution under Art. 19 (1) (f) read with Art. 19 (5)?"

17. In the result the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Writ Petn. No. 91 of 1964 and Civil Appeal No. 358 of 1966, D/- 23-2-1971.

(A) Constitution of India Art. 19
(1) (c) — Hindi Sahitya Sammelan Act (1962) violates Art. 19 (1) (c) — (X-Ref: Hindi Sahitya Sammelan Act (1962), Section 4).

The right to form an association, necessarily implies that the persons forming the association have also the right to continue to be associated with only those whom they voluntarily admit in the association. Any law, by which members are introduced in the voluntary Association without any option being given to the members to keep them out, or any law which takes away the membership of those who have voluntarily joined it, will be a law violating the right to form an association. The Hindi Sahitya Sammelan Act does not merely regulate the administration of the affairs of the original society; what it does is to alter the composition of the society itself. The result of this change in composition is that the members, who voluntarily formed the Association, are now compelled to act in that Association with other members who have been imposed as members by the Act and in whose admission to membership they had no say. Such alteration in the composition of the Association itself clearly interferes with the right to continue to function as members of the Association which was voluntarily formed by the original founders. The Act, therefore, violates the right of the original members of the Society to form an association guaranteed under Art. 19 (1) (c). Article 19 (4), on the face of it, cannot be called in aid to claim validity for the Act. The alteration of the constitution of the Society in the manner laid down by the Act is not in the interests of the sovereignty and integrity of India, or in the interests of public order or morality. Once section 4 is declared void, the whole Act becomes ineffective inasmuch as the formation of the new Sammelan is the very basis for all the other provisions contained in the Act. (B) Constitution of India, Seventh Schedule List I entry 63 List II entry 32 — As under S. 2 of the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan Act (1962) the only institution that was declared as of national importance under List I entry 63 was the original society — Parliament was not competent to legislate in respect of the newly constituted Sammelan which at no stage had been declared as an institution of national importance.

(C) Constitution of India, Art. 19 (1) (f) — If it is held that Parliament passed Hindi Sahitya Sammelan Act (1962) so as to transfer all the properties and assets of the original society to the new Sammelan the Act would contravene Art. 19 (1) (f) — If the law is passed not merely for ensuring proper management and administration of the property, but for totally depriving the persons, in whom the property vested, of their right to hold the property, the law cannot be justified as a reasonable restriction under Art. 19 (5). The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

BHARGAVA, J.: This writ petition and the appeal challenge the validity of the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan Act No. 13 of 1962 (hereinafter referred to as "the Act"). The facts leading up to the passing of this enactment are that, in the year 1910, some eminent educationists assembled at Banaras and founded an Association for the development of Hindi and its propagation throughout the country. This Association was named as the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan. On the 8th January, 1914, it was registered as a Society under the Societies Registration Act No. 21 of 1860, with Head Office at Allahabad, under the name of Hindi Sahitya Sammelan. The rules and bye-laws of the Society laid down the objects of this Association and the manner of its working. It had three classes of members, viz., special members (Vishisht Sadasya), permanent members (Sthayi Sadasya), and ordinary members (Sadharan Sadasya). Under the bye-laws, apart from the original members constituting the Society, further members could be admitted under those three classifications on being elected by the working committee of the Society. Under the Rules and bye-laws of the Society, other bodies could be constituted for carrying on activities of the Society. These included a Governing Body, a Working Committee, a Hindi University Council, Literary Council (Sahitya Samiti), Library Committee, Parchar Samiti, and Rashtriya Bhasha Prachar Samiti. Through the agencies of these various Committees, the Society carried on the work of development and propagation of Hindi, of spreading the use of Devnagri script, of holding examinations, and of conferring Degrees for proficiency in Hindi. The Society owned landed properties and buildings at Allahabad as well as at some other places such as Wardha, and was holding considerable funds for carrying on its activities. The Society worked very successfully for a number of years. It appears that in the year 1950, some differences arose between the members of the Society, and attempt was made to alter the constitution of the Society. While one section wanted the alterations another section was opposed to it. This resulted in litigation. Three different suits were instituted in the civil courts at Allahabad in this connection and injunctions were sought by one party against the other. Ultimately, the Court appointed a Receiver.

2. In view of these circumstances, the U. P. Legislature passed an Act known as the U. P. Hindi Sahitya Sammelan Act No. 36 of 1956, under which a statutory body was created under the name of Hindi Sahitya Sammelan, and the word "Sammelan" was defined as referring to the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan constituted under the Act. Under that Act, the management and properties of the original Hindi Sahitya Sammelan, which was a registered Society, were to be taken over by the new statutory Sammelan. That Act was, however, declared void by the Allahabad High Court on the ground that that Act had made the original Sammelan cease to exist and had provided for the constitution of a new Sammelan under its terms in which the members of the original Sammelan had no say, so that that Act infringed the right of the members of the original Sammelan of forming an association guaranteed by Art. 19 (1) (c) of the Constitution. It was further held that that Act was not saved under Art. 19 (4) of the Constitution. Thereafter, the present Act, now challenged in this writ petition and the appeal, was passed by Parliament under Entry 63 of List I of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution. The Act itself, in section 2, contained the necessary declaration to give legislative competence to Parliament under that Entry.

3. The Act first contained in section 2 a declaration in the following words:

"Whereas the objects of the institution known as the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan which has its head office at Allahabad are such as to make the institution one of national importance, it is hereby declared that the institution known as the Hindi Sahitya Sam-melan is an institution of national importance."

Having declared this institution as an institution of national importance, the Act proceeded to define "Sammelan" as meaning the institution known as the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan incorporated under this Act, while the word "Society" was defined to mean "the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan which has its head office at Allahabad and is registered under the Societies Registration Act, 1860." Under Section 4 (1) of the Act, the Sammelan was constituted which was to consist of the first members of the Sammelan and all persons who may hereafter become members thereof in accordance with the rules made in that behalf. This statutory Sammelan was constituted as a body corporate by the name of the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan, and under sub-section (2) of Section 4, it was to have perpetual succession and a common seal with power, subject to the provisions of the Act, to acquire, hold and dispose of property and to contract and to sue and be sued by that name. The Head Office of the Sammelan was to be at Allahabad. Under sub-s. (4) of Section 4, the first members of the Sammelan were to consist of persons who, immediately before the appointed day,—

(a) were special members (Vishishṭ Sadasya) of the Society;

(b) were life members (Sthayī Sadasya) of the Society;

(c) had been Presidents of the Society; or

(d) were awarded the Mangla Prasad Paritoshik by the Society.

This sub-s. (4) of section 4 was amended retrospectively with effect from the date that the Act came into force by the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan (Amendment) Act No. I of 1963, and the first members of the Sammelan were, under this amendment, declared to be—

(a) all persons who, immediately before the appointed day, were members of the Society;

(b) all persons who, before that day, had been Presidents of the Society; and

(c) all persons who, before that day, were awarded the Mangla Prasad Paritoshik by the Society.

It is not necessary to give in detail the other provisions of the Act, except that it may be mentioned that the Act provided for vesting of all property, movable or immovable, of or belonging to the Society in the Sammelan, transferring all rights and liabilities of the Society to the Sammelan, converting reference to the Society in any law to the Sammelan, and other similar necessary provisions. The Act itself did not make any provision for the future membership of the Sammelan; but under section 12 (1) (a), the first Governing Body of the Sammelan was directed to make rules in respect of matters relating to membership, including qualifications and disqualifications for membership of the Sammelan. The first Governing Body was to be constituted under section 8 and was to consist of a Chairman, a Secretary and 13 other members. This Governing Body was to be constituted by a notification in the Official Gazette by the Central Government. The thirteen members were to be chosen as follows:

(i) one member to represent the Ministry of the Central Government dealing with education;

(ii) one member to represent the Ministry of the Central Government dealing with finance;

(iii) not more than three members from among the former Presidents of the Society; and

(iv) the remaining number from among persons who are, in the opinion of the Central Government, eminent in the field of Hindi language or Hindi literature.

It was this first Governing Body which was to make rules on all matters relating to membership of the Sammelan under section 12 (1) (a) of the Act. These rules were not to have effect until they were approved by the Central Government and were published by the first Governing Body in such manner as the Central Government may, by order, direct. A copy of the rules was also to be laid before each House of Parliament. Counsel for respondent No. 1 placed before us a copy of the rules which, according to him, have been made by the first Governing Body with the approval of the Government and have been published as required. The Rules come into force on 1st of February, 1971. The petition under Art. 32, and the petition under Art. 226, out of which the civil appeal arises, were both moved much earlier and long before these Rules were framed. These petitions challenged the validity of the Act, without taking into account the actual Rules framed, mainly on the ground that the Act had interfered with the right of the petitioners to form association under Art. 19 (1) (c) of the Constitution and was not protected by Art. 19 (4). In the petition before the Allahabad High Court, that Court held that, since all the members of the Society had also become members of the Sammelan under the Act, there was no infringement of the right to form association, so that the Act could not be declared invalid on that ground. The writ petition in this Court has been filed by only one member of the Society, while the petition in the High Court and the appeal against the judgment of the High Court, which is before us, were filed by the original Hindi Sahitya Sammelan as one party and 72 members of that Sammelan joining as other petitioning parties. In the civil appeal, thus, the grievance that the Act has infringed the fundamental right has been put forward both by the Society itself as well as by 72 of its members, including members of the Working Committee and the Governing Body of the Society. They have all come up to this Court against the decision of the High Court in this appeal by special leave.

4. In the counter-affidavits filed on behalf of the respondents in the writ petition before the High Court as well as in the writ petition in this Court, the position taken up was that the Act, in fact, does not deprive the Society and its members of any rights which they had under the constitution of the Society and did not interfere with their right of association inasmuch as all the members of the Society have been included as members of the Sammelan under the Act. The High Court, in fact, dismissed the writ petition on accepting this submission put forward on behalf of the respondents. In the arguments before us, learned counsel for respondent No. 1, however, took up a different position and urged that the Act keeps the Society intact as it was, while a new Sammelan is constituted under the Act for the purpose of managing the institution which has been declared as an institution of national importance. He put this aspect of the case in the forefront, but, in the alternative, he also argued the case on the basis of the position taken up in the counter-affidavits in the High Court and in this Court as mentioned above. We consider it convenient to first deal with the case as was specifically put forward in the counter-affidavits. In these counter-affidavits, the position taken up is that, having declared the old Hindi Sahitya Sammelan, which was a Society registered under the Societies Registration Act, 1860, as an institution of national importance, Parliament has proceeded to legislate in respect of it under Entry 63 of List I of the Seventh Schedule in order that its administration may not suffer as a result of the quarrels that were going on inter se between the members of the Society. It was for this purpose that a first Governing Body was constituted, to take over the management temporarily. The Act was designed to reconstitute the Sammelan in such manner that it could work successfully and without difficulties and, in making provision for this purpose, all members of the old Society were included as members of the Sammelan, so that their right of forming association may not be taken away from them. The Society was never dissolved; instead of the Society remaining a body registered under the Societies Registration Act, it was converted into a statutory Sammelan under the Act.

5. It, however, appears on examination of the provisions of the Act that the Sammelan under the Act is composed not only of persons, who were members of the Society, but of others who have been given the right to be members of the Sammelan without the consent of the pre-existing members. Under Section 4 (4) itself, as retrospectively amended in 1963, apart from persons, who were members of the Society, others, who have been made members of the Sammelan, are all persons who, before that day, had been Presidents of the Society and all persons who, before that day, were awarded the Mangla Prasad Paritoshik by the Society. These members have been added without any option being available to the existing members of the Society to elect or refuse to elect them as members which was the right they possessed under the constitution of the Society itself. Further, under Section 12 (1) (a), very wide powers were given to the first Governing Body to make rules in respect of matters relating to membership, including qualifications and disqualifications for membership of the Sammelan. Under this power, the rules framed could make provision for admission of persons as members whom the original members of the Society may never have liked to admit in their Society. The number of such new members could even be so large as to leave the original members in a small minority with the result that those members could become totally ineffective in the Society. Even in the Rules actually framed, there is provision for admission of members under various classes. In addition to the persons mentioned in Section 4 (4) of the Act, Rule 6 provides for membership of persons who may become Sabhapatis of the Sammelan for any annual session subsequent to the Act coming into force, and persons who may be awarded Mangala Prasad Paritoshik subsequent to the Act coming into force. Under Rules 7, 8 and 9, new Vishisht Sadasyas, Sthayi Sadasyas, and Sadharan Sadasyas can be admitted to the membership of the Sammelan on payment of Rs. 1,000/- or Rs. 300/-, as the case may be. This admission to membership, according to the Rules, will be made by the new Karya Samiti to be elected under the Rules and not by the Working Committee of the original members of the Association. Further, under Section 7 (2) of the Act, the Governing Body of the new Sammelan is to consist of such number of persons, not exceeding 55, as the Central Government may from time to time determine; and out of these, a number not exceeding 7 are to be nominated by the Central Government from among educationists of repute and eminent Hindi scholars. These 7 nominees are to be chosen by the Central Government and on becoming members of the Governing Body, under Rule 11 they become members of the Sammelan. Under Rule 10, educational institutions can also be admitted as Sanstha Sadasyas of the Sammelan by the new Karya Samiti and, thereupon, a representative of each of such institution has a right to participate in the proceedings of the Sammelan, exercising all the rights of a member. It will, thus, be seen that the Sammelan, which has come into existence under the Act, is not identical with the Sammelan which was registered as a Society under the Societies Registration Act, 1860. Certain persons have been added as members by the Act and by the Rules. Admission of future members is no longer at the choice of the original members who had formed the Association. Persons, in whose admission as members the members of the Society had no hand, can become members and get the right of associating with them in the Sammelan, without the original members having any right to object. This is clear interference with the right to form an association which had been exercised by the members of the Society by forming the Society with its constitution, under which they were members and future members could only come in as a result of their choice by being elected by their Working Committee. We are unable to agree with the High Court that the new Sammelan, as constituted under the Act, is identical with the Society and that all the rights of forming an association, which were being exercised by members of the Society, have been kept intact under the Act.

6. It was argued that the right guaranteed by Article 19 (1) (2) is only to form an association and, consequently, any regulation of the affairs of the Association, after it has been formed, will not amount to a breach of that right. It is true that it has been held by this Court that, after an Association has been formed and the right under Article 19 (1) (c) has been exercised by the members forming it, they have no right to claim that its activities must also be permitted to be carried on in the manner they desire. Those cases are, however, inapplicable to the present case. The Act does not merely regulate the administration of the affairs of the Society; what it does is to alter the composition of the Society itself as we have indicated above. The result of this change in composition is that the members, who voluntarily formed the Association, are now compelled to act in that Association with other members who have been imposed as members by the Act and in whose admission to membership they had no say. Such alteration in the composition of the Association itself clearly interferes with the right to continue to function as members of the Association which was voluntarily formed by the original founders. The right to form an association, in our opinion, necessarily implies that the persons forming the Association have also the right to continue to be associated with only those whom they voluntarily admit in the Association. Any law, by which members are introduced in the Voluntary Association without any option being given to the members to keep them out, or any law which takes away the membership of those who have voluntarily joined it, will be a law violating the right to form an association. If we were to accept the submission that the right guaranteed by Art. 19 (1) (c) is confined to the initial stage of forming an Association and does not protect the right to continue the Association with the membership either chosen by the founders or regulated by rules made by the Association itself, the right would be meaningless because, as soon as an Association is formed, a law may be passed interfering with its composition, so that the Association formed may not be able to function at all. The right can be effective only if it is held to include within it the right to continue the Association with its composition as voluntarily agreed upon by the persons forming the Association. This aspect was recognised by this Court, though not in plain words, in the case of G. K. Ghosh v. E. X. Joseph, (1963) Supp 1 SCR 789 = (AIR 1963 SC 812). The Court, in that case, was considering the validity of Rule 4-B of the Central Civil Services (Conduct) Rules, 1955, which laid down that:

"No Government servant shall join or continue to be a member of any Service Association of Government servants:

(a) which has not, within a period of six months from its formation, obtained the recognition of the Government under the Rules prescribed in that behalf, or

(b) recognition in respect of which has been refused or withdrawn by the Government under the said Rules".

This Court held:—

"It is not disputed that the fundamental rights guaranteed by Article 19 can be claimed by Government servants. Article 33 which confers power on the Parliament to modify the rights in their application to the Armed Forces, clearly brings out the fact that all citizens, including Government servants, are entitled to claim the rights guaranteed by Article 19. Thus, the validity of the impugned rule has to be judged on the basis that the respondent and his co-employees are entitled to form Associations or Unions. It is clear that Rule 4-B imposes a restriction on this right. It virtually compels a Government servant to withdraw his membership of the Service Association of Government Servants as soon as recognition accorded to the said Association is withdrawn or if, after the Association is formed, no recognition is accorded to it within six months. In other words, the right to form an Association is conditioned by the existence of the recognition of the said Association by the Government. If the Association obtains the recognition and continues to enjoy it, Government servants can become members of the said Association; if the Association does not secure recognition from the Government or recognition granted to it is withdrawn, Government servants must cease to be the members of the said Association. That is the plain effect of the impugned rule".

The Court in the above passage, thus, accepted the principle that the Government servants, who may have formed an Association, could not be compelled to resign from it by imposition of a condition of recognition of this Association by the Government and that, if the Government servants are required to cease to be members, that would be a violation of the right under Article 19 (1) (c). The Court, of course, in that case, further proceeded to examine whether such a restriction on the right could be justified under Article 19 (4) or not. That case, thus, supports our view that the right to form an Association includes the right to its continuance and any law altering the composition of the Association compulsorily will be a breach of the right to form the Association.

7. This Court had also proceeded on the same basis in the case of State of Madras v. V. G. Row, 1952 SCR 597 = (AIR 1952 SC 196). Though this aspect was not clearly brought out in the judgment, the point, which came up for consideration, was decided on the basis that persons forming an Association had a right under Article 19 (1) (c) to see that the composition of the Association continues as voluntarily agreed to by them. That decision was given in an appeal from a judgment of the High Court of Madras reported in V. G. Row v. The State of Madras, AIR 1951 Mad 147 (FB). In the High Court, this principle was clearly formulated by Rajamannar, C. J., in the following words:-

"The word 'form' therefore, must refer not only to the initial commencement of the association, but also to the continuance of the association as such".

The Act, insofar as it interferes with the composition of the Society in constituting the Sammelan, therefore, violates the right of the original members of the Society to form an association guaranteed under Article 19 (1) (c).

8. Article 19 (4), on the face of it, cannot be called in aid to claim validity for the Act. Under Article 19 (4), reasonable restrictions can be imposed only in the interests of the sovereignty and integrity of India, or in the interests of public order or morality. It has not been contended on behalf of the respondent, nor could it be contended that this alteration of the constitution of the Society in the manner laid down by the Act was in the interests of the sovereignty and integrity of India, or in the interests of public order or morality. Not being protected under Article 19 (4), it must be held that the provision contained in the Act for reconstituting the Society into the Sammelan is void. Once that section is declared void, the whole Act becomes ineffective inasmuch as the formation of the new Sammelan is the very basis for all the other provisions contained in the Act.

9. In view of this position emerging in the course of arguments, Mr. B. Sen put forward an entirely different and alternative case before us which we have mentioned earlier. The position he took up was that the Act nowhere specifically lays down that the Society shall stand dissolved, while it does constitute a new Sammelan. According to him, therefore, it should be inferred that, while the Society still continues to exist in its original form, the law has brought into existence a new Sammelan to which all the functions, properties, etc., of the Society have passed under the Act. There are three reasons why this alternative submission cannot be accepted as ensuring the validity of the Act. The first is that the specific case taken by the respondents has been that the Act reconstitutes the Society and does not create a separate and independent body in the form of a new Sammelan. Secondly, even if it be accepted that a new Sammelan has been constituted by the Act, the question will arise of the legislative competence of Parliament to pass such a law. Constitution of Societies is under List II of the Seventh Schedule. Parliament purported to exercise legislative power under Entry 63 of List I on the basis of a declaration that the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan, Allahabad was an institution of national importance. The institution that was declared was the Society itself. It was not a case where the Society could be distinguished from some other institution which might have been declared as an institution of national importance. There can, of course, be cases where a Society may be running a college, a school or some other like institution, in which case Parliament may declare that particular institution as of national importance, without declaring the Society as such. In the present case, what Section 2 of the Act did was to declare the Society itself as an institution of national importance and, consequently, Parliament became competent to legislate in respect of the Society. On the interpretation now sought to be put forward, the Act keeps that Society intact, but deprives it of all its functions and properties and transfers them to a newly constituted body, viz., the Sammelan, as defined under the Act. This Sammelan is itself a body corporate, and that Sammelan has never been declared as an institution of national importance. The only institution that was declared as of national importance was the Society which, of course, earlier, carried the same name as the new Sammelan. Parliament was, therefore, not competent to legislate in respect of this newly constituted Sammelan which, at no stage, had been declared as an institution of national importance. The third reason why this submission must be rejected is that, if we were to hold that Parliament passed this Act so as to transfer all the properties and assets of the Society to the Sammelan, the Act would contravene Article 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution. On this interpretation, what the Act purports to do is to take away all the properties of the Society, leaving the Society as an existing body, and give them to the new Sammelan. This Sammelan is a new, separate and distinct legal entity from the Society. The Society is, thus, deprived of all its properties by the Act. Such a law depriving the Society of its properties altogether cannot be held to be a reasonable restriction in the public interest on the right of the Society to hold the property. The property, under Section 5 of the Societies Registration Act, 1860, vested in the Governing Body of the Society. The members of the Governing Body, therefore, had the right to hold the property under Article 19 (1) (f) and they, having been deprived of that property, have rightly approached the Courts for redress of their grievance.

10. In this connection, counsel for the respondents relied on the decision of this Court in Board of Trustees, Ayurvedic & Unani Tibbia College, Delhi v. The State of Delhi, (1962) Supp 1 SCR 156 = (AIR 1962 SC 458) where the Board of Trustees of the Ayurvedic & Unani Tibbia College, Delhi was dissolved by the Tibbia College Act, 1952, and the property, which had vested in the Board of Trustees, passed to the newly constituted Board under the impugned Act. The Court held that there was no violation of the fundamental rights guaranteed by Article 19 (1) (f) or Article 31. That decision, however, proceeded on the basis that the property of the original Society registered under the Societies Registration Act had vested in the Board of Trustees which had been dissolved and the property, thereafter, did not vest in the members of the Society in view of the provisions of the Act of 1860. In these circumstances, it was held that no one could complain that his right to property under Article 31 or his right to hold the property under Article 19 (1) (f) had been violated by the impugned Act. In the present case, the applicability of Article 19 (1) (f) is being considered by us on the assumption that the old Society still exists as it was and, yet, all its properties have been transferred to the Sammelan. If the Society still exists, so does its Governing Body in whom the property of the Society vested. The Act, thus, deprives the members of the Governing Body of the property which still continued to vest in them in spite of the passing of the Act. This total deprivation of property, instead of regulating the management of the affairs of the Society or its properties, cannot clearly be justified as a reasonable restriction in public interest. It is true that, at the time when the Act was passed, litigation was going on between the members of the Society, and the affairs of the Society were probably in a mess. The remedy, however, could not lie in depriving the Society of its property altogether. Reasonable restrictions could have been imposed so as to ensure the proper preservation of the property of the Society and its proper management. If the law is passed not merely for ensuring proper management and administration of the property, but for totally depriving the persons, in whom the property vested, of their right to hold the property, the law cannot be justified as a reasonable restriction under Article 19 (5). Consequently, even on this alternative position taken up by counsel for the respondents, the Act cannot be held to be valid.

11. As a result, the petition and the appeal are both allowed with costs. The Act is declared to be invalid, so that there will be restraint on the concerned bodies, including the Union Government, from taking or continuing any action under the Act. There will be one hearing fee.

Petition and appeal allowed.

HEGDE, J. (with Sikri, C. J., Mitter and Bhargava JJ.): — This is an execution appeal. The decree-holders are the appellants herein. This case has a long and chequered history. The decree-holders obtained a decree against the respondents in the Court of Sub-Judge, Bankura (West Bengal) for a sum of over Rs. 12,000/-, on December 3, 1949. On March 28, 1950 they applied to the Court which passed the decree to transfer the decree together with a certificate of non-satisfaction to the Court at Morena in the then State of Madhya Bharat for execution. It was ordered accordingly. The execution proceedings commenced in the Court of Additional District Judge at Morena on September 21, 1950 (Money Execution Case No. 8 of 1950). The judgment-debtors resisted the execution on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction to execute the same as the decree was that of a foreign Court and that the same had been passed ex parte. The Court accepted that contention and dismissed the execution petition on December 29, 1950. On April 1, 1951 the Code of Civil Procedure (Amendment) Act, (Act II of 1951) came into force. As a result of that the Code of Civil Procedure (in short the 'Code') was extended to the former State of Madhya Bharat as well as to various other places. Meanwhile the decree-holders appealed against the order of the learned Additional District Judge, Morena dismissing the execution petition, to the High Court of Madhya Pradesh. The Madhya Pradesh High Court allowed their appeal. As against that the judgment-debtors appealed to this Court. This Court allowed the appeal of the judgment-debtors and restored the order of the learned Additional District Judge, Morena. The decision of this Court is reported in Hansraj Nathu Ram v. Lalji Raja and Sons of Bankura, (1963) 2 SCR 619 = (AIR 1963 SC 1180). Therein this Court ruled that the transfer ordered by the Bankura Court was without jurisdiction as on that date 'the Code' did not apply to the Morena Court. This Court held that Morena Court not being a Court to which 'the Code' applied, the decree could not have been transferred to it. It further held that Sections 38 and 39 of 'the Code' did not afford justification for such a transfer. It may be noted that at the time the Bankura Court ordered the transfer of the decree, the Morena Court was governed by the Indian Code of Civil Procedure as adapted by the Madhya Bharat Adaptation Order, 1948. In other words it was governed by a law passed by the then Madhya Bharat State. In the course of its judgment this Court observed that under 'the Code' "a decree can be executed by a Court which passed the decree or to which it was transferred for execution and the decree which could be transferred has to be a decree passed under the Code and the Court to which it could be transferred has to be a Court which was governed by the Indian Code of Civil Procedure". The first stage of the execution proceedings came to an end by the decision of this Court rendered on April 30, 1962.

2. On February 15, 1963, the decree-holders filed another execution case before the Bankura Court. Therein they prayed for the transfer of the decree again to the Morena Court for execution. As noticed earlier, by that time 'the Code' had been extended to the Madhya Bharat State which later became a part of the State of Madhya Pradesh. The Bankura Court again ordered the transfer of the decree to the Morena Court. The execution proceedings were started afresh in the Morena Court on August 31, 1963 (Execution Case No. 1 of 1963). The judgment-debtors resisted the execution on various grounds viz., (a) that it is barred by res judicata in view of the decision of this Court referred to earlier; (b) that it is barred by Section 48 of 'the Code'; (c) that it is barred by limitation and (d) that the decree is not executable as it is a decree of a foreign Court.

3. The learned Additional District Judge rejected the objections raised by the judgment-debtors. The judgment-debtors appeals against that order to the High Court of Madhya Pradesh. The High Court agreed with the executing Court that the execution petition is neither barred by res judicata nor by Section 48 of 'the Code', nor is there any bar of limitation but it disagreed with that Court and held that the decree was not executable as the Court which passed the decree was a foreign Court. In arriving at that conclusion it purported to rely on the decision of this Court in Raj Rajendra Sardar Moloji Narsingh Rao Shitole v. Sri Shankar Saran, (1963) 2 SCR 577 = (AIR 1962 SC 1737). Aggrieved by that decision, the decree-holders have brought this appeal by special leave.

4. From the contentions advanced before us, two questions arise for decision. They are (1) whether the decree under execution is not executable by Courts situate in the area comprised in the former State of Madhya Bharat and (2) whether the decree is barred by Section 48 of 'the Code'.

5. The contention of the judgment-debtors is that the decree under execution being a decree of a foreign Court is a nullity qua the Courts in the former State of Madhya Bharat and therefore the same is not executable in the Morena Court. According to the decree-holders the decree in question is not a decree of a foreign Court as contemplated by 'the Code' and the Court to which the decree is transferred for execution namely the Morena Court is a 'Court' as contemplated by Sections 38 and 39 of 'the Code' and therefore there can be no valid objection to its execution in the Morena Court. Before referring to the decided cases on the point it is necessary to read the relevant provisions of 'the Code' as the execution is sought in accordance with provisions therein.

6. 'Foreign Court' is defined in Section 2 (5) of 'the Code'. That definition as it stood on the date the decree under execution was passed read thus:

"'foreign Court' means a Court situate beyond the limits of British India which has no authority in British India and is not established or continued by the Central Government".

7. A new definition of "foreign Court" was substituted by the Code of Civil Procedure (Amendment) Act, II of 1951. That definition reads:

"'foreign Court' means a Court situate outside India and not established or continued by the authority of the Central Government".

8. Whether we take the earlier definition or the present definition into consideration the Bankura Court cannot be considered as a "foreign Court" within the meaning of that expression in 'the Code'. Foreign judgment is defined in 'the Code' as the judgment of 'a foreign Court'. (Section 2 (6) of 'the Code'). Hence the decree under execution cannot be considered as a foreign decree for the purpose of the Code.

9. Section 13 of 'the Code' provides that "A foreign judgment shall be conclusive as to any matter thereby directly adjudicated upon between the same parties or between parties under whom they or any of them claim litigating under the same title except.....

(b) where it has not been given on the merits of the case".

10. The judgment with which we are concerned in this case was an ex parte judgment. The Bankura Court had no jurisdiction over the judgment-debtors. The judgment-debtors did not submit themselves to the jurisdiction of that Court though they were served with a notice of the suit. Hence if the Bankura Court can be considered as a foreign Court then Section 13 (b) would have come to the rescue of the judgment-debtors and it would have enabled them to plead that the judgment in question was not conclusive and consequently the decree is not binding against them. But as the judgment in question cannot be considered as a judgment of a foreign Court, they can take no assistance from Section 13 (b). But assistance was sought to be taken from Section 13 (d) which says that the foreign judgments are not conclusive "where the proceedings in which the judgment was obtained are opposed to natural justice". It was urged on behalf of the judgment-debtors that as the decree under execution was an ex parte decree, we must hold that the proceedings in which the judgment was obtained were opposed to natural justice. We are unable to accede to this contention. As mentioned earlier, the judgment-debtors were served with the notice of the suit. They did not choose to appear before the Court. Hence there is no basis for the contention that any principle of natural justice had been contravened. Further as held earlier the judgment in question is not a foreign judgment.

11. Reliance was placed on Private International Law in support of the contention that in a personal action, a decree pronounced in absentem by a foreign Court, to the jurisdiction of which the defendant had not in anyway submitted himself is an absolute nullity. It was urged that the Bankura Court had no jurisdiction over the judgment-debtors and therefore the decree passed being one pronounced in absentem is a nullity. In support of this contention reliance was placed on the decision of the Judicial Committee in Sirdar Gurdial Singh v. The Rajah of Faridkote, (1894) 21 Ind App 171. Therein the Judicial Committee observed:

"In a personal action, to which none of these causes of jurisdiction apply, a decree pronounced in absentem by a foreign Court, to the jurisdiction of which the Defendant has not in any way submitted himself, is by International Law an absolute nullity".

But the Board qualified those observations by the following words:

"He is under no obligation of any kind to obey it; and it must be regarded as a mere nullity by the Courts of every nation except (when authorised by special local legislation) in the country of the forum by which it was pronounced".

12. The above remarks of the Board indicate that even a decree which is pronounced in absentem by a foreign Court is valid and executable in the country of the forum by which it was pronounced when authorised by special local legislation. A decree passed by a foreign Court to whose jurisdiction a judgment-debtor had not submitted is an absolute nullity only if the local legislature had not conferred jurisdiction on the domestic Courts over the foreigners either generally or under specified circumstances. Section 20 (c) of 'the Code' confers jurisdiction on a Court in India over the foreigners if the cause of action arises within the jurisdiction of that Court. Hence the observation of the Board quoted in some of the decisions of the Courts in India including the decision of this Court in Shitole's case, (1963) 2 SCR 577 = (AIR 1962 SC 1737) (supra) that such a decree is an 'absolute nullity' may not be apposite. It may be more appropriate to say that the decree in question is not executable in Courts outside this country. The board itself had noticed that this rule of Private International Law is subject to special local legislation. Clause (c) of Section 20 of 'the Code' provided at the relevant time and still provides that subject to the limitations mentioned in the earlier sections of 'the Code', a suit can be instituted in a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the cause of action, wholly or in part, arises. There is no dispute in this case that the cause of action for the suit which led up to the decree under execution arose within the jurisdiction of Bankura Court. Hence it must be held that the suit in question was a properly instituted suit. From that it follows that the decree in question is a valid decree though it might not have been executable at one stage in Courts in the former Indian States.

13. This takes us to Ss. 38 and 39 of 'the Code'. Section 38 provides that a decree may be executed either by the court which passed it, or by the court to which it is sent for execution. Section 39 (1) to the extent it is material for our present purpose prescribes:

"The Court which passed a decree may, on the application of the decree-

holder, send it for execution to another Court—

(a) if the person against whom the decree is passed actually and voluntarily resides or carries on business, or personally works for gain within the local limits of the jurisdiction of such other Court. . . .”
Section 40 prescribes:

“where a decree is sent for execution in another State, it shall be sent to such Court and executed in such manner as may be prescribed by rules in force in that State.”

14. Rules are defined in S. 2 (12) as meaning Rules and Forms contained in the 1st Schedule or made under S. 122 or S. 125 of ‘the Code’. On a combined reading of Ss. 2 (12), 38, 39 and 40, it follows that a decree can be transferred for execution only to a court to which ‘the Code’ applies. This is what was ruled by this Court in (1963) 2 SCR 619 = (AIR 1963 SC 1180) (supra). But by the date the impugned transfer was made, ‘the Code’ had been extended to the whole of India. In fact the court to which the decree was transferred is now an entirely new court in the eye of the law—see the decision of this Court in Shitole’s case, (1963) 2 SCR 577 = (AIR 1962 SC 1737) (supra).

15. From the foregoing discussion, it follows that the decree under execution is not a foreign decree and its transfer to the Morena court is in accordance with the provisions of ‘the Code’. That being so, the decree under execution satisfies the dictum of this Court in (1963) 2 SCR 619 = (AIR 1963 SC 1180) (supra) that;

“a decree can be executed by a court which passed the decree or to which it was transferred for execution and the decree which could be transferred has to be a decree passed under the Code and the Court to which it could be transferred has to be a Court which was governed by the Indian Code of Civil Procedure.”

16. It was next urged on behalf of the judgment-debtors that in view of the decision of this Court in Shitole’s case, (1963) 2 SCR 577 = (AIR 1962 SC 1737) (supra) we must hold that the decree is a nullity and that it cannot be executed at all in the courts situate in the former State of Madhya Bharat. In Shitole’s case, (1963) 2 SCR 577 = (AIR 1962 SC 1737) (supra) this Court was called upon to consider a converse case. Therein the decree under execution was one passed by a court in Gwalior State in a suit instituted in May 1947. The defendants were the residents of U. P. They did not appear before the Gwalior Court though served with the notice. An ex parte decree was passed against them in November, 1948. On September, 1951, the Gwalior court transferred the decree for execution to Allahabad and on October 16, 1951, the decree-holder filed an application for execution of the decree before the Allahabad court. The judgment-debtors contended that the decree being a decree of a foreign court to whose jurisdiction they had not submitted, was a nullity and the execution application in respect thereof was not maintainable. That contention was accepted by this Court. It may be noted that the Gwalior Court was not a court constituted under the provisions of ‘the Code’. It was admittedly a foreign court for the purpose of any proceedings under ‘the Code’. The ratio of that decision is wholly inapplicable to the present case. The question whether a decree is a foreign decree or whether it can be transferred to another court for execution has to be judged by the provisions of ‘the Code’.

17. It was next contended that in view of S. 20 cl. (1) of ‘the Code’ of Civil Procedure (Amendment) Act, 1951 by which the Code is extended to Madhya Bharat and other areas, the judgment-debtors’ right to resist the execution of the decree is protected. Section 20 (1) of the Act deals with Repeals and Savings. That section to the extent relevant for our present purpose reads:

“If, immediately before the date on which the said Code comes into force in any part B State corresponding to the said Code, that law shall on that date stand repealed. Provided that the repeal shall not affect—

(b) any right, privilege, obligation or liability acquired, accrued or incurred under any law so repealed. . . . as if this Act had not been passed.”

18. This provision undoubtedly protects the rights acquired and privileges accrued under the law repealed by the amending Act. Therefore the question for decision is whether the non-executability of the decree in the Morena court under the law in force in Madhya Bharat before the extension of 'the Code' can be said to be a right accrued under the repealed law. We do not think that even by straining the language of the provision it can be said that the non-executability of a decree within a particular territory can be considered as a privilege. Therefore the only question that we have to consider is whether it can be considered as a 'right accrued' within the meaning of S. 20 (1) (b) of the Code of Civil Procedure (Amendment) Act, 1951. In the first place, in order to get the benefit of that provision, the non-executability of the decree must be a right and secondly it must be a right that had accrued from the provisions of the repealed law. It is contended on behalf of the judgment-debtors that when the decree was passed, they had a right to resist the execution of the decree in Madhya Bharat in view of the provisions of the Indian Code of Civil Procedure (as adapted) which was in force in the Madhya Bharat at that time and the same is a vested right. It was further urged on their behalf that that right was preserved by Section 20 (1) (b) of the Code of Civil Procedure Amendment Act, 1951. It is difficult to consider the non-executability of the decree in Madhya Bharat as a vested right of the judgment-debtors. The non-executability in question pertains to the jurisdiction of certain courts and not to the rights of the judgment-debtors. Further the relevant provisions of the Civil Procedure Code in force in Madhya Bharat did not confer the right claimed by the judgment-debtors. All that has happened in view of the extension of 'the Code' to the whole of India in 1951 is that the decrees which could have been executed only by courts in British India are now made executable in the whole of India. The change made is one relating to procedure and jurisdiction. Even before 'the Code' was extended to Madhya Bharat the decree in question could have been executed either against the person of the judgment-debtors if they had happened to come to British India or against any of their properties situate in British India. The execution of the decree within the State of Madhya Bharat was not permissible because the arm of 'the Code' did not reach Madhya Bharat. It was the invalidity of the order transferring the decree to the Morena court that stood in the way of the decree-holders in executing their decree in that court on the earlier occasion and not because of any vested rights of the judgment-debtors. Even if the judgment-debtors had not objected to the execution of the decree, the same could not have been executed by the court at Morena on the previous occasion as that court was not properly seized of the execution proceedings. By the extension of 'the Code' to Madhya Bharat, want of jurisdiction on the part of the Morena court was remedied and that court is now made competent to execute the decree.

19. That a provision to preserve the right accrued under a repealed Act "was not intended to preserve the abstract rights conferred by the repealed Act. . . It only applies to specific rights given to an individual upon happening of one or the other of the events specified in statute": see Lord Atkin's observations in Hamilton Gell v. White, (1922) 2 KB 422. The mere right, existing at the date of repealing statute, to take advantage of provisions of the statute repealed is not a "right accrued" within the meaning of the usual saving clause: see Abbot v. Minister for Lands (1895) AC 425 and G. Ogden Industries Pvt. Ltd. v. Lucas, (1969) 1 All ER 121.

20. From what has been said above, it follows that the view taken by the High Court that the decree in question is a nullity qua the Morena court cannot be accepted as correct. The decree in question is neither a 'foreign decree' as contemplated by 'the Code' nor its transfer to the Morena court impermissible under 'the Code'. By the provisions of 'the Code' the Morena court is required to proceed with the execution unless there is any valid objection.

21. We now come to the question whether the execution is barred by S. 48 of 'the Code'. (That section was repealed in 1963). Both the executing court as well as the High Court have taken the view that on the facts of this case, the limitation prescribed in S. 48 of 'the Code' is extended under S. 14 (2) of the Limitation Act, 1908. Both those courts have concurrently come to the conclusion that the previous execution proceedings had been prosecuted by the decree-holders with due diligence and with good faith and the same became infructuous in view of the fact that the Morena Court had no jurisdiction to proceed with the execution. The finding that the previous execution proceedings were carried on with due diligence and good faith and that the same became infructuous for want of jurisdiction on the part of the Morena court was not challenged before us. But it was urged on behalf of the judgment-debtors that S. 48 prescribed a bar and not a period of limitation and consequently the decree-holders cannot take the benefit of section 14 (2) of the Limitation Act. It is necessary to examine the correctness of this contention.

22. Section 48 read thus:

"(1) Where an application to execute a decree not being a decree granting an injunction has been made, no order for the execution of the same decree shall be made upon any fresh application presented after the expiration of 12 years from—

(a) the date of the decree sought to be executed, or,

"Description of application.	Period of Limitation.
To enforce a judgment, decree or order of any Court established by Royal Charter in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction or an order of the Supreme Court.	Twelve years.

24. At this stage it is also necessary to read Art. 181 of the Limitation Act of 1908. That Article prescribed that an application for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in the Schedule to the Limitation Act, 1908 or by S. 48 of the Code, the period of limitation is three years and that period begins to run when the right to apply accrues. Article 182 of that Act provided that for the execution of a decree or order of any Civil Court not provided for by article 183 or by S. 48 of 'the Code', the period of limitation is three years or where a certified copy of the decree or order has been registered.— six years. The time from which the period was to run is set out in the 3rd column of the Schedule.

25. The argument advanced on behalf of the judgment-debtors is that

(b) where the decree or any subsequent order directs any payment of money or the delivery of any property to be made at a certain date or at recurring periods, the date of the default in making the payment or delivery in respect of which the applicant seeks to execute the decree.

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed—

(a) to preclude the Court from ordering the execution of a decree upon an application presented after the expiration of the said term of twelve years, where the judgment-debtor has, by fraud or force, prevented the execution of the decree at some time within twelve years immediately before the date of the application; or

(b) to limit or otherwise affect the operation of article 183 of the First Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, 1908".

23. Article 183 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908 read thus:

Time from which period begins to run.

When a present right to enforce the judgment, decree or order accrues to some person capable of releasing the right:

Provided that when the judgment, decree or order has been revived, or some part of the principal money secured thereby or some interest on such money has been paid, or some acknowledgment of the right thereto has been given in writing signed by the person liable to pay such principal or interest or his agent, to the person entitled thereto or his agent, the twelve years shall be computed from the date of such revivor, payment or acknowledgment or the latest of such revivors payments or acknowledgments, as the case may be."

S. 48 is a self-contained Code and the period prescribed therein is a bar and not a period of limitation and hence the decree-holders cannot take the benefit of S. 14 (2). In support of this argument reliance is placed on sub-section 2 (a) of S. 48 of 'the Code'. That sub-section undoubtedly lends some support to the contention of the judgment-debtors. It indicates as to when the period prescribed under S. 48 (1) can be extended. By implication it can be urged that the period prescribed under S. 48 (1) of the Code can only be extended under the circumstances mentioned in that clause and not otherwise. But in assessing the correctness of that contention we have to take into consideration cl. (b) of sub-section (2) of S. 48 of 'the Code' as well as Arts. 181 and 182 of the Limitation Act, 1908. These provisions clearly go to indicate that the period prescribed under S. 48 (1) of 'the Code' is a period of limitation. This conclusion of ours is strengthened by the subsequent history of the legislation. By the Limitation Act 1963, S. 48 of 'the Code' is deleted. Its place has now been taken by Art. 136 of the Limitation Act of 1963.

26. At one stage, there was considerable conflict of judicial opinion as to whether S. 48 is controlled by the provisions of the Limitation Act 1908. But the High Courts which had earlier taken the view that S. 48 prescribes a bar and not limitation have now revised their opinion. The opinion amongst the High Courts is now unanimous that S. 48 of 'the Code' is controlled by the provisions of the Limitation Act, 1908—see Kandaswami Pillai v. Kannappa Chetty, AIR 1952 Mad 186 (FB) Durg v. Pancham ILR (1939) All 647 = (AIR 1939 All 403) Sitaram v. Chunnilalsa, ILR (1944) Nag 250 = (AIR 1944 Nag 155) Amarendra v. Manindra, AIR 1955 Cal 269 Krishna Chandra v. Paravattamma, AIR 1953 Orissa 13 and Ramgopal v. Sidram, AIR 1943 Bom 134.

27. We are of the opinion that the ratio of the above decisions correctly lay down the law. That apart, it would not be appropriate to unsettle the settled position in law.

28. For the reasons mentioned above this appeal is allowed and the order of the High Court is set aside and that of the trial court restored. The executing court is directed to proceed with the execution. The respondents shall pay the costs of the appellants both in this Court as well as in the High Court.

P. JAGANMOHAN REDDY, J.: 29.

I agree with my learned brother Hegde J., that the Appeal should be allowed. In the case of Kishendas v. Indo Carnatic Bank Ltd., AIR 1958 Andh Pra 407, I had while delivering the Judgment of the Bench expressed certain views which may appear to conflict with the view now taken. In that case the executability of a decree passed by the Madras High Court in 1940 by the City Civil Court Hyderabad on the ground of its being a foreign decree was called in question. The Respondent went into liquidation and a liquidator was appointed by the original side of Madras High Court. The liquidator filed an application under Section 191 of the Indian Companies Act for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 1375 from the Appellant who was a subject of H. E. H. the Nizam and a resident of Hyderabad on account of unpaid calls and the Court passed an ex parte decree on 15-8-1940 against the Appellant. The liquidator filed an execution petition in that Court praying for a transfer of the decree to the City Civil Court Hyderabad which was ordered on 15-3-1951 when the Hyderabad Civil Procedure Code was in force in the Hyderabad State, under which the decree of the Madras High Court would be a foreign decree and the only way in which the liquidator could recover the decretal amount was by filing a suit on that decree. No doubt the Madras High Court could not on that date i.e. 15-3-1951 pass an order directing the transfer of the decree as it was to a Court which was not governed by the Indian Civil Procedure Code (hereinafter called the Code) nor on that date were there any reciprocal arrangements for executing those decrees in the Hyderabad State. Madras High Court could not therefore transfer a decree passed by it for execution to a Court which did not satisfy the provisions of Sections 43 to 45 on that date. It did not also appear from the facts of that case whether any notice was served on the Appellant but following the decision of the majority of the High Courts in this Country and also relying on the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in (1894) 21 Ind App 171 that a decree pronounced in absentem by a foreign Court the jurisdiction to which the defendant has not in any way submitted himself is by international law a nullity. I also took the view that the non-executability of the decree is to be determined as on the date on which it was passed and that no distinction can conceivably be made between the decree passed by British Indian Courts before the merger or before the Independence when it was a foreign decree and a decree passed by the Courts of a native State before the Independence or merger—in both cases the character of the Judgment would be that of a foreign Judgment and if it suffers from any want of jurisdiction or otherwise it will continue to be subject to that defect. This Court had also expressed a similar view in Raj Rajendra Sardar Maloji Narsingh Rao Shitole v. Sri Shankar Saran, (1963) 2 SCR 577 = (AIR 1962 SC 1737) when it held that an ex parte decree passed in 1948 by the Gwalior Court against residents of U. P. who did not appear was not executable in Allahabad even though the Gwalior Court had transferred the decree in October 1957 after the Civil Procedure Amendment Act II of 1951 came into force after which the Gwalior Court was a Court under the Code. It was held by a majority that the decree passed by the Gwalior Court did not change its nationality in spite of subsequent constitutional changes or amendments in the Code of Civil Procedure, that if a decree was unenforceable in a particular Court at the time it was passed it would not become enforceable and valid simply because of the political changes that took place unless there is a specific provision to the contrary and that the decree being a nullity outside the Courts of the United States (Madhya Bharat) in the absence of any specific provision it could not be enforced in the United States (Madhya Bharat). Kapur J., speaking for himself, Rajagopala Ayyangar and Mudholkar JJ., observed at page 594-595 (of SCR) = (at p. 1744 of AIR) thus:

"It will not be correct to say that the decree which was a nullity before the Constitution came into force suffered only from the defect of enforceability by execution. Section 13 creates substantive rights and is not merely procedural and therefore defences which were open to the Respondents were not taken away by any Constitutional changes in the absence of a specific provision to the contrary. It is erroneous to say therefore that the decree of the Gwalior Court was unenforceable when passed because of some impediment which the subsequent Constitutional changes had removed; but that decree suffered from a more fundamental defect of being a nullity and the rights and liabilities created under it remained unaffected by subsequent changes".

30. The contention that the decree of the Gwalior Court could be executed after its transfer on September 14, 1951 when the Civil Procedure Code came into force throughout India by virtue of Act II of 1951 and that therefore the Gwalior Court had the power to transfer the decree which the Allahabad Court had under the law authority to execute was also negated for the reason that the "Court which made the order of transfer in September 1951 was then not the Court which passed the decree within the meaning of Section 39". Das Gupta J., with whom Sarkar J., as he then was, concurred, did not find it necessary to deal with the question of foreign decree which as he said the Allahabad Court rightly considered a nullity. On the second and third question he held that Allahabad Court had no power to execute the decree under Section 38 of the Civil Procedure Code as there was no valid transfer to it from 'the Court which passed the decree' nor did Section 43 of the Civil Procedure Code as it stood applied to the execution of that decree.

31. Even though the observations in Kishendas's case, AIR 1958 Andh Pra 891, find support in the above Judgment the ratio of the decision in that case being that the Madras Court on the date of the order could not transfer the decree to the Hyderabad Court, the facts of this case however do not warrant an application of the principles of international law or of the decree being a nullity. The earlier execution proceedings ended unsuccessfully with the decision in (1963) 2 SCR 619 = (AIR 1963 SC 1180). It was decided in that case, that Morena Court not being a Court to which the Code applied the decree could not have been transferred and that Sections 38 and 39 of the Code did not afford jurisdiction for such transfer as the Morena Court at the time of transfer was governed by the Madhya Bharat Civil Procedure Code and not by the Code. What is relevant in the present case is that when the decree-holder again applied to the Bankura Court for execution of his decree by the Morena Court after the decision of this Court in Hansraj's case, both the Court that passed the decree and the Court to which it is transferred for execution were Courts under the Code, as such no question of the Bankura decree being a foreign decree or it being a nullity could arise. The Morena Court on the date when the order of transfer of the decree was passed by the Bankura Court is not a Court governed by the Gwalior law or Madhya Bharat law as such the impediment to executability of the Bankura decree no longer exists nor could it be considered in the light of Section 20 (c) of the Amendment Act II of 1951 as having saved any right or privileges under the repealed Procedure Code of Gwalior or Madhya Bharat. Whatever may be the views expressed in the several decisions a view which I was also inclined to take in the decision referred to, though on the facts of that case it may not have been necessary, on a further and fuller consideration I agree with great respect with the views of my learned brother Hegde J., that no question of a vested right or a privilege arises to entitle the Respondent to challenge the execution proceedings in Morena Court. The decree granted by Bankura Court was executable by the Courts governed by the same Code by the Court which passed it or by the Court to which it is transferred. Once the Code is made applicable to the whole of India by the Amendment Act II of 1951 the decree is no longer a foreign decree qua the Morena Court which is a Court under the Code to which the Bankura Court could transfer the decree for execution. No doubt in Shitole's case, (1963) 2 SCR 577 = (AIR 1962 SC 1757) it was observed that Section 13 of the Code creates substantive rights and not merely procedural and therefore defences that were open to the Respondents were not taken away by any Constitutional changes but the ratio of the decision was that the Gwalior Court not being a Court that passed the decree after the coming into force of Act II of 1951 the Allahabad Court could not execute it. That impediment does not exist now in that the Bankura Court has transferred the decree to a Court under the Code. The plea that Section 48 Civil Procedure Code presents a bar of limitation is also not tenable. In the result I agree that the Appeal should be allowed as directed by my learned brother.

Appeal allowed.

Mr. D. B. Mukherjee, Sr. Advocate (Mr. R. L. Kohli, Advocate, with him), for Appellants; Mr. Janardan Sharma, Advocate, for Respondent.

HEGDE, J.: At about 7 a.m. on October 31, 1966, two persons by name Moti Ram and Balak Ram were injured as a result of an attack on them. The attack in question is said to have been made when they were on their way to the field for cultivation. It is said that they fell unconscious at the spot itself. When they were being removed to the hospital, Moti Ram died on the way and later Balak Ram died in the hospital. The information about this offence was laid by P. W. 4, Harnam Das, the brother of the deceased Moti Ram at 9-30 a.m. on the same morning at Mullana Police Station which is about six miles from the scene of occurrence. In that information he accused the appellants as having attacked Moti Ram and Balak Ram. He claims to have seen the occurrence himself.

2. During the pendency of the investigation of the case one Rattan Lal, the brother of the appellant Gopi Chand sent a petition to the Superintendent of Police, Ambala on November 5, 1966. Therein he gave out a different version of the incident. According to the version given by him, the deceased persons and some of their relations attacked the appellants Nos. 1 to 3, when they were proceeding in a cart and that the appellant No. 4, Bhusan Lal was not present at the time of the occurrence. Therein he further stated that appellants Nos. 1 to 3 defended themselves by removing the cart pegs. The Superintendent of Police forwarded this petition to the Dy. Superintendent of Police for enquiry. He in turn appears to have entrusted the same to the Inspector of Police. It is also seen from the evidence that the Superintendent of Police himself went to the locality some days later and supervised the investigation.

3. On January 31, 1967, P. W. 4, Harnam Das filed a petition before the Judicial Magistrate, 1st Class, Ambala Cantt. alleging that the police were sabotaging the prosecution case with a view to help the accused. The implied suggestion in that complaint was that with a view to undermine his complaint, the police were distorting the version showing that Bhushan Lal, appellant No. 4 was not present at the occurrence and thereby not only exonerate Bhushan Lal but also condemn the evidence adduced in support of his complaint as being unreliable.

4. After the investigation the police sent up a somewhat curious final report. Despite the fact that the complainant's version that the appellants including Bhushan Lal had attacked the deceased persons was supported by other evidence, it was recommended in that report that Bhushan Lal may be discharged and in his place Rattan Lal, the brother of the appellant Gopi Chand, who as seen earlier had sent a petition on Nov. 5, 1967, be included as an accused. At the trial of the case no evidence whatsoever was led against Rattan Lal. Therefore the complaint of P. W. 4, Harnam Das that the police were trying to sabotage the prosecution case cannot be dismissed as being frivolous.

5. Despite the report of the police, the learned Magistrate took cognizance against all the appellants as well as against Rattan Lal. But instead of framing one consolidated charge against all of them, he adopted a somewhat novel procedure. He framed two sets of alternative charges. In the first set he charged the present appellants under S. 302 read with S. 34, I. P. C. for the murder of Moti Ram and Balak Ram respectively; under the second set he charged appellants Nos. 1 to 3 and Rattan Lal for the murder of those very persons. After holding a preliminary enquiry, he committed the appellants as well as Rattan Lal to the court of the Ses-

6. The learned Sessions Judge did not alter the charge which he could have and should have. But the prosecution adduced evidence only against the appellants. No evidence whatsoever was led against Rattan Lal, nor even the three court witnesses implicated Rattan Lal. The learned trial Judge believed the prosecution evidence, convicted the appellants under S. 302 read with S. 34, I. P. C. He acquitted Rattan Lal. For the murder of Moti Ram all the appellants were sentenced to death but in the charge for the murder of Balak Ram, appellant Bhushan Lal was sentenced to death but the other accused were sentenced to imprisonment for life. The death sentences imposed on them were subject to the confirmation by the High Court.

7. As against the decision of the learned Sessions Judge, the appellants went up in appeal to the High Court of Punjab and Haryana. The learned Sessions Judge sent up the records to the High Court with his report for confirmation of the death sentences imposed on the appellants. The appeal filed by the appellants and the reference made by the learned Sessions Judge were heard together by a division bench of the Punjab and Haryana High Court. The division bench accepted the prosecution case and confirmed the convictions of the appellants. But it reduced the sentence imposed on the appellants to imprisonment for life. Thereafter this appeal has been brought by special leave.

8. Before proceeding to consider the contentions advanced before this Court, it is necessary to set out the defence of the appellants. According to the appellant Bhushan Lal, he was not present at the time of the occurrence and that he had been falsely implicated in the case. According to the other appellants, when appellant Gopi Chand was proceeding in a cart on the morning in question, he was attacked by the deceased persons as well as by two others. Hearing his cries, appellants No. 2 and 3 rushed up to the place to rescue him. When they went there they were attacked by the party of the deceased. At that stage they defended themselves. In short their plea is one of self-defence.

9. From the two versions put forward by the prosecution and the accused, it is clear that an incident did take place at the place and time mentioned in the charge as a result of which the two deceased persons received serious injuries, one of them namely Moti Ram died very soon after the incident and the other Balak Ram on November 1, 1966. The medical evidence discloses that Moti Ram had received as many as 12 injuries, six of them were incised wounds and two were contusions. One of the contusions was in the right eye-brow. Its dimension was 4"x1". That injury had fractured his skull; the bones of the skull were broken into many pieces. The Medical Officer who had conducted the post-mortem of Moti Ram was of the opinion that primarily the deceased must have died as a result of that injury. Balak Ram had sustained six injuries; three of them were contusions, one was an incised injury. Further he had a big swelling extending from the angle of right mandible upwards above the ear and right side of the scalp. The post-mortem examination disclosed a big haematoma under the scalp. The Medical Officer was of the opinion that the death must have been the result of shock and haemorrhage due to the two blows given on the head of Balak Ram viz. injuries Nos. 1 and 5.

10. There is no doubt that both the deceased persons had received serious injuries. Both of them must have been mercilessly attacked. On November 3, 1966, the appellant Bhushan Lal, Kahan Singh and Gopi Chand were also produced for medical examination. On Bhushan Lal, there were two minor abrasions. Kahan Singh had two injuries, one was a contusion 1/2"x1/6th" on the middle of the scalp, the other was an abrasion. Gopi Chand had nine injuries, three contusions and six abrasions. One contusion was 3/4"x1/4" on the scalp, another 1/2"x1/4" again on the scalp and the third was 5/4"x1/4" on the forearm. The injuries sustained by the appellants are of very minor character.

11. There was bitter enmity between the party of the accused and the deceased. The accused and the deceased persons are close relations. Appellant Gopi Chand is the first cousin of deceased Moti Ram. As observed by the learned Judges of the High Court when relations fall out, the bitterness is all the greater. A case and a counter-case was pending between the parties under Section 307, I. P. C. Both the parties were also being proceeded against under Section 107, I. P. C. About five days before the occurrence, the party of the deceased had purchased the land just in front of the house of the appellant, Gopi Chand. Appellant Gopi Chand wanted to purchase that land. His door opened to that land and it is admitted by P. W. 4 that because of the purchase of the land by his party, Gopi Chand might have had to close his door.

12. The prosecution case, as mentioned earlier, was that when the deceased persons were proceeding to their field for cultivation, they were attacked by the appellants; at that stage, the deceased persons put up a meek defence but they were overpowered and done to death. This version is supported primarily by the evidence of P. W. 4, Harnam Das and P. W. 5, Sadhu Singh. P. W. 4 is undoubtedly an interested witness. He is the brother of deceased Moti Ram. But his evidence gets corroboration from the First Information given by him. It must be remembered that that information was given very soon after the occurrence and therefore the possibility of putting up a false version is remote. P. W. 5 appears to be an independent witness. The evidence of P. Ws. 4 and 5 has been accepted as true both by the trial Court as well as by the High Court. Their evidence receives support from the evidence of P. W. 8, Gobind Ram and P. W. 9, Gurcharan Singh. According to P. W. 9, at about the time of the occurrence, he was returning to his house after answering the calls of nature. At that time he saw the four appellants proceeding to the scene of occurrence. At that time the appellants Kahan Singh and Gopi Chand were armed with burchas and Bahadur and Bhushan Lal were armed with Kulharis; sometime later he came to know about the murder of Moti Ram and Balak Ram. This witness also appears to be an independent witness, and his evidence had commended itself to the trial Court as well as to the High Court. The evidence of Gobind Ram is to the effect that on the morning in question he heard cries from the scene of occurrence. On hearing

those cries, he proceeded towards the scene. When he had covered about four killas, he saw the appellants coming from the opposite directions. At that time they were all armed. He enquired with them as to what had happened. They told him that they had taught a lesson to Moti Ram and Balak Ram. His evidence has also been believed by both the Courts. Ordinarily this Court does not reappraise evidence already considered by two Courts. We have found no reason to depart from that rule in this case. Apart from pointing out certain minor discrepancies in the evidence of these witnesses nothing substantial was shown to us to discredit the evidence in the case. The probabilities of the case lend support to the evidence of these witnesses. The party of the appellants must have been smarting at the rebuff they received from the deceased persons in the matter of purchase of land referred to earlier. This incident must have added to the already existing enmity between them and the party of the deceased persons, and must have served as an immediate provocation. The injuries found on the person of the deceased also go to indicate that the appellants must have been the aggressors.

13. The three Court witnesses examined in the case tried in a somewhat feeble manner to support the case of the appellants. Their evidence was mutually contradictory. Each one of them had a version of his own and further the evidence given by them in Court materially differs from the statements made by them during investigation. Hence the trial Court as well as the High Court were right in placing no reliance on their testimony. The learned Counsel for the appellants made a somewhat hesitant attempt to commend their evidence for our acceptance. Their evidence is discrepant and the version given by them is basically improbable.

14. Some comment was also made on the fact that the trial Court and the High Court erred in not taking into consideration the evidence of P. Ws. 6 and 7. It is clear from the evidence of these witnesses that they had turned hostile to the prosecution. The Public Prosecutor was allowed to cross-examine them. The trial Court and the High Court did not refer to this evidence. The contention of Mr. Mukherjee was that the trial Court and the High Court should have attempted to salvage something out of their evidence. But there was nothing to salvage from their evidence. The effect of their evidence is that they had not seen the occurrence. Therefore there was no question of separating the grain from the chaff.

15. The only substantial argument advanced on behalf of the appellants is that the charges under which they were tried were defective and therefore the trial is vitiated. It is true that the trial Court should not have framed the alternative charges referred to earlier. If it wanted to proceed with the case against Rattan Lal as well as it should have included him along with the other accused and framed common charges. On the facts of this case there was no question of framing an alternative charge. It is not a case wherein the aid of Section 236, Cr. P. C. could have been taken. All the same there is absolutely no reason to think that the accused had been prejudiced by the alternative charges mentioned earlier. As seen earlier, the prosecution led evidence only in support of the charge that the four appellants were responsible for the murders of Moti Ram and Balak Ram. No evidence whatsoever has been led in support of the alternative charges. Counsel for the appellants was not able to show us how the accused can be said to have been prejudiced by the alternative charges. This Court has ruled in Willie (William) Slaney v. The State of Madhya Pradesh, (1955) 2 SCR 1140 = (AIR 1956 SC 116); that a mere defect in the charge is no ground for setting aside a conviction. Procedural laws are designed to subserve the ends of justice and not to frustrate them by mere technicalities. The object of the charge is to give an accused notice of the matter he is charged with. That does not touch jurisdiction. If the necessary information is conveyed to him and no prejudice is caused to him because of the charges, the accused cannot succeed by merely showing that the charges framed were defective. Some decisions were read to us showing that if the prosecution speaks in discordant voices as to the person or persons who are responsible for the offence, that would be a ground for acquitting the accused. It is not necessary to refer to those decisions in view of the decision of this Court in William Slaney's case, (1955) 2 SCR 1140 = (AIR 1956 SC 116) (supra), the essential question being whether the accused were prejudiced by the charge. As mentioned earlier, we are unable to hold that the appellants in this case were prejudiced by the alternative charges referred to earlier.

16. In the result this appeal fails and the same is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

BHARGAVA, J.: — This appeal by special leave is by a tenant who has been ordered to be ejected or the ground that he was in arrears of rent for more than three months and did not tender them even at the first hearing by the Rent Controller of the application for ejectment presented by the landlord under Section 13 of the East Punjab Urban Rent Restriction Act III of 1949. The High Court of Punjab and Haryana in its judgment stated that, admittedly, the rent of the premises was fixed at Rs. 20/- per month and was to be paid in advance each month. In addition, the rent of the electricity was to be paid separately. In dealing with the case, the High Court proceeded on the basis that, on the date of the application which was made on 22nd September, 1964, the rent that was in arrears amounted to Rs. 400/- calculated @ Rs. 20/- per mensem. In addition, Rs. 22.05p were due as interest on this amount up to that date, and the costs due could be taken at the figure of Rs. 25/-. This totals to a sum of Rs. 447.05p. It was argued that, in addition, a sum of Rs. 50/28p was due as electricity charges. The amount in deposit, according to the tenant, came to Rs. 469, while the various amounts due, mentioned above, made up a total of Rs. 497.33p. On these facts, the High Court further was of the view that the amount due in respect of electricity charges will certainly form part of the rent and, relying on an earlier decision of the same Court in Hari Ram Jaggi v. Des Raj Sethi, (1966) 68 Pun LR 431, it held that the deposit of Rs. 469/- did not cover the entire arrears of rent due, so that the tenant was liable to ejectment. On this view, the High Court upheld the order of the District Judge directing eviction of the tenant-appellant. This appeal is directed against this order of the High Court.

2. In deciding this case, neither the District Judge nor the High Court took care to examine the pleadings in the application for eviction put forward by the landlord-respondent, nor did they try to properly interpret the rent-note containing the terms of the tenancy. In para 1 of the application presented by the landlord, it was clearly stated that "the respondent is a tenant of the petitioner at a monthly rent of Rs. 20/-". There was no mention at this stage that there was any other amount which formed part of the rent. In Clause (c) of para. 2, it was stated that "the respondent has installed a separate meter without the consent of the petitioner thereby causing damage to the property and has failed to pay the electricity charges from January, 1963 to November, 1963 (when he got a new meter) which come to Rs. 50/28np." In this pleading, all that was claimed was that the landlord was entitled to receive electricity charges from the tenant. It was nowhere stated that these arrears of electricity charges formed part of the rent. Consequently, no issue was framed in the trial Court on the question whether the electricity charges formed part of the rent or not. For the first time, the appellate Court took this point into consideration and held that the electricity charges formed part of the rent. On the face of it, there was no justification for accepting this new point when it was not pleaded at all in the original application. Further, even the rent note itself makes it clear that the electricity charges could not possibly form part of the rent. The rent note first mentions that the appellant is taking on rent the premises "on a monthly rent of Rs. 20/-, double of Rs. 10/-, for residential purposes, for a period of five months commencing from 1st May, 1954". Thereafter, the rent note, as translated in the paper book, shows that there was a further agreement as under:—

"I shall pay one month's rent in advance and shall remain paying rent every month in advance. I shall not sub-let the entire or any portion thereof. I shall pay the electric charges separately. I shall not make any alteration"

The agreement to pay the electric charges was, thus, separately mentioned. In Urdu, the language in which the rent note was scribed, the word which has been translated as charges was "Kiraya". It is because of the use of this word that the High Court seems to have held that the electric charges payable were part of the rent. It failed to notice that the clause itself said that this amount in respect of electric charges was to be paid separately. Further, this was not rent for electric fittings, but was the amount payable in respect of actual electric energy consumed in each month. The amount due for consumption of electricity each month could only be known at the end of that month, while, under the earlier clause of the agreement, the rent had to be paid in advance. On the face of it, therefore, the electric charges for a month could not possibly be paid with the rent. These electric charges could not, consequently, form part of the rent. The charges were further variable and would depend on the amount of electricity consumed. No fixed amount was payable in respect of electricity charges. If electric charges were to be held to be part of the rent, it would lead to the inference that even the rent of the building was variable and was different each month. In view of these circumstances, it is clear that the District Judge and the High Court went wrong in proceeding on the basis that the electric charges formed part of the rent and that non-payment of electric charges due amounted to non-payment of arrears of rent.

3. As we have mentioned earlier, the High Court followed the decision of the same Court in the earlier case of Hari Ram Jaggi, (1966) 68 Pun LR 431 (supra). The High Court failed to notice that, in that case, there was a fixed amount payable every month as electric charges. We do not consider it necessary to express any opinion whether, in such a case, the electric charges could or could not form part of the rent. On the face of it, where the electric charges are not fixed and can only be ascertained at the end of each month, after the electricity consumed is known, while the rent is payable in advance, it is clear that the electric charges cannot be held to form part of the rent. The basis, on which that earlier case was decided, does not, therefore, exist in the present case.

4. The High Court has accepted that the amount in deposit was enough to cover arrears of rent, in case the electric charges are not treated as part of the rent. On this finding, the decision of the High Court upholding the order of eviction cannot be justified. It, however, appears that the District Judge had recorded another finding against the tenant. According to the District Judge, there was no deposit or tender even of the amount of Rs. 469/-. In the revision before the High Court, this finding of the District Judge was also assailed by the tenant. The High Court did not examine the propriety or correctness of this finding. Consequently, it is necessary that this aspect of the case should be examined by the High Court.

5. As a result, we set aside the order of the High Court dismissing the revision, and hold that, in case there was a proper deposit or tender of the sum of Rs. 469/- by the tenant, the tenant was not in arrears of rent and was not liable to ejectment. The case will now go back to the High Court for re-hearing of the revision on the question whether this sum of Rs. 469/- had been tendered or deposited in accordance with law so as to satisfy the requirements of Section 13 of Act III of 1949. The costs of this appeal will abide the result.

Order set aside; case remanded.

VAIDIALINGAM J.: — This appeal on certificate, issued under Articles 132 (1) and 133 (1) (a) and (c), is directed against the judgment and order dated June 24, 1966 of the Madras High Court in Writ Petition No. 1958 of 1965.

2. The Madras Lease-holds (Abolition and Conversion into Ryotwari) Act, 1963 (Madras Act 27 of 1963), hereinafter to be referred as the Act, received the assent of the President on December 12, 1963 and was published in the Gazette on January 1, 1964. The Act extends to the lease-holds specified in the schedule to the Act. In exercise of the powers under Section 1 (3) of the Act, the State of Madras in G. O. Press No. 311, Revenue, dated February 9, 1965 notified that the Act shall come into force on February 15, 1965. Under Section 4 of the Act with effect on and from the appointed day, namely, February 15, 1965, the lease of every lease-hold shall cease and every lease-holds including all communal lands and parambokes, etc., stood transferred and vested in the Government free of all encumbrances. The Madras Irrigation Cess Act and all other enactments applicable to Ryotwari lands were also to apply to the lease-hold. The expression "leasehold" was defined as any village specified in the first Schedule. Under Section 9, on and from the appointed day, every ryot was entitled to ryotwari patta in respect of all his owned lands and the lessee was also entitled to a ryotwari patta in respect of his owned lands. A "lessee" was defined in the Act as a person to whom the lease was granted by the Government and included his heirs, legal representatives and assigns. Grant Lyon in Saidapet taluk of Chingleput district was one of the leasehold villages specified in the first Schedule to the Act and as such on and from February 15, 1965 it stood transferred to the Government and vested in them free from all encumbrances as provided under Sec. 4 of the Act. The Tahsildar, Saidapet, issued a notice to the appellant on April 9, 1965 calling upon him to keep ready all documents, accounts, registers, pattas, muchilikas, etc., relating to the leasehold in respect of Grant Lyon in Saidapet taluk. The notice also mentioned that the Tahsildar will take possession of those items on April 17, 1965.

3. On receipt of the notice on April 20, 1965, issued by the Tahsildar, the appellant filed the writ petition in the Madras High Court praying for the issue of a writ of certiorari to quash the notification of the Government of Madras G. O. Press No. 311, Revenue, dated February 9, 1965 on the ground that the provisions of the Act are illegal and unconstitutional. The appellant also prayed for an order restraining the State of Madras and its officers from giving effect to the provisions of the Act and the notification issued thereunder relating to Grant Lyon village.

4. According to the appellant the lands in the Grant Lyon village had been granted on a lease on December 2, 1904 by the Secretary of State for India in Council to his paternal-grandfather. The lease was for a period of 99 years and the appellant's family as lessees were entitled to be in possession of the property paying to the Government every year a sum of Rs. 2100/- as lease amount. The appellant claimed that he and his predecessors in title were in continuous possession and occupation of the lands in accordance with the lease and have been paying the lease amount to the Government regularly. While so the Act was passed by the State of Madras providing for termination of leases of certain leaseholds granted by the Government and the acquisition of the rights of lessees in such leaseholds and for introduction of ryotwari settlements. The appellant pleaded that the Act, if implemented, affects his fundamental right to hold and enjoy property in accordance with the lease deed and that the provisions for payment of compensation as provided in the Act were illusory and contrary to the provisions of the Constitution. The Act, according to the appellant, violates the provisions of Articles 19 and 31 of the Constitution. As the Government had been attempting to enforce the provisions of the Act in pursuance of the notice issued by the Tahsildar on April 9, 1965, the appellant had to approach the High Court under Article 226 seeking relief to strike down the Act. The appellant further stated that all the lands in the village have been notified for acquisition under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 (Central Act 1 of 1894). The notification under Section 4 had been issued on April 4, 1963 and the declaration has also been made in January, 1964. In view of this the appellant further raised a contention that his right to receive the market value under the Land Acquisition Act was also sought to be interfered with by enforcing the provisions of the Act.

5. The State of Madras opposed the writ petition and contended that the Act does not violate any fundamental right of the appellant and that the Act is saved by Article 31-A of the Constitution. The State further contended that the mere fact that a notification under Section 4 and a declaration under Section 6 had been issued under the Land Acquisition Act, does not debar the State from enforcing the provisions of the Act.

6. The High Court by its order under attack upheld the validity of the Act. The High Court further held that as an award has not been made under the Land Acquisition Act and as the land has not vested in the State under Section 16 of the Land Acquisition Act, the State was entitled to enforce the provisions of the Act. In this view it upheld the validity not only of the Act but also of the Government Order dated February 9, 1965 bringing into force the provisions of the Act as also the legality of the notice issued by the Tahsildar on April 9, 1965.

7. In this appeal before us Mr. P. Ram Reddy, learned counsel for the appellant raised two contentions: The first contention related to the unconstitutionality of the Act on the ground that it affects the fundamental rights guaranteed to the appellant under Articles 19 and 31 of the Constitution. The second contention related to the enforceability of the Act in view of the proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act, already initiated.

8. So far as the first contention regarding the constitutional validity of the Act is concerned, it is now concluded against the appellant by the decision of this Court in Khajamian Wakf Estates v. The State of Madras, AIR 1971 SC 161. The Act, as well as the two other enactments, were attacked as violating the fundamental rights guaranteed under Articles 14, 19 and 31 of the Constitution. The Constitution Bench rejected this contention and held that the Act, as well as the other two enactments referred to in the decision, are completely protected by Article 31-A of the Constitution. It has been further held that the impugned Act provides for acquisition by the State of an 'estate' as contemplated by Article 31-A and it seeks to abolish all intermediate holders and to establish direct relationship between the Government and the occupants of the concerned lands. It is further held that the Act is a piece of legislation undertaken as a part of agrarian reform and that the provisions relating to the acquisition on the extinguishment of the rights of the intermediate holders fall within the meaning of Article 31-A. Though this decision of this Court was not available to the High Court, nevertheless, its conclusion that the Act is not invalid, is correct. Therefore, the first contention will have to be rejected.

9. So far as the second contention is concerned, in our opinion, the fact that proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, have been taken is no bar to applying the provisions of the Act to the village in question. The dates given earlier show that no award under the Land Acquisition Act has been passed and the lands have also not vested in the State under Section 16 of the said Act. The provisions of the Land Acquisition Act and the Act operate on different fields. The appellant will be entitled to ryotwari patta under Sec. 9 of the Act. The proceedings taken under the Land Acquisition Act seek to acquire the entire interest of everyone in the lands and there is no restriction in the right sought to be acquired. The appellant will be entitled only to that portion of compensation which is relating to his right; and other people interested in the land will be entitled to the other portion of compensation. If the appellant is granted, under Section 9 of the Act a ryotwari patta, then in respect of those lands, he will be entitled to get compensation under the Land Acquisition Act. In this view the application of the Act to the village in question will not affect his other rights in any manner. We are of the opinion that the stand taken by the State before the High Court in paragraph 7 of its counter-affidavit in the writ petition, is correct. Hence the second contention also fails.

10. The appeal fails and is dismissed. In view of the fact that the decision of this Court regarding the constitutional validity of the Act was given only after the decision of the High Court, there will be no order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Mr. D. B. Mukherjee, Sr. Advocate, (M/s. D. K. Shah and N. N. Keswani, Advocates, with him), for Appellants; M/s. P. K. Chatterjee, B. D. Sharma and S. P. Nayar, Advocates, for Respondent.

MITTER, J.: — In this appeal by special leave from a judgment of the Gujarat High Court the point canvassed before us was that inasmuch as the High Court found itself unable to rely fully on the evidence of six of the main prosecution witnesses with regard to at least two of the appellants before it in view of the evidence as to alibi, it had gone wrong in accepting the evidence with regard to the appellants before us and upholding their conviction.

2. The relevant facts for the disposal of the appeal may be stated as follows. The village of Nani Naroli in the District of Surat has a population of roughly 3,500. The Bhora community to which the appellants belong command a majority thereof. The other community which has any strength is that of the Maleka commanding a population of about 1,000. Both these communities are Muslim. Besides these two there is a small population of other people composed of Hindus and Vasavas. There was a good deal of hostility between Bhoras and the Maleks mainly engendered as a result of the Gram Panchayat elections in the middle of the year 1967 whereat the Bhoras carried the day, and the original accused No. 1 and one Lalji were elected as Sarpanch and Deputy Sarpanch defeating the two Malek candidates. A Vasava by name Punia Jafra was murdered a few weeks before November 9, 1967 when the incident out of which this appeal arises took place. Some of the Maleks, namely, Gulab Amir and his sons Vazir and Kalu, the last two losing their lives in the aforesaid incident, had helped the police in tracing out the dead body of Punia and had taken part in the investigations. This was followed by the arrest by the police of the original accused 1 to 10 in this case. Although they were released by the Judicial Magistrate on bail on October 11, 1967 applications were made to him as well as to the Sessions Judge at Surat to cancel their bails. It was alleged in these applications that the said accused were threatening to kill the persons who had helped the police in the investigation of Punia's murder and had given evidence against them. The Judicial Magistrate at Kathor had fixed the hearing of the application to cancel the bail of accused 1 to 10 on 7th November, 1967, but the application was not heard on that day because the notices had not been served on the accused persons. Not unnaturally this action of Gulab and his sons considerably angered the Bhora community and in particular the said ten accused. What exactly sparked off the trouble on the 9th November is not quite clear. The prosecution case and the defence version about its origin conflict with each other. However there can be little doubt that some sort of affray did take place a short while before this incident and accused No. 7 (one of the appellants before this Court), accused Nos. 28 and 36 and one Ayeshabibi were injured. A complaint was lodged at the police station against four of the Maleks including the three persons who lost their lives later. According to the prosecution, about 4.30 p. m. on November 9, 1967 a large crowd of Bhoras collected near a well about 140 feet from the house of Vazir armed with weapons like dharias, spears, axes and sticks and proceeded towards the house of Vazir. Two of the accused i.e., Nos. 12 and 13 (appellants before this Court) were also in the crowd with their guns. On seeing the crowd approaching, Vazir's wife Subhanbibi (P. W. 36) closed the front as well as the back doors of their house but the crowd began to break them open. Vazir who was in the house went upstairs in order to avoid capture. Some members of the crowd rushed towards the back of Vazir's house while some of them managed to get on to the upper portion of Vazir's house and others scaled the roof of his house. Vazir managed to get into Mohmad's house next door through a window on the first floor. This however did not save him from the crowd; some members whereof got inside Mohmad's house and catching Vazir in the upper portion of Mohmad's house killed him and threw his body down on the ground below. At or about this time some 14 or 15 other members of the crowd rushed into the courtyard between the houses of Rehman which lay in between Vazir's house and Hussain Gulab and Mohmad Mustafa's houses and brutally injured Rasul Amir who was there. Someone in the crowd shouted that Balu and Kalu, members of the Malek community, were running away. Kalu was given a chase up the road, captured and killed. Thereafter the crowd returned to the above-mentioned courtyard and finding that Rasul was not dead they dragged him out of the house of Mohmad Mustafa where he had taken shelter and inflicted further injuries on him. As a result of this he had succumbed. Thereafter the dead bodies of Vazir and Rasul were taken away by some members of the crowd and left on the edge of the road about 125 feet away from Vazir's house. It appears that there were four armed police constables posted in the village for the purpose of maintaining law and order in view of the prevailing unsettled conditions. They came to the place where the quarrel was taking place and found the crowd attacking Vazir's house. One of them wanted permission to fire his rifle but this was rejected by the Head Constable. This constable went in a truck to the police station at Mangrol where he gave a report about the quarrel between the Maleks and Bhoras going in the village. The police Sub-Inspector who was away from the station at that time came to the village round about 10 p. m., in the night and recorded the complaint of Gulab Amir at about 11 p. m.

3. No less than 43 persons were charged with having formed an unlawful assembly and taking part in the incident. At the trial all the accused pleaded not guilty but four of them, accused 1, 3, 12 and 13 pleaded the defence of alibi. The appellants before us are original accused 2, 5, 7, 12 and 13.

4. The prosecution examined as many as 19 witnesses. The Sessions Judge rejected the evidence of a number of them as unreliable but applying the test of there being consistent evidence of at least four reliable witnesses as against thirteen of the accused persons as members of an unlawful assembly and responsible for the killings, he found them guilty of the offences punishable under Sections 147, 148 and 302 read with Section 149, I. P. C. He acquitted the others by the application of the test mentioned above.

5. All these thirteen accused went up in appeal to the High Court while the State preferred an appeal against the acquittal of thirty persons. The High Court rejected the State's appeal and allowed the appeal of eight out of the thirteen appellants before it. According to the High Court there was no dispute:

"that there was a crowd of Bhoras assembled near the well and that the persons forming this crowd did not go to the house of Vazir, Rasul and Kalu. The dispute that was pressed in the trial Court and which is also pressed before us centres round the reliability of the witnesses examined and the identification of a particular accused by those witnesses".

6. There can be no doubt whatsoever that a large number of persons must have taken part in killing the three Maleks. The evidence of Dr. Pandya shows that there were no less than 45 injuries on different parts of the body of Vazir. These consisted of wounds and contusions by means of sharp-edged instruments and sticks. The wounds, according to the doctor, could have been caused by weapons like spears and dharias. One injury, viz., injury No. 28, was individually sufficient to cause the death. On the body of Kalu 44 injuries were found caused by spears, dharias and sticks. On the body of Rasul as many as 40 injuries were found 37 of which were wounds.

7. The High Court relied mainly upon the evidence of six witnesses and although some doubt was cast about the reliability of two out of the above number it upheld the conviction of the five appellants before us. It will suffice for our purpose to examine the evidence of the other four witnesses to see whether notwithstanding the acquittal by the High Court giving the benefit of doubt to some, the testimony of these persons can be accepted for maintaining the conviction of the appellants.

8. The first witness to be considered in this connection is Subhan Bibi (P. W. 36), widow of Vazir. Before the Sessions Court she stated that when she saw the crowd at the well shouting to kill Vazir, Rehman and Kalu, she could identify at least 26 persons including one absconding accused Ayub Zheri. She named all the 25 persons and identified them before the Court. Her evidence was that a number of persons had entered the house from the back and she even gave their names and identified them. She said that she had seen accused 1, 2 and 16 actually killing Vazir on the upper portion of Mohmad's house. According to her, accused 7, 8 and Ayub Zheri carried the dead body on to the road and left it there. The High Court examined some alleged infirmities in her evidence. This mainly related to the number of persons she had mentioned to others as having taken part in the crime. Reliance was placed on the fact that she had mentioned to the police about having seen 39 persons whereas in the Sessions Court she identified only 26. She however denied that she had given more than 26 names to the police. According to her father-in-law she had given the names of only 8 or 10 persons and no more. It was also pointed out that she had not said to the police that she saw the dead body of her husband being thrown on the ground from the upper storey of Mohmad's house. The High Court examined her testimony in great detail and agreeing with the Sessions Judge on this point accepted her evidence that it was reliable to the extent that she had given the names of eight persons, seven of them being appellants to the High Court who had entered her house on that afternoon and pursued her husband with the object of killing him. The High Court found that she had improved upon her story to the police before the Sessions Court but even then her evidence to the extent that accused 1, 2, 12 and 13 were amongst the persons who had entered her house from the back was acceptable. The High Court also accepted her testimony that accused 7, 8 and Abub Zheri had lifted the dead body of Vazir and left it on the road. According to the High Court the testimony of this witness showed that accused 2, 5, 7, 12 and 13 were members of an unlawful assembly.

9. The High Court did not accept the evidence of the prosecution witness, Yakub and we are leaving him out of account. The third witness relied on by the High Court was Yusuf, a young boy of 12 years. His version was that he had gone to the locality of Vazir's house at about 4 p. m. on the fateful day to see about the cattle in the shed belonging to his father and finding no cattle there he had gone to Vazir's house when he saw the crowd coming from the well of which he named no less than 27 persons. He also said that Subhan-bibi had closed the door when he was inside the house. According to him five persons had entered Vazir's house from the front. The High Court rejected the defence comment that he was a chance witness and held that it was not unnatural for him to have gone there and been present on the spot. The five persons named by him as having entered Vazir's house were accused 1, 5, 8, 12 and 13. According to the High Court no contradiction had been shown as regards this part of his evidence and it found no reason to disbelieve him on this point.

10. The High Court rejected the evidence of Nathu Kala but accepted the evidence of Deva Namla (P. W. 10). This witness was not a member of either community. His house was immediately adjacent to Vazir's. According to this witness, at the time when the mob came to the house of Vazir he was in his own house and had seen the crowd approaching Vazir's house and breaking open the doors. He also said that certain persons had climbed on to the roof of Vazir's house and shouted that Vazir should be killed. He had heard two gun shots and taking fright had gone inside the house and closed the doors. He did not come out even when the police came there at about 10 p.m. The next morning he went to his fields and stayed away from his house for 3 or 4 days. His statement was recorded by the police on 13th November 1967. He named certain persons as having been in the crowd and identified among those accused 1, 2, 5, 7, 12 and 13. The High Court held that he was a natural witness and the mere fact that he had gone away from the village and not made any statement to the police before November 13, was not enough to reject his evidence. Although he named one Ibrahim Suleman as a person seen among the crowd near Vazir's house, he could not properly identify that person among the accused before the Sessions Court. The High Court accepted his evidence as to the identification of eight accused including accused 1, 2, 5, 7, 12 and 13.

11. Leaving out of account the other witnesses whose testimony was accepted in part and rejected as to the rest by the High Court, we come to the prosecution witness, Halimabibi. Her version was as follows. She was working in the field of Vazir in the village Togapur. At about 4.30 p. m. on the 9th November she was going home following a foot track near the cart track along which Kalu was running when he was killed. According to this witness she saw from a distance of about 50 or 100 feet that Kalu was running along Togapur road and was chased by about 10 to 20 Bhoras. She identified 15 persons out of them including Ayub Zheri. According to her a gun was fired at Kalu's direction whereupon Kalu stopped and he was immediately pounced upon by the crowd and put to death. She went to the spot where Kalu was lying and after waiting for some time she went home. It was urged that she was a chance witness and that she had met Subhanbibi, widow of Vazir the same evening. The High Court took the view that these points did not detract from her credibility and there was no reason for her to concoct the whole untrue story if she had not seen the incident of Kalu being murdered. Excepting that she had gone in the identification of accused No. 33 there was nothing to reject her evidence as to the substantive identification of accused 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 12 among others.

12. The High Court found the evidence of six of the prosecution witnesses acceptable namely, Subhanbibi, widow of Vazir, Yusuf Gulab Malek, Dava Namla, Saberabibi, wife of Hussain Gulab and Halimabibi. The cumulative effect of the testimony of these witnesses was that accused 1 and 8 were two of the assailants of the Maleks on 9th November. The High Court however took the view that there was reasonable doubt about the presence of accused 1 and 8 at Naroli at the time when the incident took place. For this the High Court relied mainly on the evidence of a Magistrate of Kathor to the effect that these two persons were present in his Court at least till 2.30 or 3 p. m. on the day of the incident and Kathor being at a distance of 17 or 18 miles from the village where the occurrence had taken place they could not have been present at Nani Naroli between 4 and 4.30 p. m. We have looked into the evidence of the Magistrate and speaking for ourselves we are not disposed to place much reliance thereon but inasmuch as the High Court has acted on that in giving the benefit of doubt to accused 1 and 8 we propose to say nothing more on the subject.

13. We find that the evidence of at least four witnesses, Subhanbibi, Deva Namla, Yusuf Gulab Malek and Halimabibi discussed above are acceptable. Subhanbibi is the widow of one of the deceased. She was present in the house: she tried to save her husband; she saw a number of accused trying to break the doors open and she saw her husband being injured and his dead body being thrown on the ground and being carried away from there. Deva Namla was not an interested witness at all. Yusuf Gulab Malek was a boy of 12 who could not have withstood cross-examination effectively unless he was speaking the truth. As regards Halimabibi the only interest if at all which she had in the deceased was that she had been working in the field of Vazir. But she gave a very consistent story of the chasing and killing of Kalu by some of the accused and she named and identified a number of them and was not shaken in cross-examination.

14. If the evidence of these four persons was accepted by the High Court—and we see no reason to the contrary—it must be held that the appellants were members of an unlawful assembly who were directly responsible for committing the crime of murder of three persons. We see no reason to take a view different from that of the High Court as regards their guilt and we accordingly dismiss the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

HEGDE, J.: — This appeal by special leave is directed against the decision of a single Judge of the Kerala High Court in a second appeal.
Therein the learned Judge allowed the appeal of the plaintiffs, reversed the judgment and decree of the first appellate Court and restored that of the trial Court.

2. In order to decide the points arising for decision in this appeal, it is necessary to set out in brief the facts of the case. This litigation has a long history. The property concerned in the suit is 99 cents in extent but it contains some buildings. It is situate in a municipal town of Kottayam taluk. It appears that the property has now become very valuable. This property admittedly at one time belonged to an Ezhava Marumak-kathayam Tharwad. Three junior members of that Tharwad sold that property to a third party in 1063 M. E.
(Mallayalam Era). Three other junior members of that Tharwad sued for the recovery of that property in 1074 M. E. after setting aside the alienation which according to the plaintiffs therein was not valid and binding on the Tharwad.
That suit was decreed and the plaintiffs therein were allowed to recover possession of that property on their paying the alienee a sum of Rs. 454/-.
The decree-holders were unable to pay that sum. They applied to the Court to permit one Krishnan Krishnan, a relation of theirs to deposit the amount in question into Court and take delivery of the property. The Court allowed that application. Thereafter the said Krishnan Krishnan deposited Rs. 454/- into Court through the plaintiffs' lawyer and took delivery of the property in 1082 M. E. through Court. Kunjappi
Velu, a creditor of Krishnan Krishnan filed a suit against him in 1089 M. E., obtained a decree and thereafter put up the property in question for sale and purchased the same in Court auction. He took delivery of that property through Court in 1102 M. E.
The said Kunjappi Velu sold the property to one Punnen Thomas very soon after he took delivery of the property. This purchase by Punnen Thomas was for and on behalf of one Kochu Thommen Kuruville. Punnen Thomas executed a release deed in favour of Kuruville in 1121 M. E. On 8-5-1128 Kuruvilla mortgaged the suit property for Rs. 37,000/- in favour of Travancore Forward Bank Ltd., Kottayam. As Kuruvilla did not discharge that debt, the bank obtained a mortgage decree against him. The Travancore Forward Bank Ltd. was amalgamated with the State Bank of Travancore (the appellant herein). Thereafter the State Bank of Travancore was impleaded as an additional plaintiff in that suit. On 12-8-1121 M. E., four members of the Ezhava Marumakkathayam Tharwad referred to earlier instituted the suit from which this appeal arises seeking possession of the suit property. The first plaintiff (since deceased) claimed to be the Karanavan of the Tharwad. Their case is that Krishnan Krishnan who deposited Rs. 454/- into Court and took delivery of the suit property was only an agent of the Tharwad. He had no right in that property. He was entitled to keep possession of the property until the amount deposited by him into Court was repaid to him. It was further alleged in the plaint that there was an agreement between Krishnan Krishnan and the plaintiffs in the suit wherein the deposit was made that Krishnan Krishnan should redeliver the property to the Tharwad on receiving the amount in question. The plaintiffs in the present case offered to pay to Krishnan Krishnan's representative the sum of Rs. 454/-.

3. The agreement alleged to have been entered into between the plaintiffs in the first suit and Krishnan Krishnan has neither been accepted by the first appellate Court nor was it relied upon by the High Court. There is no reliable evidence in support of that agreement.

4. The trial Court came to the conclusion that Krishnan Krishnan in law can only be an agent of the plaintiffs in the first suit. He can only have a lien over the suit property and the subsequent purchasers of his right can have no better title than what Krishnan Krishnan had. That Court also repelled the contention of the contesting defendants that Krishnan Krishnan or those who acquired his rights had perfected their title to the suit property by adverse possession. It held that the possession of Krishnan Krishnan was permissive and the same could not be considered as being adverse to the real owners. It further held that the property in question was always in the possession of the tenants and it was never in the possession of Krishnan Krishnan or those who purchased his rights. It also held that there is no evidence to show that either Krishnan Krishnan or the subsequent purchasers of the suit property ever to the knowledge of the true owners asserted hostile title to the property. The trial Court also did not accept the contention of the defendants that the plaintiffs have not succeeded in proving that the Tharwad which was the original owner of the suit property is joint or original first plaintiff was Karanavan of that Tharwad when the suit was instituted.

5. In appeal the learned appellate Judge came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs had not established that the Tharwad in question is undivided nor have they proved that the original first plaintiff was the Karanavan of the Tharwad when the suit was instituted. He further came to the conclusion that Krishnan Krishnan must be held to have acquired an absolute title to the suit property as the plaintiffs have not succeeded in proving the agreement pleaded by them. It upheld the contention of the defendants that Krishnan Krishnan and thereafter his successors in interest had acquired full title to the property by adverse possession.

6. In second appeal a learned single Judge of the High Court disagreed with each one of the conclusions reached by the first appellate Court and agreed with those reached by the trial Court. Dealing with the question whether the Tharwad in question is an undivided Tharwad, he pointed out that the evidence of the plaintiffs in that regard stands un rebutted. He also accepted the contention of the plaintiffs that the first plaintiff was the Karanavan of that Tharwad when the suit was instituted. He further held that on the basis of the material on record, the only conclusion possible is that Krishnan Krishnan took possession of the suit property as the agent of the plaintiffs in the first suit and as such his possession was permissive. He agreed with the trial Court that the actual possession of the property was always with the tenants and the possession of Krishnan Krishnan and that of his successors in interest has not been shown to be adverse to that of the true owners. Each one of these findings were challenged before us.

7. We shall first take up the questions whether the plaintiff's Tharwad was divided or undivided and further whether the original first plaintiff was the Karanavan of the Tharwad when the suit was instituted. On these questions the evidence is completely one sided. The plaintiffs have adduced evidence to show that the Tharwad is undivided and that the original first plaintiff was the Karanavan of the Tharwad. There is no reason to disbelieve that evidence. That evidence was un rebutted. That apart, a Hindu family is presumed to be joint unless the contrary is established. There is no evidence on record to rebut that presumption. We agree with the learned Judge of the High Court that there was no basis for the first appellate Court for doubting the fact that the original first plaintiff was the Karanavan of the Tharwad at the relevant time.

8. Now coming to the question as to the nature of the possession of Krishnan Krishnan, the High Court has not relied on the agreement pleaded by the plaintiffs. There is no reliable evidence to support that agreement. But the evidence adduced in this case including unimpeachable documentary evidence clearly shows that assistance of Krishnan Krishnan (Krishnan Krishnan was the father of some of the then members of the Tharwad) was sought by the plaintiffs in that suit to tide over the difficulty in the matter of depositing the required amount into court. As mentioned earlier the amount in question was deposited into court through the plaintiffs' lawyer and Krishnan Krishnan took possession of the suit property in execution of the decree in favour of the plaintiffs in that suit. No sale deed or any other document was executed in favour of Krishnan Krishnan nor could the plaintiffs in that suit validly alienate that property as they were only junior members of the family. We agree with the High Court that as Krishnan Krishnan paid the amount that was payable by the Tharwad and took possession of the property, he could only have a lien over the property for the amount advanced by him. Neither Vellu nor Kuruvilla who purchased the rights of Krishnan Krishnan can in law have greater rights in that property than what Krishnan Krishnan had. On purchasing the rights of Krishnan Krishnan they had merely stepped into his shoes.

9. Now coming to the question of adverse possession, there is conclusive evidence to show that the suit property was at all times in the possession of the tenants of the Tharwad referred to earlier. Krishnan Krishnan, Vellu and Kuruvilla at best could have only collected the rent. The evidence in this regard has been discussed in detail by the learned judge of the High Court. It is not necessary to deal with that evidence over again. We accept the conclusion of the learned judge that the suit property was all along in the possession of the tenants. Further as Krishnan Krishnan had only a lien over the property for the amount advanced by him his possession of the suit property which in this case is symbolical, must be held to be a permissive possession. The possession of Vellu and Kuruvilla for the same reason must be held to be permissive possession. A permissive possession cannot be converted into an adverse possession unless it is proved that the person in possession asserted an adverse title to the property to the knowledge of true owners for a period of twelve years or more. There is no evidence to show that either Krishnan Krishnan or Vellu or Kuruvilla asserted any hostile title to the suit property to the knowledge of the true owners at any time before the present suit.

10. In the result we agree with the conclusions reached by the learned Judge of the High Court and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

RAY, J.: — This is an appeal by special leave from the judgment dated 30 June, 1966 and 4 and 5 July, 1966 of the High Court at Bombay reversing the judgment of the learned Single Judge dated 29 October, 1963.

2. The only question in this appeal is whether the order of the Government of Bombay dated 8 May, 1962 "repatriating" the appellant from the temporary post of Controller of Food Grains Department, Bombay to his parent Department of Excise and Prohibition amounted to a reduction in rank in violation of the provisions contained in Article 311 of the Constitution.

3. The appellant joined service as Sub-Inspector of Excise in the Excise and Prohibition Department of the Government of Bombay in the year 1938. He was thereafter selected for transfer to the Bombay City Police Department. In 1942 he was sent on "deputation" to the Civil Supplies Department as an Inspector. He continued to work in that department up to the month of February, 1955. By February, 1955 he had by various promotions become Rationing Officer which was a gazetted post and he was then drawing a salary of Rs. 530/- p. m. in the grade of Rs. 350-20-550. In 1955 there was decontrol of foodgrains. The post was abolished. The appellant was reverted to the Excise Department. In course of time he was promoted to the post of District Inspector in the Excise Department in the grade of salary of Rs. 220-10-300. In 1957, the Government of Bombay again introduced the system of distribution of foodgrains on the basis of household cards. The appellant in view of his record of service in the Civil Supplies Department was asked to go on "deputation" in the Agriculture and Forests Department as a Sub-Inspector under the Controller of Foodgrains Distribution, Bombay. In 1960, the appellant was appointed to a temporary post of Controller of Foodgrains Distribution, Bombay in the grade of Rs. 475-25-600-50-750. In 1961 the appellant was drawing a salary of Rs. 500/- p. m. as a Controller of Foodgrains Distribution.

4. The appellant married his daughter in the month of December, 1961. The appellant's daughter, a qualified doctor, was then working as a Resident Medical Officer in the Bombay Municipal Corporation. The appellant was asked by the Director of Civil Supplies in the months of January to March, 1962 partly in writing and partly orally first whether he had forced his peons to do menial work at the marriage of his daughter, secondly, if he had taken cash and gifts from Fair Price Shop-owners; and, thirdly, whether he had forced the staff to contribute in cash for the marriage of his daughter. The appellant denied these allegations. Thereafter, the Secretary to the Government of Maharashtra, Agriculture and Forests Department told the appellant in the month of April, 1962 that there were complaints against him and that "there could be no smoke without fire", and the appellant would be "repatriated" to the Prohibition and Excise Department. The Minister of Civil Supplies in the month of April, 1962 visited the appellant's office and said that there were complaints against him. The appellant requested a thorough enquiry in connection with such complaints. Subsequent to the visit of the Minister, an Inspector of Police of the Anti-corruption Branch took possession of several files of various fair price shop-keepers for scrutiny.

5. Thereafter, the Government of Bombay by a resolution dated 8 May, 1962 directed that the appellant who was "on deputation from the Excise and Prohibition Department should be repatriated to his parent department with immediate effect". The appellant was asked to hand over charge and the appellant was posted by the Director of Excise and Prohibition in the Office of Officiating Inspector in his Department.

6. In the month of July, 1962 the appellant came to know that the Anti-corruption Branch of the Police submitted a report to the Government and the appellant was found to be exonerated from all charges. The appellant made a representation to the Government brining the said fact to the notice of the relevant authorities and requested for appointment to the post of Controller of Foodgrains. The Government did not send any reply to the appellant's representation.

7. The appellant contended that the resolution was in the nature of punishment by way of reduction in rank in violation of the provisions contained in Article 311 of the Constitution and made an application under Article 226 of the Constitution impeaching the order of reversion as an action of punishment taken on false reports without waiting for the investigation by the police to be complete.

8. The Learned Single Judge of the Bombay High Court held that the order of 8 May, 1962 was an act of punishment and reduction in rank. The Division Bench of the Bombay High Court reversed that judgment and held that the appellant had no legal right to the post in the Department of Agriculture and Forests and therefore his reversion was not a punishment.

9. This Court in Parshotam Lal Dhingra v. Union of India, 1958 SCR 828 = (AIR 1958 SC 36) laid down three propositions: First, Article 311 makes no distinction between permanent and temporary members of the services or between persons holding permanent or temporary posts and affords protection to both classes of servants; secondly, if a Government servant has no right to the particular rank his reduction from an officiating higher rank to his substantive lower rank will not by itself be a punishment; and, thirdly, the mere fact that the servant has no title to the post or the rank and the Government has by contract, express or implied or under the rules governing the conditions of his service, the right to reduce him to a lower post does not mean that the order of reduction of a servant to a lower post or rank cannot in any circumstance be a punishment.

10. In determining whether the reduction is or is not by way of punishment it has to be found out if the order entails or provides for the forfeiture of his pay or allowances or the loss of his seniority in his substantive rank or the stoppage or postponement of his future chances of promotion, or that in truth and reality the Government has passed the order as and by way of penalty.

11. In applying these principles Dhingra's case, 1958 SCR 828 = (AIR 1958 SC 36) (supra) laid down two tests; first, whether the servant had right to the post or the rank, or, secondly, whether he has been visited with evil consequences of the kind mentioned in that decision.

12. This Court in Sukhbans Singh v. State of Punjab, (1963) 1 SCR 416 = (AIR 1962 SC 1711) in dealing with the question as to whether a probationer has any right to hold the post said that it would not be correct to say that a probationer has a right to the higher post in which he is officiating or a right to be confirmed, but a probationer could not be punished for misconduct without complying with the requirements of Article 311. The appellant in that case was recruited as Tehsildar in 1936. He was thereafter selected by the Punjab Public Service Commission and appointed as an Extra Assistant Commissioner on probation in 1945. On 20 May, 1952 he was reverted to his substantive post of Tehsildar. He asked for the grounds of reversion. He was denied the same. This Court held on the facts that the Government wanted to punish him for what it thought was misconduct and therefore reverted him. Thus, reversion by way of punishment without complying with the provisions of Article 311 cannot be sustained.

13. In the recent unreported decision in Appar Apar Singh v. State of Punjab, Civil Appeal No. 25 of 1967, D/- 3-12-1970 = (1971 Lab IC (Notes) 1 (SC)) the question for consideration was whether an order reverting the appellant in that case from a post in Class I service in which he was officiating to his substantive post in Class II amounted to reduction in rank. The appellant was employed in the Punjab Education Service Class II. He was promoted to Class I on an officiating post as Principal of the Government College, Muktsar. He had trouble with the members of the staff. The appellant as Principal of the College in reading the annual report made certain aspersions against some members of the teaching staff. Thereafter, an enquiry was made pursuant to the demand of some of the parents of the students. Two Deputy Directors made an enquiry. At that enquiry the appellant was neither given copies of statements recorded nor was he allowed to cross-examine the witnesses. The State contended that it was a preliminary confidential enquiry into the affairs of the College and that the appellant had no right to continue in Class I appointment where he was only officiating. The High Court held that the order of reversion was not by way of punishment but only because the person reverted was not found suitable to hold the post and an enquiry was only to find out the state of affairs of the normal functioning of the College. This Court held that the enquiry by the Deputy Directors was to investigate allegations against the Principal and the Deputy Directors recommended exemplary punishment. Therefore, the order amounted to reduction in rank and as no enquiry regarding disciplinary proceedings was held, the order was in violation of the provisions of Article 311.

14. The most pre-eminent features which accentuate the order of reversion to be in the nature of punishment in the present case are these. The appellant was faced with certain charges of receiving money and gifts at the time of the marriage of his daughter. The appellant denied the allegations. The Secretary to the Government virtually threatened to repatriate the appellant to his parent department. The Minister visited the office of the appellant. The Police conducted an enquiry. The appellant himself had asked for an enquiry. At the time of the passing of the order of reversion the appellant not only protested but also asked the Government to wait for the completion of the investigation. The Government did not accede to that request. Subsequently, the investigation indicated that the appellant was totally free from blame or taint.

15. The entire service record of the appellant showed that the appellant was chosen to go on "deputation" twice once in 1942 and again in 1957. From 1942 to 1955 he was in the Food Department and he was promoted from time to time. Between 1942 and 1955 the appellant rose from the post of Permit Officer to that of Rationing Officer at the salary of Rs. 530/- p. m. In 1955 the post was abolished. The appellant was reverted to his parent department. In his parent department the appellant was also promoted to the post of Inspector and thereafter District Inspector in the grade of Rs. 220-10-300. In 1957, the appellant was again sent on "deputation" to the Food Department. The appellant was chosen for his experience. Again, he received a promotion and increment in salary.

16. It is true that the post which the appellant held was a temporary one, but the post continued for several years. The indications were that the post was practically of a quasi-permanent character. The appellant was reverted neither because the temporary post was abolished nor because he was found unsuitable to continue. The parent department of the appellant did not want him back.

17. The order of reversion simpliciter will not amount to a reduction in rank or a punishment. A Government servant holding a temporary post and having lien on his substantive post may be sent back to the substantive post in ordinary routine administration or because of exigencies of service. A person holding a temporary post may draw a salary higher than that of his substantive post and when he is reverted to his parent department the loss of salary cannot be said to have any penal consequence. Therefore, though the Government has right to revert a Government servant from the temporary post to a substantive post, the matter has to be viewed as one of substance and all relevant factors are to be considered in ascertaining whether the order is a genuine one of "accident of service" in which a person sent from the substantive post to a temporary post has to go back to the parent post without an aspersion against his character or integrity or whether the order amounts to a reduction in rank by way of punishment. Reversion by itself will not be a stigma. On the other hand, if there is evidence that the order of reversion is not "a pure accident of service" but an order in the nature of punishment, Article 311 will be attracted.

18. In the present case, the facts and circumstances to which reference has already been made bring out in bold relief that the order of reversion was in the nature of punishment. The order was not in compliance with the provisions of the Constitution.

19. For these reasons, we are of opinion that the learned Single Judge was correct in his judgment. The appeal is allowed. The Bench decision of the Bombay High Court is set aside and the judgment of the learned Single Judge is restored. The appellant will be entitled to costs in this Court.

Appeal allowed.

Nayar, Advocates, with him), For the Attorney General for India and Union of India.

SIKRI, C. J.: This appeal by certificate is directed against the judgment of the High Court of Judicature at Madras dismissing Writ Petition No. 63 of 1971 filed by U. N. R. Rao, appellant before us. In this petition the appellant had prayed that a writ of quo warranto be issued to the respondent, Smt. Indira Gandhi, and it be declared that the respondent has no constitutional authority to hold the office of and to function as Prime Minister of India.

2. In brief, the appellant contends that under the Constitution as soon as the House of the People is dissolved under Art. 85 (2) of the Constitution the Council of Ministers, i.e., the Prime Minister and other Ministers, cease to hold office. According to him this follows plainly from the wording of Art. 75 (3), which provides that "the Council of Ministers shall be collectively responsible to the House of the People." How can the Council of Ministers be responsible to the House of the People when it has been dissolved under Art. 85 (2)? According to him no void in the carrying out of Government will be created because the President can exercise the Executive Power of the Union either directly or through officers subordinate to him in accordance with the Constitution as provided in Art. 53 (1) of the Constitution.

3. In constitutional matters it is advisable to decide only those points which necessarily arise for determination on the facts of the case. It seems to us that a very narrow point arises on the facts of the present case. The House of the People was dissolved by the President on 27-12-1970. The respondent was the Prime Minister before the dissolution. Is there anything in the Constitution, and in particular in art. 75 (3), which renders her carrying on as Prime Minister contrary to the Constitution? It was said that we must interpret Article 75 (3) according to its own terms regardless of the conventions that prevail in the United Kingdom. If the words of an article are clear, notwithstanding any relevant convention, effect will no doubt be given to the words. But it must be remembered that we are interpreting a Constitution and not an Act of Parliament, a Constitution which establishes a Parliamentary system of Government with a Cabinet. In trying to understand one may well keep in mind the conventions prevalent at the time the Constitution was framed.

4. Speaking for the Court (Mukherjea, C. J.) observed in Ram Jawara Kapur v. State of Punjab, (1955) 2 SCR 225 at p. 238 = (AIR 1955 SC 549 at p. 556).

"The limits within which the executive Government can function under the Indian Constitution can be ascertained without much difficulty by reference to the form of the executive which our Constitution has set-up. Our Constitution, though federal in its structure, is modelled on the British Parliamentary system where the executive is deemed to have the primary responsibility for the formulation of governmental policy and its transmission into law though the condition precedent to the exercise of this responsibility is its retaining the confidence of the legislative branch of the State. The executive function comprises both the determination of the policy as well as carrying it into execution. This evidently includes the initiation of legislation, the maintenance of order, the promotion of social and economic welfare, the direction of foreign policy, in fact the carrying on or supervision of the general administration of the State.

In India, as in England, the executive has to act subject to the control of the legislature; but in what way is this control exercisable by the legislature? Under article 53 (1) of our Constitution, the executive power of the Union is vested in the President but under article 75 there is to be a Council of Ministers with the Prime Minister at the head to aid and advise the President in the exercise of his functions. The President has thus been made a formal or constitutional head of the executive and the real executive powers are vested in the Ministers or the Cabinet. The same provisions obtain in regard to the Government of States; the Governor or the Rajpramukh, as the case may be, occupies the position of the head of the executive in the State but it is virtually the Council of Ministers in each State that carries on the executive Government. In the Indian Constitution, therefore, we have the same system of parliamentary executive as in England and the Council of Ministers consisting, as it does, of the members of the legislature is, like the British Cabinet, "a hyphen which joins, a buckle which fastens the legislative part of the State to the executive part". The Cabinet enjoying, as it does, a majority in the legislature concentrates in itself the virtual control of both legislative and executive functions; and as the Ministers constituting the Cabinet are presumably agreed on fundamentals and act on the principle of collective responsibility, the most important questions of policy are all formulated by them."

5. In A. Sanjeevi Naidu v. State of Madras, AIR 1970 SC 1102 at p. 1106 it was urged on behalf of the appellants in that case that "the Parliament has conferred power under Section 68-C of the Motor Vehicles Act (1939) to a designated authority. That power can be exercised only by that authority and by no one else. The authority concerned in the present case is the State Government. The Government could not have delegated its statutory functions to any one else. The Government means the Governor aided and advised by his Ministers. Therefore the required opinion should have been formed by the Minister to whom the business had been allocated by 'the Rules'. It was further urged that if the functions of the Government can be discharged by any one else then the doctrine of ministerial responsibility which is the very essence of the cabinet form of Government disappears; such a situation is impermissible under our Constitution."

6. Speaking on behalf of the Court, Hegde J. repelled the contentions in the following words:

"We think that the above submissions advanced on behalf of the appellants are without force and are based on a misconception of the principles underlying our Constitution. Under our Constitution, the Governor is essentially a constitutional head, the administration of State is run by the Council of Ministers. But in the very nature of things, it is impossible for the Council of Ministers to deal with each and every matter that comes before the Government. In order to obviate that difficulty the Constitution has authorised the Governor under sub-article (3) of Article 166 to make rules for the more convenient transaction of business of the Government of the State and for the allocation amongst its Ministers, the business of the Government. All matters excepting those in which Governor is required to act in his discretion have to be allocated to one or the other of the Ministers on the advice of the Chief Minister. Apart from allocating business among the Ministers, the Governor can also make rules on the advice of his Council of Ministers for more convenient transaction of business. He can, not only allocate the various subjects amongst the Ministers but may go further and designate a particular official to discharge any particular function. But this again he can do only on the advice of the Council of Ministers.

The Cabinet is responsible to the legislature for every action taken in any of the ministries. That is the essence of joint responsibility."

7. Let us now look at the relevant articles of the Constitution in the context of which we must interpret Art. 75 (3) of the Constitution. Chapter I of Part V of the Constitution deals with the Executive. Article 52 provides that there shall be a President of India and art. 53 (1) vests the executive power of the Union in the President and provides that it shall be exercised by him either directly or through officers subordinate to him in accordance with this Constitution. The last five words are important inasmuch as they control the President's action under art. 53 (1). Any exercise of the executive power not in accordance with the Constitution will be liable to be set aside. There is no doubt that the President of India is a person who has to be elected in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Constitution but even so he is bound by the provisions of the Constitution. Art. 60 prescribes the oath or affirmation which the President has to take. It reads:

"I, A. B., do swear in the name of God/solemnly affirm that I will faithfully execute the office of President (or discharge the functions of the President) of India and will to the best of my ability preserve, protect and defend the Constitution and the law and that I will devote myself to the service and well-being of the people of India." Articles 74 and 75 deal with the council of Ministers. They read thus:

"74. (1) There shall be a Council of Ministers with the Prime Minister at the head to aid and advise the President in the exercise of his functions.

(2) The question whether any, and if so what, advice was tendered by Ministers to the President shall not be inquired into in any court.

75. (1) The Prime Minister shall be appointed by the President and the other Ministers shall be appointed by the President on the advice of the Prime Minister.

(2) The Ministers shall hold office during the pleasure of the President.

(3) The Council of Ministers shall be collectively responsible to the House of the People.

(4) Before a Minister enters upon his office, the President shall administer to him the oaths of office and of secrecy according to the forms set out for the purpose in the Third Schedule.

(5) A Minister who for any period of six consecutive months is not a member of either House of Parliament shall at the expiration of that period cease to be a Minister.

(6) The salaries and allowances of Ministers shall be such as Parliament may from time to time by law determine and, until Parliament so determines, shall be as specified in the Second Schedule."

8. It will be noticed that article 74 (1) is mandatory in form. We are unable to agree with the appellant that in the context the word "shall" should be read as "may". Article 52 is mandatory. In other words 'there shall be a President of India.' So is art. 74 (1). The Constituent Assembly did not choose the Presidential system of Government. If we were to give effect to this contention of the appellant we would be changing the whole concept of the Executive. It would mean that the President need not have a Prime Minister and Ministers to aid and advise in the exercise of his functions. As there would be no Council of Ministers, nobody would be responsible to the House of the People. With the aid of advisers he would be able to rule the country at least till he is impeached under Article 61.

9. It seems to us that we must read the word "shall" as meaning "shall" and not "may". If Article 74 (1) is read in this manner the rest of the provisions dealing with the Executive must be read in harmony with it. Indeed they fall into place. Under Article 75 (1) the President appoints the Prime Minister and appoints the other Ministers on the advice of the Prime Minister, and under Article 75 (2) they hold office during the pleasure of the President. The President has not said that it is his pleasure that the respondent shall not hold office.

10. Now comes the crucial clause three of art. 75. The appellant urges that the House of People having been dissolved this clause cannot be complied with. According to him it follows from the provisions of this clause that it was contemplated that on the dissolution of the House of People the Prime Minister and the other ministers must resign or be dismissed by the President and the President must carry on the Government as best as he can with the aid of the Services. As we have shown above, Art. 74 (1) is mandatory and, therefore, the President cannot exercise the executive power without the aid and advice of the Council of Ministers. We must then harmonise the provisions of Art. 75 (3) with Art. 74 (1) and Art. 75 (2). Article 75 (3) brings into existence what is usually called "Responsible Government". In other words the Council of Ministers must enjoy the confidence of the House of People. While the House of People is not dissolved under Art. 85 (2) (b), Art. 75 (3) has full operation. But when it is dissolved the Council of Ministers cannot naturally enjoy the confidence of the House of People. Nobody has said that the Council of Ministers does not enjoy the confidence of the House of People when it is prorogued. In the context, therefore, this clause must be read as meaning that Art. 75 (3) only applies when the House of People does not stand dissolved or prorogued. We are not concerned with the case where dissolution of the House of People takes place under Art. 83 (2) on the expiration of the period of five years prescribed therein, for Parliament has provided for that contingency in S. 14 of the Representation of the People Act, 1951.

11. On our interpretation other articles of the Constitution also have full play; e. g. Article 77 (3) which contemplates allocation of business among Ministers, and Article 78 which prescribes certain duties of Prime Minister.

12. We are grateful to the Learned Attorney General and the appellant for having supplied to us compilations containing extracts from various books on Constitutional Law and extracts from the debates in the Constituent Assembly. We need not burden this judgment with them. But on the whole we receive assurance from the learned authors and the speeches that the view we have taken is the right one, and is in accordance with conventions followed not only in the United Kingdom but in other countries following a similar system of responsible Government.

13. In the result the appeal fails and is dismissed, but there will be no order as to costs in this Court.

Appeal dismissed.

DUA, J.: — This appeal has been presented to this Court pursuant to a certificate granted by the Patna High Court under Article 133 (1) (c) of the Constitution.

2. The appellant, Aditya Kumar Singh, passed the B. Sc., Part I examination of the Bhagalpur University from the I. N. B. College in 1964 with Chemistry, Botany and Zoology as principal subjects and Physics as an extra subject. In 1967 he passed the B. Sc., examination of the Magadh University with Honours in Zoology. Thereafter he applied for admission to the Rajendra Medical College, Ranchi. Along with his application he attached a marks sheet of the B. Sc. Part I examination of the Bhagalpur University, purporting to have been issued to him by that

University as also the marks sheet of B. Sc., (Hons) examination of the Magadh University. In March, 1968 he was admitted to the First Year of the M. B. B. S. Course of that College. On January 21, 1969 the appellant was served with a notice dated January 20, 1969 from the Principal of Rajendra Medical College, Ranchi calling upon him to show cause why his name should not be struck off the College rolls on the ground that the marks sheet of B. Sc., Part I examination submitted by him along with his application for admission to the College was not genuine and that he had gained admission to the College by fraudulent means. The reply to this notice was required to be submitted latest by January 27, 1969. The appellant sent his reply on February 1, 1969. This reply was not considered satisfactory and on February 4, 1969 the Principal of the College informed him accordingly, adding that from the record of marks received from the University of Bhagalpur it had been found that the appellant had not passed in Physics which he had offered as an extra subject in the B. Sc., Part I examination and as such he did not satisfy the minimum qualification laid down for admission to the College, with the result that he could not be allowed to continue his studies in the College. If the appellant had any further representation to make he was asked to do so by 11 a. m. on February 12, 1969. The Principal of the College passed an order on February 27, 1969 striking off the appellant's name from the College roll. On March 11, 1969 the appellant filed in the Patna High Court an application under Article 226 of the Constitution (W. P. 219 of 1969, D/- 8-12-1969 (Pat)) for a writ of certiorari praying for quashing the order of the Principal dated February 27, 1969 and for a writ of mandamus commanding the Principal not to enforce the said order and also not to interfere with the appellant's right to prosecute his studies in the Rajendra Medical College. The appellant impleaded in this writ petition the Principal of Rajendra Medical College as respondent No. 1 and the State of Bihar through Secretary, Department of Health as respondent No. 2. Neither respondent filed any counter-affidavit and respondent No. 1 was not even represented by a counsel. The facts stated in the writ petition were accordingly taken by the High Court as correct. This writ petition was allowed by a Division Bench of the Patna High Court on December 8, 1969. The final conclusions of the Court were expressed by Wasiuddin J. in these words:

"On a consideration of all these facts, it is abundantly clear that there was a violation of the principle of natural justice and the petitioner had not been given full opportunity of placing his case and the petitioner must have also found himself bewildered by the receipt of the order dated the 27th February, 1969 when the second show cause notice showed that action was being taken only on account of the petitioner not satisfying the minimum qualification for admission into the Rajendra Medical College. There can be no doubt that action could have been taken against the petitioner if it had been found that the petitioner was responsible for the inflation and interpolation of the mark-sheet, but for this there should have been due and proper inquiry in which the petitioner should have been given full opportunity of being heard. But it appears that no such opportunity was given and there was thus a violation of the principle of natural justice. In this connection, I may also refer here to two decisions, one of which is of Supreme Court reported in the case of Board of High School and Intermediate Education, U. P. Allahabad v. Ghanshyam Das Gupta, (AIR 1962 SC 1110) where the petitioner of that case had been debarred from appearing at the examination and it was held that the authorities had violated the principle of natural justice. There is also a Division Bench decision of our High Court (AIR 1964 Pat 291) — Ajit Singh v. Ranchi University — in this connection which no doubt is also in respect of examination, but there also the same principle as laid down in the Supreme Court decision has been followed".

It appears that the Principal of the Rajendra Medical College had made routine enquiries from the Assistant Registrar of the Bhagalpur University about the marks obtained by the students admitted in the College who had passed the B. Sc., Part I examination from that University. On December 12, 1968 the Assistant Registrar of that University wrote to the Principal in reply to his letter of 3rd

December, 1968 stating inter alia that Shri Aditya Kumar Singh (the appellant) had secured 5 marks in Physics practical and not 15. This statement was stated to have been verified by the Assistant Registrar (Shri H. N. Rai) and Dr. K. P. Singh of Rajendra Medical College. It may be recalled that the appellant had been required in the Principal's letter of February 4, to make whatever further representation the appellant desired to make by February 12, 1969. Presumably after waiting till February 12, the Principal on February 13, 1969 requested the Assistant Registrar of Bhagalpur University to hold further investigation in the matter of marks obtained by the appellant. On February 22, 1969 the Assistant Registrar wrote back to the Principal the following letter:

"Dear Dr. Mitra,

With reference to your D. O. letter No. 958/RMC dated the 13th February, 1969 I am to inform you that necessary investigation into the matter has been made. It has been verified and found that Shri Aditya Kumar Singh Roll Bhag. No. 340 (a candidate for the Annual B. Sc., Part I examination, 1964) obtained only 5 (five) marks in Physics practical and not 15 (fifteen) as stated previously.

Yours sincerely,
Sd/ H. N. Rai
Assistant Registrar"

It appears that the first M. B. B. S. Examination was to begin on November 21, 1969. On October 9, 1969 the Principal forwarded the appellant's form for admission to that examination along with his fee. The Principal, however, did not append his signatures on the form. He stated his reasons for not doing so in the covering letter in which he wrote:

"It was apparent from the mark-sheet that he had passed in Physics also. Subsequent to this he passed B. Sc., Final Examination from Bihar University in the year 1966 with Chemistry, Botany and Zoology. Thereafter he passed B. Sc., Hons. examination in Zoology in the year 1967 from Magadh University. Since he had passed B. Sc., Hons. in Zoology after having passed B. Sc., I with Chemistry, Biology and Zoology and apparently Physics also he was given preference over B. Sc., I candidates and admitted straightway".

After briefly narrating the history resulting in the appellant's name being struck off, the letter continued:

"Advice was sought (through the Health Department) from the Standing counsel of Government (in the absence of the Advocate General) and I have been advised that he should not be debarred from my end from appearing at the examination. I am therefore sending his form and fees but I am unable to certify that he has passed in Physics at B. Sc. I level as is required to be done on the body of the admission form. This is because the very University from which he had appeared at the B. Sc. I Examination has declared that he had not passed in Physics. I am enclosing copies of documents mentioned herein-under for your perusal and consultation with legal advisors of the University if deemed necessary. I am further to state that he has fulfilled the rest of the conditions which are required to be certified by the Principal on the Admission form".

With this letter were also enclosed copies of the writ petition, the order of the High Court and the correspondence which had passed between the Principal and the Government on the subject. On receipt of this letter the Deputy Registrar, Ranchi University returned the form on October 28, 1969 stating that the appellant could not be permitted to appear at the first M. B. B. S. Examination. Apparently on learning of this position the appellant also wrote to the Principal complaining against his refusal to give to the appellant a "good conduct certificate". The Principal replied to the appellant on November 1, 1969 stating all the facts and denying that he had debarred the appellant from appearing in the first M. B. B. S. Examination. It was explained in this letter that he (the Principal) was unable to certify that the appellant had passed in Physics at B. Sc., Part I level and it was for this reason that he had not signed a certificate to that effect. The Principal repeated his inability to certify that the appellant had passed in Physics. A copy of this letter was forwarded to the Vice-Chancellor, Ranchi University, with reference to the letter dated October 28, 1969 from the Deputy Registrar.

3. On November 4, 1969 the appellant filed an application in the Patna High Court for taking contempt proceedings against the Principal of Rajendra Medical College. On November 14, 1969 a Division Bench of the Patna High Court considered this application but found no justification for contempt proceedings against the Principal. It, however, directed the Principal to certify to the University that the appellant had passed B. Sc., Part I Examination in Physics as shown from the College record. It was added that since the matter of the appellant having passed the B. Sc., Part I Examination in Physics was under investigation it should also be noted that the certificate must be deemed to be provisional and in case it was established that the appellant had not passed the B. Sc., Part I examination in Physics then his admission to the First M. B. B. S. Examination of Ranchi University would be treated as cancelled. After this order the Principal on November 20, 1969 sent to the Vice-Chancellor, Ranchi University the appellant's form with his certificate as directed by the High Court along with a copy of that Court's order.

4. On November 22, 1969 the Registrar of the University under directions of the Vice-Chancellor wrote back to the Principal informing him that the High Court had not issued any directive to the University to allow the appellant to appear at the ensuing first M. B. B. S. Examination of 1969. The letter proceeded to state that the question whether the appellant had passed B. Sc., Part I Examination in Physics was still under investigation and in the opinion of the Vice-Chancellor the appellant was not eligible to appear at the first M. B. B. S. Examination of 1969. The appellant thus could not take the examination held on November 21, 1969. After the decision of the High Court on December 8, 1969 in the previous writ petition (No. 219 of 1969 (Pat)), the appellant applied to the Vice-Chancellor, Ranchi University on January 22, 1970 seeking permission to appear in the M. B. B. S. Examination scheduled to be held from March 2, 1970. A copy of the order of the High Court dated December 8, 1969 was also forwarded to the Vice-Chancellor. On February 14, 1970 the Registrar of the University informed the appellant that he had to qualify himself in accordance with the relevant regulations for being admitted to the first M. B. B. S. Examination. The appellant was accordingly advised to furnish proof that he had passed in Physics at the B. Sc., Part I Examination. On February 21, 1970 the appellant wrote to the Vice-Chancellor saying that as the M. B. B. S. Examination was scheduled to commence on March 2, 1970 the time at his disposal was too short to enable him to furnish proof of his having passed in Physics at the B. Sc., Part I Examination as required by the University. He also referred to the marks sheet said to have been furnished to him by the Bhagalpur University which he had already supplied and to the order of the High Court dated December 8, 1969. A request was made to permit him at least to sit at the examination provisionally and, if necessary, to withhold his result pending the completion of the enquiry by the University. In the meantime it appears that in view of the examination scheduled to be held from March 2, 1970 and apprehending that the appellant would claim to sit at this examination the Principal of the Rajendra Medical College applied to the Patna High Court on February 9, 1970 under Section 151, C. P. C. stating that the counsel appearing for the State in the High Court in Writ Petition No. 219 of 1969, D/- 8-12-1969 (Pat) had somehow failed to file a counter-affidavit explaining the full factual position. This was stated to be due to the fact that the correspondence between the Advocate-General of the State and the Principal had remained unnoticed by the counsel. In the background of this position the Principal sought directions from the High Court as to how he was required to implement the Court's order in the matter of attesting the appellant's application for permission to take the first M. B. B. S. Examination. On this application the High Court recorded the following order on February 11, 1970:

"Heard both sides. Let a provisional certificate be granted in terms of our order dated 14-11-69".

On February 25, 1970 the Registrar of the Ranchi University informed the appellant that he was not eligible to appear at the ensuing first M. B. B. S. Examination in 1969 (Special) scheduled to be held from March 2, 1970. On receipt of this letter the appellant, on February 26, 1970, presented a writ petition in the Patna High Court under Article 226 of the Constitution which has given rise to the present appeal. The appellant obtained a rule against the respondents to show cause why:

(i) they be not directed to implement the directions of the High Court contained in the judgment in Civil Writ 219/69 forthwith;

(ii) a writ in the nature of a writ of mandamus be not issued commanding them to permit the petitioner to appear at the supplementary M. B. B. S. Examination of the Ranchi University commencing from March 2, 1970;

(iii) an appropriate writ or order be not issued quashing the order contained in the letter of the University dated February 14, 1970;

(iv) the respondents be not punished for contempt of the High Court. The five respondents impleaded in this writ petition were:

(1) Principal, Rajendra Medical College, Ranchi;

(2) State of Bihar;

(3) Deputy Registrar, Ranchi University;

(4) Vice-Chancellor, Ranchi University and

(5) University of Ranchi through its Registrar.

When the writ petition came up for preliminary hearing the counsel for the appellant did not press the prayer for taking contempt proceedings. After admitting the writ petition the court stayed the operation of the order contained in the letter of the University dated February 14, 1970 and also directed the respondent No. 1 (the Principal) to certify forthwith in the prescribed form that the appellant had passed B. Sc., Part I Examination with Physics. Shri Sarwar Ali, counsel for the Principal, undertook to inform his client so as to ensure compliance with this direction. Respondent No. 5 (the University of Ranchi) was also directed to permit the appellant to sit at the M. B. B. S. Part I Supplementary Examination. The appellant's result was not to be published till after the disposal of the writ petition. On July 24, 1970 the writ petition was dismissed by the High Court on the finding that the appellant had not passed B. Sc., Part I Examination in Physics and that the University authorities were not bound to admit the appellant to M. B. B. S. Part I Examination without his fulfilling the requirements contained in Regulation 5 of Chapter

XVIII of the Regulations of the University.

5. In this Court Shri V. S. Desai took us through the relevant facts and after giving the history of the case he strenuously contended that the High Court was in error in dismissing the appellant's writ petition. The learned counsel contended that the earlier decision of the High Court in writ petition No. 219 of 1969 D/- 8-12-1969 (Pat) was conclusive and binding on the parties and it was not open to the respondents to go behind that decision. This submission is unacceptable. To begin with in the earlier petition only the Principal of the Rajendra Medical College and the State of Bihar were impleaded as parties. It is unfortunate that in those proceedings the respondents did not file any counter-affidavit and the Principal of the College was not even represented by a counsel with the result that no arguments were addressed on his behalf. The fact, however, remains that nothing said in that decision can bind the University and now it is the University which is primarily objecting to the appellant's eligibility to take the First M. B. B. S. Examination on the ground that he has not complied with Regulation 5 of Chapter XVIII of the University Regulations. It was contended by Shri Desai that the Principal should have given the certificate as directed by the High Court in the previous decision and the counsel added that if that had been done the appellant would not have found it necessary to have resort to the present writ proceedings.

6. This submission ignores the fact that the Principal had actually complied with the order of the High Court in the earlier case. He, however, also in addition disclosed all the other relevant facts which he was, in our view, entitled to do. Besides, the question directly raised in the previous case was confined to the grievance relating to violation of the principle of natural justice as the appellant had not been given adequate opportunity of placing his case before the authorities. He was accordingly held entitled to an opportunity to show cause against the action sought to be taken against him so as to satisfy the requirements of the rule of natural justice. The appellant, as the facts noted earlier in this judgment show, was given notice to show that he had actually passed in physics as claimed by him. The previous decision is thus of no assistance to the appellant in the present case.

7. The point of res judicata was also urged in the High Court and indeed it was in the forefront of the arguments addressed in that Court on behalf of the appellant. After noting the fact that in spite of the instructions from the Principal to the Health Department of the Bihar State Government to forward the Principal's version to the Advocate-General's office neither counter-affidavit was filed nor were any arguments addressed in the High Court on his behalf in the earlier case. The High Court in the present case observed that the decision in the earlier writ petition would nevertheless be binding on the Principal but it could not bind the Ranchi University. The law laid down in the earlier case was, however, held to constitute a binding precedent for the Court to follow in the present case. The previous decision was held to be confined only to the question of removal of the appellant's name from the roll of the College in violation of the principles of natural justice inasmuch as proper opportunity was not afforded to him to meet the charge that he was responsible for submitting the inflated marks sheet. After adverting to the facts of the case the High Court observed:

"We do not want to make any observation in this case in regard to the case of the respondents at some of the stages that really the figure '1' before the figure '5' in figure '15' was an interpolation in different ink. Because that matter was not finally investigated as the previous judgment shows, by following the principles of natural justice. But this much is clear now that the petitioner had not passed B. Sc., Part I Examination in Physics as he had got only twenty eight marks in Physics (five in Practical and twenty three in theoretical) and had submitted a mark sheet along with his admission application form which, to say the least, was not correct. Whoever may have been responsible for showing the inflated mark but surely the user of this mark sheet was the petitioner and to his advantage". When confronted with this position the learned counsel, after making a faint but unsuccessful attempt to persuade us to go into the facts and come to our own conclusions, confined his submission to a very narrow point. He submitted that since the appellant has attended the College regularly and has also been permitted, though provisionally, to sit at the University Examination he should be given an opportunity of showing to the University authorities that he had in fact passed in Physics at the B. Sc., Part I Examination from Bhagalpur University. According to his submission the High Court should not have given a final decision on this point when the question of interpolation of figure '1' in the marks sheet had been left open.

8. The High Court has undoubtedly observed in the impugned order that the appellant had neither in the earlier writ petition nor in the present writ petition nor in any of his affidavits in reply stated that he had as a matter of fact passed in Physics at B. Sc., Part I Examination from Bhagalpur University. On the other hand the appellant throughout insisted on basing his claim on the marks sheet which he had attached with the admission form and which had been held not to be genuine. The High Court, while dealing with the question of equitable estoppel, again observed:

"It will bear repetition to say that the petitioner who had not undisputedly now passed B. Sc., Part I Examination with Physics but by making use of wrong mark sheet had led the Principal to admit him, is not entitled to invoke the principle of estoppel against the University".

The learned counsel for the appellant was not able to point out any material on the record from which it could be shown that the High Court is wrong in making these observations and that the appellant had at any stage asserted that as a matter of fact he had passed in Physics as contended. We are, therefore, unable to find any error in the impugned order.

9. In the High Court it was not the appellant's case that he should be allowed an opportunity to show that he had actually passed in Physics as is now prayed by his counsel. Indeed, all along he was being asked to furnish proof of his having so passed in Physics. Since no such plea was raised in the High Court we are unable to make any order in the terms suggested by Shri Desai. In case, however, he is in a position to furnish proof of this fact he may approach the authorities concerned. It was the appellant himself who had without furnishing any such proof rushed to the Court with a misconceived prayer. The appeal must fail and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Appeal No. 1353 of 1966, D/- 14-9-1970.

Constitution of India, Art. 311 — Test for applicability of — Impugned order need not necessarily refer to stigma attributable to conduct of Government servant — Circumstances attendant on impugned order are relevant.

For applicability of Art. 311 of the Constitution it is not necessary that there should be express words of stigma attributable to the conduct of Government servant in the impugned order. There is no rigid principle that one has only to look to the order and if it does not contain any imputation of misconduct or words attaching a stigma to the character or reputation of a Government Officer it must be held to have been made in the ordinary course of administrative routine and the Court is debarred from looking at all the attendant circumstances to discover whether the order had been made by way of punishment. The form of order is not conclusive of its true nature and it might merely be a cloak or camouflage for an order founded on misconduct. It may be that an order which is innocuous on the face and does not contain any imputation of misconduct is a circumstance or a piece of evidence for finding whether it was made by way of punishment or administrative routine. But the entirety of circumstances preceding or attendant on the impugned order must be examined and the overriding test will always be whether the

Dr. L. M. Singhvi, Sr. Advocate, (Mr. V. P. Singh, Advocate, with him), for Appellants; M/s. D. Goburdhun and R. Goburdhun, Advocates, for Respondent.

GROVER, J.: This is an appeal by certificate from a judgment of the Patna High Court. The respondent was holding the substantive post of a Sergeant in the police force till July 31, 1946 in the State of Bihar. On August 1, 1946 he was promoted to officiate in the higher post of Subedar. On January 9, 1948 while he was still holding the substantive post of a Sergeant he was promoted to officiate temporarily as a Subedar-Major. It appears that on October 3, 1950 the Commandant of the Bihar Military Police, Muzaffarpur wrote to the Deputy Inspector General of Police, Armed Forces, mentioning an incident between the respondent and his orderly on the night of September 22, 1950. The incident involved a physical assault by the respondent on the orderly. The Commandant made an inquiry in the matter and expressed the opinion that the respondent had actually assaulted his orderly by taking the law into his own hand instead of bringing any complaint which existed against the orderly to the notice of the higher authorities for proper action. In the penultimate paragraph of his letter the Commandant wrote, "to drop the above incident without taking action, in order to prevent any re-occurrence of the Subedar Major's gross misconduct, I suggest he be censured for his unsatisfactory behaviour where he failed to maintain the required discipline." The Deputy Inspector General wrote a note to the Inspector General as follows:

"Kindly see pp. 15-12 which relate to the notorious Subedar Major S. B. Missir of M.B.P. VI whose conduct is already under enquiry by a Board to be presided over by the I. G. himself.

In this particular case Subedar Major Missir appears to have tripped up very badly and I feel that transfer, as recommended by D.I.G.A.F. is no cure.

It is indeed strange that our Board accepted the Subedar Major for promotion to the rank of Sergeant Major although he has not yet undergone training of a Sergeant. In a similar case the then D.I.G.A.F. recommended that a temporary Sgt. must undergo the Sergeant's course before his case was considered for promotion. The Subedar Major is, perhaps, too old to learn and in any case cannot be posted as a Sergeant Major in view of the fact that he was never trained as a Sergeant and has never worked in a district. He was originally appointed in the R.P.P. by Mr. Creed's Board.

I recommend that the officiating Subedar Major should be reverted to his substantive rank of Sergeant and posted to Hazaribagh. The question whether he should be retained in service will be decided after the Board of enquiry concludes its labour. I am purposely suggesting his posting to Hazaribagh because he will be far away from the witnesses and would not be able to tamper with the evidence recorded of each witness. Even the present charge against Subedar Major Missir is serious but the order of reversion would meet with the case, as it is obvious that he is not likely to make either a suitable Subedar Major or Sergeant Major."

The Inspector-General made an order on November 2, 1950, "as proposed". In the first week of November 1950 the respondent was asked to attend a Board of enquiry for answering charges of misconduct. On November 14, 1950 the respondent was reverted to his substantive post of Sergeant. On April 7, 1953 an order was made by the Deputy-Inspector-General dismissing the respondent from service.

2. In February 1954 the respondent filed a suit for a declaration that his demotion from the rank of a Subedar Major to that of Sergeant and dismissal from service were wrongful, illegal and inoperative and that he had all along remained a Subedar-Major. He further claimed a decree for a sum of Rs. 3118/- on account of arrears of pay as detailed in Sch. I attached to the plaint with future interest. The trial Court dismissed the suit on the view that the order of reversion did not contain any stigma on the competence and character of the respondent and that it had not been made by way of punishment. The High Court on appeal reversed the decision of the trial court on the finding that the "reversion was not in the usual course or for administrative reasons but it was after a finding on an inquiry about some complaint against the plaintiff and by way of punishment to him". The order of dismissal was set aside on the short ground that if the respondent continued to remain in the post of Subedar-Major even in an officiating capacity on the date with effect from which the order of dismissal was passed the provisions of Art. 311 (1) had not been complied with. The Deputy Inspector General who had passed the order of dismissal was subordinate to the authority by which he had been appointed to officiate in the post of Subedar Major, that authority being the Inspector General of Police. The dismissal order was, therefore, invalid and not binding on the respondent. He was granted the declaration asked for by him together with a decree for Rs. 3118/- with future interest at the rate of 6% per annum.

3. The sole point which falls for determination is whether the reversion of the respondent from the post of officiating Subedar Major was made in circumstances which would attract the applicability of Article 311 (2) of the Constitution. Mitter J., delivering the judgment of this court in State of Punjab v. Sukh Raj Bahadur, (1968) 3 SCR 234 = (AIR 1968 SC 1089) stated the following propositions on a consideration of the numerous decisions on the point:

"1. The services of a temporary servant or a probationer can be terminated under the rules of his employment and such termination without anything more would not attract the operation of Art. 311 of the Constitution.

2. The circumstances preceding or attendant on the order of termination have to be examined in each case, the motive behind it being immaterial.

3. If the order visits the public servant with any evil consequences or casts an aspersion against his character or integrity, it must be considered to be one by way of punishment, no matter whether he was a mere probationer or a temporary servant.

4. An order of termination of service in unexceptionable form preceded by an enquiry launched by the superior authorities only to ascertain whether the public servant should be retained in service does not attract the operation of Art. 311 of the Constitution.

5. If there be a full-scale departmental enquiry envisaged by Art. 311 i.e. an Enquiry Officer is appointed, a charge sheet submitted, explanation called for and considered, any order of termination of service made thereafter will attract the operation of the said article".

The argument sought to be raised on behalf of the appellant is that the order of reversion of the respondent to his substantive post casts no aspersion against his character or integrity. Even if the motive behind the making of the order was the report of the Deputy Inspector General dated November 1, 1950 consequent on the communication received from the Commandant dated October 3, 1950 arising out of the incident involving an assault by the respondent on his orderly it would not be a case of reversion by way of punishment. A great deal of stress is laid on the fact that no departmental enquiry as envisaged by Art. 311 was made into the above-mentioned incident before reversion was ordered. Our attention has been invited to this court's decision in the Union of India v. R. S. Dhaba, Income Tax Officer, Hoshiarpur Civil Appeal No. 882 of 1966, D/- 7-4-1969 = (AIR 1969 N.S.C. 21) in which Mr. Pillai the then Commissioner of Income tax had said that the officer concerned should be reverted because of the large number of complaints which the department had received against his integrity and the bad reports received by him from his superiors. The successor of Mr. Pillai Mr. S. R. Mehta made an order on May 22, 1964 to the effect that Dhaba officiating Income-tax Officer class II had been found unsuitable, after trial, to hold that post; his reversion was ordered as Officiating Inspector, Income tax. It was held by this court that the order of reversion had not been made by way of punishment and the decision of the High Court to the contrary was set aside. A large measure of support is sought to be derived from this decision because of the previous opinion of the Commissioner of Income tax which was highly prejudicial to Dhaba and the argument raised there was that the reversion of Dhaba was the direct result of the note of Mr. Pillai. This is what was observed by this court in that case:

"The test for attracting Art. 311 (2) of the Constitution in such a case is whether the misconduct or negligence is a mere motive for the order of reversion or termination of service or whether it is the very foundation of the order of termination of service of the temporary employee (see the decision of this court in Champaklal Chimanlal Shah v. The Union of India (1964) 5 S.C.R. 190 = (AIR 1964 SC 1854). In the present case, however, the order of reversion does not contain any express words of stigma attributed to the conduct of the respondent and, therefore, it cannot be held that the order of reversion was made by way of punishment and the provisions of Art. 311 of the Constitution are consequently attracted".

4. We are unable to accede to the contention of the appellant that the ratio of the above decision is that so long as there are no express words of stigma attributed to the conduct of a Government Officer in the impugned order it cannot be held to have been made by way of punishment. The test as previously laid and which was relied on was whether the misconduct or negligence was a mere motive for the order of reversion or whether it was the very foundation of that order. In Dhaba's case Civil Appeal No. 882 of 1966, D/- 7-4-1969 = (AIR 1969 NSC 21), it was not found that the order of reversion was based on misconduct or negligence of the officer. So far as we are aware no such rigid principle has ever been laid down by this Court that one has only to look to the order and if it does not contain any imputation of misconduct or words attaching a stigma to the character or reputation of a Government Officer it must be held to have been made in the ordinary course of administrative routine and the Court is debarred from looking at all the attendant circumstances to discover whether the order had been made by way of punishment. The form of the order is not conclusive of its true nature and it might merely be a cloak or camouflage for an order founded on misconduct (see S. R. Tewari v. District Board Agra 1964-3 SCR 55 = (AIR 1964 SC 1680)). It may be that an order which is innocuous on the face and does not contain any imputation of misconduct is a circumstance or a piece of evidence for finding whether it was made by way of punishment or administrative routine. But the entirety of circumstances preceding or attendant on the impugned order must be examined and the overriding test will always be whether the misconduct is a mere motive or is the very foundation of the order.

5. In the present case the High Court found that the order of reversion was made owing to the note of the Deputy Inspector-General of Police following the report of the Commandant. The order of reversion was directly and proximately founded on what the Commandant and the Deputy Inspector General said relating to the respondent's conduct generally and in particular with reference to the incident of assault by him on his orderly. We find no reason to disagree with the view of the High Court. It is not disputed that if the order of reversion was void the subsequent order of dismissal which was passed by the Deputy Inspector General of Police would be violative of Art. 311 (1) of the Constitution.

6. The appeal fails and it is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Mr. S. C. Manchanda, Sr. Advocate, (M/s. B. D. Sharma and R. N. Sachthey, Advocates, with him), for Appellant; Mr. K. Rajendra Chaudhuri, Advocate, for Respondent.

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

GROVER, J.: — This is an appeal from a judgment of the Andhra Pradesh High Court arising out of a reference made under Section 66 (I) of the Income-tax Act, 1922, hereinafter called the 'Act' of the question whether on the facts and in the circumstances of the case the application under Section 26-A of the Act was filed out of time.

2. The facts are not in dispute. The assessee firm was constituted under a deed of partnership dated October 6, 1955. It was to come into existence with effect from November

5, 1954. The assessee filed an application under Section 26-A of the Act for registration of the firm for the assessment year 1956-57. The 'previous year' of the firm was shown as the year ending October 26, 1955. This application was received by the Income-tax Officer on October 14, 1955. On October 20, 1955 the assessee filed before the Registrar of Firms a statement under Section 58 of the Indian Partnership Act, 1932. On November 2, 1955 the Registrar of Firms filed the statement of the assessee and made entries in the register of firms. On March 23, 1961 the Income tax Officer passed an order refusing to register the firm under Section 26-A, inter alia for the reason that the application had not been made in time. The appeal taken to Appellate Assistant Commissioner by the assessee failed. The Income tax Appellate Tribunal also upheld the order of the Income-tax Officer and the Appellate Assistant Commissioner. On that a reference was sought and the High Court answered the question referred in favour of the assessee on the ground that the application had been filed in time.

3. Section 26-A of the Act provides that an application may be made to the Income tax Officer on behalf of any firm constituted under an instrument of partnership specifying the individual shares of the partners for registration for the purposes of the Act. The application has to be made by such person or persons and at such time and has to contain such particulars etc., as may be prescribed. Rules 2 to 6 (b) of the Rules made under Section 59 of the Act deal with registration of firms. We are concerned with the following material portion of Rule 2.

"Such application shall be.....made....."

(a) Where the firm is not registered under the Indian Partnership Act, 1932 (IX of 1932) or where the deed of Partnership is not registered under the Indian Registration Act, 1908 (XVI of 1908), and the application for registration is being made for the first time under the Act,

(i) Within a period of six months of the constitution of the firm or before the end of the 'previous year' of the firm whichever is earlier, if the firm was constituted in that previous year,

(ii) before the end of the previous year in any other case;

(b) Where the firm is registered under the Indian Partnership Act, 1932, (IX of 1932) or where the deed of partnership is registered under the Indian Registration Act, (XVI of 1908) before the end of the previous year of the firm....."

Now it is common ground that the application for registration was not made within the period prescribed by Rule 2 (a). What has been urged throughout on behalf of the assessee is that the application to the Income tax Officer was governed by Rule 2 (b) and was in time as the firm should be deemed to have been registered not on the date on which it was actually registered by the Registrar of Firms but with effect from the date on which the application for registration was presented to the Registrar. In other words the firm should be considered to have been registered on October 20, 1955 on which date the statement under Section 58 of the Partnership Act was filed by the assessee before the Registrar of Firms.

4. The real question which has to be determined is whether the registration of a firm under the Partnership Act takes place with effect from the date on which the application for registration is made in accordance with Section 58 of that Act. Section 58 (1) provides that the registration of a firm may be effected at any time by sending by post or delivering to the Registrar of the area in which any place of business of the firm is situated or proposed to be situated a statement in the prescribed form and accompanied by the prescribed fee stating Under Section 59 when the Registrar is satisfied that the provisions of Section 58 have been duly complied with he shall record an entry of the statement in a register called the "register of firms" and shall file the statement. In Ram Prasad v. Kamta Prasad, AIR 1935 All 898 it was laid down that the registration of a firm under the Partnership Act takes place only when the necessary entry is made in the register of firms. Even under Section 69 of the Partnership Act which deals with the effect of non-registration it has been consistently held that the registration of a firm subsequent to the filing of the suit did not cure the defect; See Danmal Parshotamdas v. Baburam

Chhotelal, ILR (1936) 58 All 495 = (AIR 1936 All 3). Thus under the Partnership law it can be taken to have been settled by decisions of High Courts from a long time that the registration of a firm takes place only when the necessary entry is made in the register of firms under Section 59 of the Partnership Act by the Registrar. It is true that sub-section (1) of Section 58 employs language which without anything more may lend support to the view that the registration of a firm may be effected merely by sending an application which would mean that as soon as an application is sent and if entry is made under Section 59 pursuant to it the registration would be effective from the date when the application was presented. But Section 58 (1) is not to be read in isolation and has to be considered along with the scheme of the other provisions of the Act, namely, Section 59 and Section 69. The latter section may not have a direct bearing on the point under our consideration but it throws light on what was contemplated by the legislature with regard to the point of time when the firm could be regarded as registered. The Kerala High Court has in Kerala Road Lines Corporation v. Commr. of Income-tax, Kerala, (1964) 51 ITR 711 = (AIR 1964 Kerala 251) clearly expressed the view that reading Sections 58 and 59 of the Indian Partnership Act together a firm cannot be said to be registered when the statement prescribed by Section 58 and the required fee are sent to the Registrar and that the registration of the firm is effected only when the entry of the statement is recorded in the register of firms and the statement is filed by the Registrar as provided in Sec. 59. In that case also an identically similar question arose in respect of registration of a firm under Section 26-A of the Income tax Act.

5. The High Court in the judgment under appeal referred to the statement extracted from the report of the Special Committee which had been appointed by the Government of India to examine the provisions of the Bill before it came to be passed by the Central Legislature as the Partnership Act and reference was made in particular to the statement relating to Sec. 58 corresponding to Section 59 of the Partnership Act to the effect that the Registrar was a mere recording officer and that he had no discretion but to record the entry in the register of firms. We are unable to see how that statement can be taken into consideration for the purpose of interpreting the relevant provisions of the Partnership Act. We also cannot concur with the other reasoning of the High Court for coming to the conclusion that the partnership should be deemed to have been registered on the date when the application was presented and that the requirement of Rule 2 (b) would be satisfied if it became registered under the Partnership Act even after the application was filed.

6. For the reasons given above the appeal is allowed and the judgment of the High Court is set aside. The answer to the question referred must be given in the affirmative and against the assessee. The appellant shall be entitled to costs in this Court.
Appeal allowed.

Civil Appeal No. 1072 of 1966 D/- 15-1-1971.

Bombay Agricultural Produce Markets Act (22 of 1939), Section 4-A — Notification of Mysore Government No. DPC 203 CMD 64 (i), D/- 5-1-1965 declaring certain area as Principal Market Yard in supersession of earlier notification D/- 31-8-1954 is violative of fundamental right to carry on business of dealers who have to shift their business from the old notified principal market yard within a short period of ten days — (X-Ref: — Constitution of India, Article 19 (1) (g)).
(Para 12)

It is true that Government has power to declare the area specified in impugned Notification as the Principal Market Yard without necessarily declaring the old notified principal market yard as sub-market area. But reasonable time should have been given to the dealers for shifting their business. The period of one and half year was agreed to be reasonable and consequently the notification was not struck down. (Para 13).

v. The State of Bombay 8

Mr. V. M. Tarkunde, Sr. Advocate (Mr. Naunit Lal, Advocate with him), for Appellants; Mr. R. B. Datar, Advocate, for Respondent No. 1; M/s. S. K. Dholakia and S. P. Nayar, Advocates, for Respondent No. 2.

P. JAGANMOHAN REDDY, J.: — This Appeal is by Special Leave against the Judgment of the Mysore High Court dismissing the Writ Petition filed by the Appellants and Respondent No. 3 against Respondents 1 and 2, the Market Committee, Sirsi and the State of Mysore respectively, by which they challenged the Notification of the Government of Mysore No. DPC 206 CMD 64 (i) dated 5th January 1965. The Town of Sirsi in the North Canara which was once part of the Bombay State is one of the leading markets for Areca, Cardamom and Pepper. The Appellants have been carrying on business in these 3 commodities on a large scale for many years in this town mainly in the localities comprising Channapattan Galli, Basti Galli and Naged Galli, while the Respondent 3 who is a dealer in the said commodities was carrying on business in Naged Galli. In the Channapattan Galli there are nearly 20 Commission Agents who own shops and godowns who also deal in these commodities. It was stated that the three Gallis constitute the main market where wholesale business in the aforesaid commodities is being carried on for more than a century.

2. The Bombay Legislature had passed the Bombay Agricultural Produce Markets Act, 1939 (Act XXII of 1939) and thereafter made rules under the Act known as Bombay Agricultural Produce Market Rules hereinafter referred to as the Act and Rules respectively. In 1951 under the provisions of Section 4 (1) of the Act the Government of Bombay declared the town of Sirsi and various surrounding villages, 59 in number, as a market area in respect of Areca, Pepper and Cardimom and by Notification dated 24th April 1951 had also declared the 3 Gallis referred to above as the Market Yard under the Act. In 1954 the Act was amended by the addition of Section 4-A to which a reference will be made presently. After the amendment of the said Act, on 31-8-1954 the Government of Bombay Notified the three Gallis of Channapattan, Basti and Nadged which previously had been declared as a Market Yard, as the Principal Market Yard of the said Market area under Section 4-A (2) proviso. After this declaration it is said the Appellants invested large amounts in buildings which are worth ten lacs of Rupees and improved their trade. Similarly in the Nadged Galli the properties of Commission Agents are worth about Rs. 5 lacs and in the Basti Galli the business premises are worth about Rs. 2 lacs.

3. It is alleged that Shri Hegde Kadve is a Congressman and as the Chairman of the Market Committee and also as the Chairman of the Sirsi Totgars Co-operative Society and President of the Taluka Board had considerable personal influence over the Congress Ministry and consequently prevailed on the Government to grant to the Market Committee free of cost land measuring about 10 acres and 37 gunthas for a market at a distance of more than a mile from the present market, which was divided into plots, on which he managed to get shops, godowns and offices constructed with the money secured by the Society as a loan from the Government at a very low rate of interest. The Market Committee disposed of eleven sites to private parties and also allowed the Co-operative Society to construct premises for a Rice Mill, but notwithstanding these constructions the new site for the Market has no amenities. The impugned Notification had the effect of prohibiting persons from carrying on business in the said three main commodities at the old market Yard, and has thus destroyed the business of traders including that of the Appellants. The new site it was said was only so declared with a view to confer on the Co-operative Society a monopoly in trade as it would not be possible for traders to invest money and construct new buildings and godowns for carrying on trade at the new market site. The Notification was thus challenged as being ultra vires of the provisions of the Act, illegal, arbitrary, capricious and discriminatory, violating Articles 14, 19 (1) (g) and 31 of the Constitution.

4. The Respondents denied the several allegations made against them. Respondent 1 stated that the Market Committee having felt as early as 1958 that the area of the three Gallis was insufficient to cope with the expanding business and made efforts to acquire a more convenient and specious area to house the market. In furtherance of this desire and with the object of providing better facilities to the Agriculturists, the Committee from time to time made representations to the Government, which ultimately granted in all 35 acres 29 gunthas of land. Thereafter steps were taken for the development of the said area by leasing out plots to Commission Agents and traders who were induced to build premises for the purpose of sale and purchase of the Agricultural produce in the Market Yard. The Committee thereafter resolved on 13-7-1964 to request the Government, to declare the new area as the Principal Market Yard while at the same time permitting the traders to continue their business in the existing place for a period of one or two years. It was also pointed out that the Market Committee of which the Appellant No. 1 was a Member have never objected to the shifting of the Market Yard since 1958 but on the contrary had applied for the grant of plots and was complaining that the Government was delaying the issue of the necessary Notification. Besides the Appellant there were 14 others, who had obtained leases of the plots and constructed buildings on these plots. The allegation that there are no roads or well was incorrect. The new site was only about half a mile from the 3 Gallis and was centrally situated within the Municipal limits of Sirsi as is evident from the fact that the Totgars Society itself was transacting 30% of the entire business of Sirsi Market Committee in the regulated commodities with an annual turn over of more than a crore of Rupees within that area. These allegations were considered by the High Court which held that it was open to the Government under Section 4 to alter the declaration regarding the Principal Market Yard. After setting out the history of the legislation it was of the view that the impugned Notification was issued in the public interest, and not with any ulterior purpose and consequently rejected the Writ Petition.

5. The Short point in this Appeal is whether by reason of the impugned Notification the Appellants have been prevented from exercising their right to trade and whether it is discriminatory and affects in any manner their right to property.

6. The Act under which the Notification issued deals with the regulation of purchase and sale of agricultural produce in the State of Bombay including the area which has now become part of Mysore State as a consequence of the States Reorganisation Act, 1956. An examination of the provisions of the Act would show that there is no warrant for holding that there is anything which affects the freedom to carry on trade or business nor is there anything which can be said to be discriminatory. Section 2 of the Act in so far as relevant defines Market, Market Area, Principal Market Yard, Sub-Market Yard. Section 3 provides for the constitution of Markets and Market Committees and confers power on the Commissioner by Notification to declare his intention of regulating the purchase and sale of such agricultural produce and in such area as may be specified and inviting objections and suggestions within a month of the publication of the Notification. The Commissioner may after considering the objections and suggestions if any received by him during that period and after holding such enquiry as may be necessary declare the area under Section 4-A to be Market area for the purposes of the Act. Section 4 (2) provides that after the Market area is declared, no place in the said area shall subject to the provisions of Section 5-A be used for the purchase or sale of any agricultural produce specified in the Notification. Section 5 confers power on the State Government after the declaration of the Market area to establish a Market Committee for every Market area and under Section 5-AA it becomes the duty of the Market Committee to enforce the provisions of the Act and also to establish a Market therein on being required to do so by the State Government. In as much as there may be a time lag between the declaration of a Market area and establishment of a Market; the proviso to Section 4 (2) lays down that pending the establishment of a Market in a Market area the Commissioner may grant a licence to any person to use any place in the said area for the purpose of purchase and sale of any such agricultural produce and it is the duty of the Market Committee under Section 5-AA to enforce the conditions of the licence granted under Section 4 (2). Section 26 confers power on the State Government to frame rules for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the Act, and Section 27 confers power on the Market Committee to frame bye-laws with the previous sanction of the Director or any other officer specially empowered in this behalf by the State Government under Section 26. The State Government has power under Section 29 to add to, amend or cancel any of the items of agricultural produce specified in the Schedule to the Act.

7. The Act was amended in 1954 by the addition of Section 4-A which under sub-s. (1) makes it necessary for each Market area to have one Principal Market Yard and one or more Sub-Market Yards as may be necessary. Sub-s. (2) of the said Section empowers the Commissioner by Notification to declare any enclosure, building or locality in any market area to be a Principal Market Yard for the area and other enclosures, buildings or localities to be one or more Sub-market Yards for the area. The proviso requires that one of the enclosures, buildings or localities declared to be market yards before the commencement of the amendment of that section, shall be declared to be the Principal Market Yard for the Market area and others, if any, to be one or more Sub-Market Yards for the area, subject to such variation as may be necessary.

8. The effect of these provisions is that a Market area is first declared under Section 4 (1) after which a market yard may be constituted for the market area as Principal Market Yard and Sub-Market Yard or yards if any. The declaration of the Market area subject to Section 5-A has the effect of prohibiting the purchase or sale of agricultural produce in any place in that area except in the area declared as a Principal Market Yard or Sub-Market yard or yards, if any.

This Court had earlier in Mohammad Hussain Gulam Mohammad v. The State of Bombay, (1962) 2 SCR 659 = (AIR 1962 SC 97), held Sections 4, 4-A, 5, 5-A and 5-AA to be constitutional and that none of the said provisions imposed unreasonable restrictions on the right to carry on trade in the agricultural produce regulated under the Act as such were not violative of Article 19 (1) (g) of the Constitution.

9. It is, however, contended that the impugned Notification is violative of Articles 19 (1) (g), 14 and 31 of the Constitution.

10. The Notification as we have already stated was issued on 5-1-1965 under Section 4-A of the Act and is in the following terms:—

"In exercise of the powers conferred by sub-section (2) of Section 4-A of the Bombay Agricultural Produce Markets Act, 1939 (Bombay Act 22 of 1939) as in force in the Bombay area, and in supersession of Bombay Government Notification Development Department No. APM 4554, dated 31-8-1954, the Government of Mysore hereby declares the following locality in the market area of the Agricultural Produce Market Committee, Sirsi of Sirsi Taluka of North Kanara District, to be a Principal market yard for the area with effect from the 15th January, 1965, namely:—

Locality:

An area measuring about 35 acres and 29 gunthas and 4 acres of Sirsi Totagaras' Co-operative Sales Society Ltd., Sirsi in R. S. No. 116, 117, 59 and 60 of Sirsi Taluka

On the North by:— Sirsi — Yellapur Main Road and R. S. No. 116.

On the South by:— R. S. Nos. 55, 57, and portion of R. S. No. 299.

On the East by:— Portion of R. S. Nos. 299, 58, 129-A and 118.

On the West by:— R. S. Nos. 61, 64 and 68".

11. It may be mentioned that the earlier Notification of 31-8-1954 also made in exercise of the powers conferred by sub-section (2) of Section 4-A of the Act had declared as the Principal Market Yard all godowns, storage places and open places lying within the limits of the Sirsi Municipality and approved by the Agricultural Produce Market Committee, Sirsi for storage and for the purpose of sale of commodities under regulation including the area locally known as Channapattan Gali, Basti

Galli and Nadger Galli which had earlier been declared by Notification of the Government in the Development Department dated 24-4-1951 to be a Market Yard. The effect of the supersession of this Notification by the impugned Notification is that as from 15-1-1965 the area of the 3 Gallis ceased to be the Principal Market Yard, and as such no business could be transacted therein on and after that date.

12. This position could not be seriously controverted by the learned Advocate for the Respondents. In our view the prohibition implicit in the Notification was unreasonable and to that extent violated the fundamental rights of the Appellants and Respondent 3 to carry on their business because it could not have been postulated that they could immediately in 10 days shift their business to the Principal Market Yard declared by the impugned notification. The learned Advocate for the Market Committee however pointed out that it was never their intention to prohibit at once any business being conducted in the Market Yard in the Gallis, but they had in fact in their proposals to the Government suggested the business in the Gallis should be allowed to be continued for a year or two. Whatever their proposals may have been we have no doubt that the effect of the Notification as long as it is in force is to prohibit the Appellants and Respondent 3 from carrying on business in the Market Yard of the Gallis.

13. It is submitted by the learned Advocate for the Respondents that the Appellants and Respondent 3 had sufficient time till now to make arrangements to shift their business, as such they are not entitled to complain, but the contention on behalf of the Appellants is that they were entitled to challenge the Notification and as they had invested large amounts in buildings etc., in the 3 Gallis they are justified in asking this Court to direct Respondents to have these areas declared as a sub-Market area. While the Government has the power to issue a Notification in public interest and to declare the area specified in the impugned Notification as the Principal Market area, without necessarily declaring other areas simultaneously as sub-Market area, in our view sufficient time should have been given for the Appellants, Respondent 3 and other persons doing business in the area of the 3 Gallis to shift their business. As long as the Notification prohibited them from doing business in those Gallis they had a right to challenge the validity of that Notification. No doubt the Government could have declared the 3 Gallis as sub-Market area but it is not for this Court to arrogate to itself the functions of the Government and direct them to do so merely because that would be one of the ways in which the impugned Notification can be rectified. The learned Advocate for the Market Committee, however, consistent with the stand taken by the Market Committee in its counter before the High Court that it had requested the Government to allow the business in the Gallis to be carried on for one or two years agrees to give one and a half years time for the Appellants and Respondents to enable them to shift during this period, to the Principal Market Yard declared under the impugned Notification and till then permit them to continue their business in the 3 Gallis. The period agreed to in our view is a reasonable period within which the Appellants and Respondent 3 can shift their business to the new Market Area and till then they should not be prohibited from doing business in the Market area of the 3 Gallis as heretofore. In view of this agreement except to give the above direction there is no need to strike down the Notification.

14. The Appeal is accordingly allowed to the extent indicated subject to the above directions. There will be no costs in this Appeal.

Order accordingly.

(A) Constitution of India, Article 226 — Exercise of jurisdiction is in judicial discretion of High Court — Petitioner prima facie entitled to have his grievance tried — Dismissal of petition in limine without giving reasons is improper — Spl. Civ. Appln. No. 41 of 1969, dated 19-6-1969 (Bombay), Reversed.

The High Court may, in exercise of its judicial discretion decline to exercise its extraordinary jurisdiction under Article 226. If the petitioner makes a claim which is frivolous, vexatious, or prima facie unjust, or may not appropriately be tried in a petition invoking extraordinary jurisdiction, the Court may decline to entertain the petition. But a party claiming to be aggrieved by the action of a public body or authority on the plea that the action is unlawful, high-handed, arbitrary or unjust is entitled to a hearing of its petition on the merits. (Para 28)

Where the allegations in the petition and the materials placed before the Court show that the petitioner is entitled to have his grievance against the imposition of octroi duty tried, the dismissal of the writ petition in limine without giving any reasons is improper. (Para 8)

(B) Evidence Act (1872), Section 115 — Representation of existing fact and representation as to promise to do something in future — Distinction — Other party acting on such representation — It may give rise to estoppel in former case but in latter it may result in contract or obligation ex contractu enforceable in equity — This equally applies to obligations of public bodies like municipality.

A representation of an existing fact must be distinguished from a representation that something will be done in future. The former may, if it amounts to a representation as to some fact alleged at the time to be actually in existence, raise an estoppel, if another person alters his position relying upon that representation. A representation that something will be done in future may involve an existing intention to act in future in the manner represented. If the representation is acted upon by another person it may, unless the statute governing the person making the representation provides otherwise, result in an agreement enforceable at law; if the statute requires that the agreement shall be in a certain form, no contract may result from the representation and acting therefor but the law is not powerless to raise in appropriate cases an equity against him to compel performance of the obligation arising out of his representation. (Para 10)

Public bodies are as much bound as private individuals to carry out representations of facts and promises made by them, relying on which other persons have altered their position, to their prejudice. The obligation arising against an individual out of his representation amounting to a promise may be enforced ex contractu by a person who acts upon the promise; when the law requires that a contract enforceable at law against a public body shall be in certain form or be executed in the manner prescribed by statute, the obligation may be enforced against it in appropriate cases in equity. The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

called 'the Company' — for the issue of a writ restraining the respondent Municipality from enforcing the provisions of the Maharashtra Municipalities Act 40 of 1965 relating to the levy, assessment, collection, recovery of octroi and in particular Section 105 and Sections 136 to 144 thereof, and from enforcing the Maharashtra Municipalities (Octroi) Rules, 1967, and from acting upon resolutions passed by the Municipal Council dated September 9, 1968 and September 13, 1968, and from levying, assessing, collecting, recovering or taking any other step under the Act, rules or the resolutions, and for an order restraining the Municipality of Ulhasnagar from levying, assessing, collecting any octroi on the goods imported by the Company within the limits of the Municipal Council for a period of seven years from the date of its first imposition. With special leave, the Company has appealed against the order rejecting the petition.

2. The Company was incorporated under the Indian Companies Act, 1913. It set up its factory in 1956, within the limits of village Shahad, Taluka Kalyan, on a site purchased from the State of Bombay, and within an area known as the 'Industrial Area'. No octroi duty was then payable in respect of goods imported by the Company into the Industrial Area for use in the manufacture of its products. On October 30, 1959, the Government of Bombay issued a notification announcing its intention to constitute a Municipality for certain villages, including the Industrial Area. The Company and other manufacturers who had set up their plants and factories objected to the proposed constitution of Municipal area. On September 20, 1960, the State of Maharashtra (successor to the State of Bombay) published a notification constituting with effect from April 1, 1960 the Municipality including the area in which the Industrial Area was included. Representations were then made by the Company and other manufacturers for excluding the Industrial Area from the Ulhasnagar Municipal District Area. On April 27, 1962 the Government of Maharashtra (the new State of Maharashtra having been constituted under the Bombay Reorganisation Act, 1960) proclaimed that the Industrial Area be excluded from the Municipal jurisdiction. The District

Municipality then made a representation to the Government of Maharashtra that the proclamation dated April 27, 1962, be withdrawn by the Government. The Municipality agreed to exempt the existing factories, viz., the Company and other manufacturers whose factories were then existing in the Industrial Area from payment of octroi for a period of seven years from the date of levy of octroi and for exempting new industrial units from payment of octroi for a similar period from the date of establishment. The Government of Maharashtra acceded to the request of the Municipality to retain the Industrial Area within the local limits of the Municipality.

3. On August 24, 1963, the District Municipality passed a resolution to implement the agreement. It was resolved that the Municipality "agrees to give a concession to the existing factories by exempting them from the payment of octroi for a period of 7 years from the date of levy of octroi tax and by exempting new factories from the payment of the octroi tax for a period of 7 years from the date of their establishment as recommended by the Government of Maharashtra".

4. On October 31, 1963, the Government of Maharashtra issued a notification withdrawing the proclamation dated April 27, 1962, and the Industrial Area became part of the Ulhasnagar Municipal District. Relying upon the assurance and undertaking given by the Municipality the Company claims that it had expanded its activities and commenced manufacturing new products by setting up additional plant which it would not have done "but for the concessions given, assurances and representations made and agreement arrived at on May 21, 1963".

5. On September 10, 1965, the Legislature of the State of Maharashtra enacted the Maharashtra Municipalities Act which repealed the Bombay District Municipal Act 3 of 1901. The notification declaring the area of the former District Municipality of Ulhasnagar into the Ulhasnagar Municipality became effective as from June 15, 1966. The Ulhasnagar Municipality took over, as successor to the Ulhasnagar District Municipality, the assets and the affairs of that body. On September 9, 1968 the Ulhasnagar

Municipality resolved "to levy minimum rates of octroi duty as shown in columns 4 and 6 on all items shown in Sch. I to the Rules", and by resolution dated September 13, 1968, the Municipality adopted with effect from January 1, 1969, the rates for the imposition of octroi duty on the goods imported for use, sale and consumption within the Municipal Council limits.

6. At a special meeting held on December 24, 1968, the Municipal Council considered the letters written by the Government of Maharashtra dated November 22, 1968 and December 10, 1968, drawing the attention of the Municipality to the circumstances in which the Industrial Area was included and retained in the local limits of the Ulhasnagar District Municipality and continued to remain within the local limits of the Municipality, and "advised the Municipality to pass a resolution confirming such exemption and honour the commitments of its predecessor". The Municipality ignored the advice and resolved that the Government of Maharashtra be informed that the Municipality would consider afresh on merits any representation of a tax-payer for exemption from payment of octroi, and if any such representation was made by the factories situate in the Industrial Area, the Council would consider the same and take such action as it would deem fit. Thereafter the Municipality sought to levy octroi duty and to recover from the Company octroi duty amounting to approximately Rs. 15 lakhs per annum.

7. The Company moved a petition before the High Court of Bombay under Article 226 of the Constitution for the writs set out earlier seeking to restrain the Ulhasnagar Municipality from enforcing the octroi Rules.

8. The High Court may, in exercise of its discretion, decline to exercise its extraordinary jurisdiction under Article 226 of the Constitution. But the discretion is judicial: if the petition makes a claim which is frivolous, vexatious, or prima facie unjust, or may not appropriately be tried in a petition invoking extraordinary jurisdiction, the Court may decline to entertain the petition. But a party claiming to be aggrieved by the action of a public body or authority on the plea that the action is unlawful, high-handed, arbitrary or unjust is entitled to a hearing of its petition on the merits. Apparently the petition filed by the Company did not raise any complicated questions of fact for determination, and the claim could not be characterised as frivolous, vexatious or unjust. The High Court has given no reasons for dismissing the petition in limine, and on a consideration of the averments in the petition and the materials placed before the Court we are satisfied that the Company was entitled to have its grievance against the action of the Municipality, which was prima facie unjust, tried.

9. The Company pleaded that the Ulhasnagar Municipality had "entered into a solemn arrangement" not to levy octroi duty for a period of seven years from the date of its imposition. The evidence relating to the undertaking was contained in public records. The Government of Maharashtra advised the Municipality that it was acting in violation of the terms of that undertaking. By its resolution the Municipality declined to abide by the undertaking of its predecessor.

10. There is undoubtedly a clear distinction between a representation of an existing fact and a representation that something will be done in future. The former may, if it amounts to a representation as to some fact alleged at the time to be actually in existence, raise an estoppel, if another person alters his position relying upon that representation. A representation that something will be done in the future may result in a contract, if another person to whom it is addressed acts upon it. A representation that something will be done in future is not a representation that it is true when made. But between a representation of a fact which is untrue and a representation express or implied — to do something in future, there is no clear antithesis. A representation that something will be done in future may involve an existing intention to act in future in the manner represented. If the representation is acted upon by another person it may, unless the statute governing the person making the representation provides otherwise, result in an agreement enforceable at law; if the statute requires that the agreement shall be in a certain form, no contract may result from the representation and acting therefor but the law is not powerless to raise in appropriate cases an equity against him to compel performance of the obligation arising out of his representation.

11. Public bodies are as much bound as private individuals to carry out representations of facts and promises made by them, relying on which other persons have altered their position to their prejudice. The obligation arising against an individual out of his representation amounting to a promise may be enforced ex contractu by a person who acts upon the promise: when the law requires that a contract enforceable at law against a public body shall be in certain form or be executed in the manner prescribed by statute, the obligation if the contract be not in that form may be enforced against it in appropriate cases in equity. In Union of India v. M/s. Indo-Afghan Agencies Ltd., (1968) 2 SCR 366 = (AIR 1968 SC 718) this Court held that the Government is not exempt from the equity arising out of the acts done by citizens to their prejudice, relying upon the representations as to its future conduct made by the Government. This Court held that the following observations made by Denning, J., in Robertson v. Minister of Pensions, (1949) 1 KB 227 applied in India.

"The Crown cannot escape by saying that estoppels do not bind the Crown for that doctrine has long been exploded. Nor can the Crown escape by praying in aid the doctrine of executive necessity, that is, the doctrine that the Crown cannot bind itself so as to better its future executive action". We are in this case not concerned to deal with the question whether Denning, L. J., was right in extending the rule to a different class of cases as in Falmouth Boat Construction Co. Ltd. v. Howell, (1950) 1 All ER 538, where he observed at page 542:

"Whenever Government officers in their dealings with a subject take on themselves to assume authority in a matter with which the subject is concerned, he is entitled to rely on their having the authority which they assume. He does not know, and cannot be expected to know, the limits of their authority, and he ought not to suffer, if they exceed it". It may be sufficient to observe that in appeal from that judgment Howell v.

Falmouth Boat Construction Co. Ltd., (1950) 1 All ER 538 Lord Simonds observed after referring to the observations of Denning, L. J.:

"The illegality of an act is the same whether the action has been misled by an assumption of authority on the part of a government officer however high or low in the hierarchy. * * * * The question is whether the character of an act done in force of a statutory prohibition is affected by the fact that it had been induced by a misleading assumption of authority. In my opinion the answer is clearly: No".

12. If our nascent democracy is to thrive different standards of conduct for the people and the public bodies cannot ordinarily be permitted. A public body is in our judgment, not exempt from liability to carry out its obligation arising out of representations made by it relying upon which a citizen has altered his position to his prejudice.

13. Mr. Gokhale appearing on behalf of the Municipality urged that the petition filed by the Company apparently raised questions of fact which in the view of the High Court could not appropriately be tried in the exercise of the extraordinary jurisdiction under Article 226. But the High Court has not said so, and on a review of the averments made in the petition this argument cannot be sustained. Merely because a question of fact is raised, the High Court will not be justified in requiring the party to seek relief by the somewhat lengthy, dilatory and expensive process by a civil suit against a public body. The questions of fact raised by the petition in this case are elementary.

14. The order passed by the High Court is set aside and the case is remanded to the High Court with a direction that it be re-admitted to the file and be dealt with and disposed of according to law. The High Court will issue rule to the Municipality and the State and dispose of the petition. We recommend that the case may be taken up for early hearing.

15. We had during the pendency of the appeal in this Court made an order restraining the levy of octroi duty. We extend the operation of the order for a fortnight from this date to enable the Company to move the High Court for an appropriate interim order pending hearing and disposal of the writ petition. There will be no order as to costs in this Court. Costs in the High Court will be costs in the cause.

16. Since we have granted special leave against the order dismissing the petition, we do not deem it necessary to consider whether the order rejecting the application for certificate was erroneous. Civil Appeal No. 2131 of 1969 is therefore dismissed.

Case remanded.

BO/BO/A504/71/YPB/C

MITTER, J.: — This is an appeal by certificate under Article 133 (1) (b) of the Constitution of India granted by the High Court of Judicature for the State of Punjab at Delhi against its order and judgment dated the 6th January, 1966 dismissing in limine the appellants' application for the issue of an appropriate writ directing the respondents to grant to the appellants 50 per cent of the balance of the six licences applied for by them on applications made between April 23, 1964 and October 28, 1964 of the total value of Rs. 56,483/- and for other reliefs.

2. The facts are as follows. The appellant firm which is engaged in the manufacture of fountain pens, ball pens etc., was constituted of three partners, namely, K. R. Vora, J. L. Mehta and A. M. Bhuta. After retirement of one of the partners, the firm consisted of only two persons H. T. Vora and G. J. Mehta in November 1958. The firm had always been getting import licences as actual users for the importation of raw materials from the Chief Controller of Exports and Imports and from the Iron and Steel Controller, respondents 1 and 2 herein, through the Plastic Directorate. In December 1963 G. J. Mehta also retired from the partnership and Mrs. Santokbai H. Vora was admitted as a partner in his place. On the same day the partners executed an agreement of dissolution of partnership which inter alia provided:—

1. That the partnership would stand dissolved so far as the retiring partner was concerned as from December 5, 1963.

2. The machinery, raw materials etc. lying in stock at the time of the dissolution of the partnership would be equally divided between the parties.

3. The continuing partner would be entitled to continue and carry on business in the name of the dissolved firm and would also be entitled to its good will and the continuing partner would have the sole right of import licences which were in hand and which would be received against the pending applications.

According to the petition presented before the High Court, the appellant communicated the said change to the respondents 1 and 2 and it appears that even after the dissolution of the firm several licences were received by the continuing partner without any objection from the retiring partner. Between the dates mentioned above the appellant submitted six applications for the grant of import licences which were required for the purpose of carrying on the business of manufacture pursued by the firm. The appellant also purchased new machinery and equipment so as to enable it to increase its production capacity. This averment in the petition is said to be supported by a statement of comparative figures of manufacture as certified by chartered accountants of which a copy was annexed to the petition. There was some correspondence between the appellant and the Assistant Development Officer of the Government of India on the question of the appellant's claim to licences in view of the fact that Messrs Premier Products, a business started by the retiring partner had reported commencing manufacturing fountain pens etc., with the portion of the machinery allotted to him as a result of the dissolution of the firm and the partition of its assets. The appellants claimed to have satisfied the Assistant Development Officer with full and necessary particulars. In order to avoid delay in the matter of the investigation taken up by the Assistant Development Officer the appellants prayed for issue of at least 50% of ad hoc licences pending final decision of the matter by a letter dated 10th March, 1965. They received two ad hoc licences on April 9, 1965. But in spite of their best efforts and representations made to the Deputy Secretary, Ministry of Commerce of the Government of India as its Secretary the appellants were unable to secure 50 per cent of the balance of the actual users' licences to which they claimed to be entitled. Ultimately the Assistant Controller by letter dated November 18, 1955 informed the appellants that as licences of raw materials had been issued to Premier Products Bombay no further licences could be issued to them. This was repeated by the Under Secretary to the Government of India in his letter dated 3rd December 1965 wherein it was stated that as the machinery and equipment of the original firm had been equally divided, it had been decided that both the firms i. e., the old and the new ones, should be registered with D. G. T. D. and the raw material allocations previously made to the undivided firm should be equally divided between the two firms.

3. It is against this decision that the appellants moved an application to the High Court for issue of a writ on the ground that the refusal had been against the policy, procedure and conditions governing the grant and issue of actual users' licences as published in the Gazette of India as a public notice and embodied in an official publication called the 'Import Trade Control Policy' popularly known as the Red Book and the Hand Book. In these two publications detailed provisions have been made for the division of the licences in the event of a change in the constitution of a firm's (firm?) pending applications, pending licences, future licences and future licence entitlements. According to the appellant the two books also lay down conditions for grant of licence to actual users and make separate provisions for division of licences in the case of pending applications for the grant of licences and pending licences in the case of change of constitution of the firm. The appellants claim that these publications however do not make any provisions for division of the licence entitlements for the future inasmuch as actual users are given licences for the licensing period only on the basis laid down by the Red Book and the Hand Book. Paragraph 73 of the Hand Book to which our attention was drawn, lays down the basis of licensing of actual users. They provide for taking into account various matters which are all set out in the petition. Paragraph 88 of the Hand Book provides for changes in the name, constitution or ownership of the actual users' business after the issue of the actual users' licence but before and after the importation of the goods. According to the petition this paragraph does not deal with the division of future licences to actual users inasmuch as the same has to depend on the basis laid down and contained in paragraph 73 of the Hand Book. The appellants claimed in their petition that the licensing authorities are bound to act judicially and reasonably while granting or refusing licences in exercise of the discretion vested in them by law and they could refuse the licence under the provisions of Clause 6 of the Imports (Control) Order, 1955 and under paragraph 73 of the Hand Book, but the reason given for refusal to give the balance of import licences to them was not a valid one and the refusal was unfair and arbitrary based on extraneous considerations without proper application of the mind on the part of the respondents. It was in the above circumstances that the appellants approached the High Court for the issue of a writ and the said application was rejected in limine.

4. It was submitted before us that clearly the facts laid down in the petition called for some explanation by the respondents to justify their refusal as the ground which was put forward as the basis of the refusal cannot bear scrutiny. It appears to us that the grievance of the appellants is not unjustified. The petition supported as it was by numerous annexures which contain copies of representations made by the appellants to the various authorities and their replies, obviously established a prima facie case for investigation and the High Court should have, to say the least, called upon the respondents to show cause why a rule should not be issued.

5. Learned counsel appearing for the respondents did not suggest that a prima facie case for enquiry had not been made out. The grant of actual users' licences to manufacturers is of vital importance to them if they are to carry on their business and Courts ought not to uphold any refusal of such licences if they appear to be arbitrary or based on extraneous considerations. It may be that the respondents could have satisfied the High Court that there was sufficient cause for refusal apart from the grounds put forward by them in the letters of November 18, 1965 and December 3, 1965. However the High Court though competent to decline to exercise its extraordinary jurisdiction under Article 226 of the Constitution when it finds that the petition is frivolous or without substance should not throw it out in limine if a prima facie case for investigation is made out. The High Court can reject a petition in limine if it takes the view that the authorities whose acts were called in question had not acted improperly or if it felt that the petition raised complicated questions of fact for determination which could not be properly adjudicated upon in a proceeding under Article 226 of the Constitution. We may, in this connection, refer to a recent judgment of this Court in Century Spinning and Manufacturing Co. Ltd. v. Ulhasnagar Municipal Council, (reported in AIR 1971 SC 1021) where it was stated that:

"..... a party claiming to be aggrieved by the action of a public body or authority on the plea that the action is unlawful, high-handed, arbitrary or unjust is entitled to a hearing of its petition on the merits The High Court has given no reasons for dismissing the petition in limine, and on a consideration of the averments in the petition and the materials placed before the Court we are satisfied that the Company was entitled to have its grievance against the action of the Municipality, which was prima facie unjust, tried".

6. Following the above dictum we allow the appeal, set aside the order of the High Court and remand the case to the High Court with a direction that the petition be re-admitted to the file and be dealt with and disposed of according to law. The High Court will issue a rule to the authorities concerned and the Union of India and dispose of the petition expeditiously. In the circumstances, we make no order as to costs of the hearing before this Court.

Appeal allowed; case remanded.

(B) Hindu law — Joint family property — Alienation — Legal necessity — Proof — Recital in sale-deed of legal necessity — Evidentiary value.

Legal necessity does not mean actual compulsion: it means pressure upon the estate which in law may be regarded as serious and sufficient. The onus of proving legal necessity may be discharged by the alienee by proof of actual necessity or by proof that he made proper and bona fide enquiries about the existence of the necessity and that he did all that was reasonable to satisfy himself as to the existence of the necessity. Recitals in a deed of legal necessity do not by themselves prove legal necessity. The recitals are, however, admissible in evidence, their value varying according to the circumstances in which the transaction was entered into. The recitals may be used to corroborate other evidence of the existence of legal necessity. The weight to be attached to the recitals varies according to the circumstances. Where the evidence which could be brought before the Court and is within the special knowledge of the person who seeks to set aside the sale is withheld, such evidence being normally not available to the alienee, the recitals go to his aid with greater force and the Court may be justified in appropriate cases in raising an inference against the party seeking to set aside the sale on the ground of absence of legal necessity wholly or partially, when he withholds evidence in his possession

A sale-deed executed by a widow, a limited owner, in respect of joint family property contained recital that sale was for legal necessity. Circumstances proved in suit to set aside sale also corroborated the fact of legal necessity. Eldest son of the widow also participated in execution of the sale-deed and it was not proved whether he was minor or major at that time.

Held, sale could not be set aside as legal necessity was amply proved. A. F. O. D. No. 173 of 1956, D/- 7-3-1962 (Cal), Reversed. (Paras 13, 14)

Mr. S. V. Gupte, Sr. Advocate, (Mr. D. N. Mukherjee, Advocate, with him), for Appellants; Mr. Purshotam Chatterjee, Sr. Advocate, (M/s. P. K. Chatterjee and Rathin Das, Advocates, with him), for Respondent No. 2.

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

SHAH, J.: One Sashi Bhusan was possessed of a piece of land at Mcuza Behala District 24-Parganas admeasuring .98 acres. The land devolved on the death of Sashi Bhusan in 1920 upon his daughter Sarala. Under the Dayabhaga system of law, Sarala inherited the property of her father as a limited owner. Sarala married Kunja Behari. The latter died in 1937 leaving him surviving Sarala, two sons Tulsi and Gobinda, and four daughters Nalini, Kamala, Mangala and Radha. Two of the daughters were married during the lifetime of Kunja Behari. Kunja Behari left no estate except a residential house constructed on the land at Mauza Behala. Kunja Behari was ailing for about one year before his death in 1937. He was in an humble walk of life, and was apparently not profitably employed during his lifetime. At the time of his death the two sons Tulsi and Gobinda were minors.

2. On October 22, 1941, Sarala executed a deed, Ext. E, agreeing to sell a part of the land (.90 acres) for Rs. 1,100/- to Chapalabala wife of Sakha Nath Ghosh. It was recited in the agreement of sale that Sarala had agreed to sell .90 acres of land possessed by her "on account of financial need and to pay off certain debts". Sarala acknowledged receipt of Rupees 101/- as earnest money. It appears that Sarala was for some time thereafter disinclined to carry out the bargain. However on March 13, 1942 she executed a deed, Ext. C, conveying the land agreed to be sold for a consideration of Rs. 1,500/- to Chapalabala and Banikana. It was recited in the deed:

"Now on account of financial needs and to meet certain debts and out of other legal necessity. I announced to sell .90 acre land at rent of Rs. 23/- per annum free from defects and encumbrances leaving a portion of homestead land measuring .08 acre." It was also recited in the deed that Rs. 101/- were paid on the date of the agreement of sale that Sarala had received Rs. 899/- before the date of sale, and Rs. 500/- were paid to her in the presence of the Sub-Registrar. An endorsement of payment of Rupees 500/- before the Sub-Registrar was made by that Officer. The thumb-mark of Sarala was attested by Abinash Chandra Chakravarty and the deed was attested by four persons including her son Gobinda.

3. On the date of the sale the rent in respect of the land was in arrears. It also appears that before the date of sale Mangala had been given in marriage and the youngest daughter Radha remained to be married. Sarala had also to provide for food and clothing for at least five persons. Sarala had only a residential house and the land in dispute and she had no source of income.

4. Sarala died on April, 12, 1950. On January 24, 1953 Tulsi and Gobinda sons of Sarala filed a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, 24-Parganas, for a decree declaring that the sale deed dated March 13, 1942 executed by Sarala was not binding upon the plaintiffs, because it was executed without legal necessity. The suit was resisted by Chapalabala and Banikana (defendants 1 & 2) and by alienees of the land from them. The Trial Court held that the sale deed was supported by legal necessity. The learned Judge observed that Sarala was in "strained financial circumstances", and she executed the sale deed to meet expenses for maintaining herself and her family, and for payment of debts. She had to meet municipal taxes, rent for the land, and expenses for the marriage of her daughter Radha. The learned Judge observed that the plea that execution of the sale deed was obtained by fraud, misrepresentation and undue influence was not seriously pressed "inasmuch as there was no evidence worth the name adduced" to support that case.

5. Against the decree dismissing the suit the plaintiffs appealed to the High Court. In the view of the High Court there was "no such serious and sufficient pressure on the estate" of Sarala as to compel her to sell her property, and the case of the plaintiffs that she was induced to do so "by persuasion and undue influence of Sakha Nath Ghosh husband of defendant 1 must be accepted. The High Court also observed that it was doubtful whether even full consideration for the sale was paid. The High Court held that the defendants' case of legal necessity was not proved and on that account the sale deed executed by Sarala was not binding upon the plaintiffs. But because one Dhiren Chandra an intermediate transferee was not made party to the suit and Dhiren Chandra had obtained afresh settlement the High Court was of the opinion that the decree of the Trial Court in respect of 10 cottahas out of the land sold by Sarala, could not be reversed. The High Court accordingly modified the decree passed by the Trial Court and allowed the appeal in part, and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit against defendants 4, 5, 6 & 16 in respect of 10 cottahas of land in the northern part of the land. The plaintiffs were given by the decree opportunity to amend the plaint by making a claim for actual possession which was not till then claimed in the plaint. Accordingly the suit was decreed in respect of the remaining defendants in respect of the portion of the land not covered by 10 cottahas in possession of defendants 4, 5, 6 & 16. With certificate granted by the High Court, the heirs of original defendants 2 and 3 having appealed to this Court.

6. In the plaint it was averred in paragraph 4 that Sarala was "illiterate and unpractical in worldly matters", that "she was a simple and pardanashin lady", that Sakha Nath Ghosh husband of Chapalabala was an "Officer" of one of the partner of the famous Roy family and was "shrewd and cunning", that Sarala called him "Dharamapita", and used to "depend upon him in many affairs" and used to be guided by his instructions, and on that account the said Sakha Nath and the husband of Banikana in collusion with the scribe made fraudulent representation and exercised undue influence over Sarala and got the sale deed executed in their favour. This plea was denied by the contesting defendants. At the trial no issue was raised and no evidence was led in support of that plea. It was conceded that the plea of fraud and undue influence could not be supported. The Trial Court observed:

"Though it was also tried to be said that there was fraud, misrepresentation and undue influence exercised for the execution and registration of the Kobala (Sale deed) yet that branch of argument was not seriously pressed inasmuch as there was no evidence worth the name adduced to show that there was really any fraud practised for the execution and registration of the kobala in favour of defendants 1 and 2 (Chapalabala and Banikana) by Sarala Bala Dasi." The High Court without adverting to this state of the record observed that the case of the plaintiffs that Sarala was induced to sell the land because of persuasion and undue influence of Sakha Nath Ghosh must be accepted. The High Court also observed that it was doubtful whether full consideration for the sale was paid, and that since Sakha Nath Ghosh was "a rent collector under one of Roy Babus of Behala, in order to grab the valuable property belonging to Sarala he had induced Sarala to enter into a transaction of sale". These observations of the High Court are not supported by any evidence, and they seriously vitiate their appreciation of the evidence on record.

7. In the sale deed it was expressly recited that Rs. 101/- were paid at the time of the agreement of sale. That recital was supported by the recital in Ex. E in the agreement of sale. It was also recited in the sale deed, Ext. C, that Rs. 899/- were received before the date of the sale, and Rs. 500/- were received before the Sub-Registrar. Payment of Rs. 500/- is supported by the endorsement on the sale deed itself. It is true that apart from the recital about the payment of Rs. 899/- there is no other documentary evidence to prove that payment. The burden of proving that the consideration was not received by the vendor, however, lay upon the plaintiffs and no serious attempt was made to discharge that burden. The plaintiffs set up the case that Rupees 500/- were taken back from Sarala after she left the Sub-Registrar's office. The High Court disbelieved this part of the case about repayment of the amount of Rupees 500/- by Sarala received by her before the Sub-Registrar. The High Court observed that about the payment of the balance of the consideration, namely Rupees 899/-, "there was no evidence at all on the side of the defendants that the same was paid". In our judgment, the High Court misconceived the nature of the onus which lay upon the plaintiffs to prove that the consideration which it was recited in the deed was received by Sarala was not in fact received by her and a false recital was made. The recitals in the deed are supported by the testimony of Sailendra Nath Nandi who said that the entire consideration was received by Sarala. We are unable to accept the view of the High Court that the sale deed was not supported by full consideration.

8. The agreement of sale and the sale deed, it may be remembered were attested by Gobinda son of Sarala. Before us it was contended that Gobinda was at the date of the agreement of sale, and at the date of the sale deed, a minor and his attestation was of no value. But on this part of the case there is no reliable evidence.

9. Jogindra Nath Mondal who wrote the two deeds was examined on behalf of the defendants. He deposed that Ext. E—the agreement of sale—was read over and the contents were explained to Sarala after it was written, and she understood the implications of the deed and also received Rs. 101/-. In his cross-examination he stated that he had written down the deed according to what was said to him by Sarala, Gobinda and by Sakha Nath Ghosh and thereafter Sarala executed the deed. There is no reason to disbelieve the testimony of this witness. Abinash Chandra Chakravarty who attested the sale deed—Ext. C—and the agreement of sale—Ext. E—could not be examined for he had died before the date of trial. Attestation by him of the two deeds has significance. Gobinda Chandra Debnath a witness examined on behalf of the plaintiffs stated that the family of the plaintiffs had confidence in Abinash Chandra Chakravarty as he was

"the friend and well-wisher of the family". There is no ground for believing that Abinash Chandra Chakravarty who was present at the time of the execution and had attested the two deeds misused the confidence reposed in him and was guilty of being a party to the bringing into existence a deed containing false recitals to defraud Sarala and her sons.

10. Legal necessity to support the sale must however be established by the alienees. Sarala owned the land in dispute as a limited owner. She was competent to dispose of the whole estate in the property for legal necessity or benefit to the estate. In adjudging whether the sale conveys the whole estate, the actual pressure on the estate, the danger to be averted, and the benefit to be conferred upon the estate in the particular insistence must be considered. Legal necessity does not mean actual compulsion: it means pressure upon the estate which in law may be regarded as serious and sufficient. The onus of proving legal necessity may be discharged by the alienee by proof of actual necessity or by proof that he made proper and bona fide enquiries about the existence of the necessity and that he did all that was reasonable to satisfy himself as to the existence of the necessity.

11. Recitals in a deed of legal necessity do not by themselves prove legal necessity. The recitals are, however, admissible in evidence, their value varying according to the circumstances in which the transaction was entered into. The recitals may be used to corroborate other evidence of the existence of legal necessity. The weight to be attached to the recitals varies according to the circumstances. Where the evidence which could be brought before the Court and is within the special knowledge of the person who seeks to set aside the sale is withheld, such evidence being normally not available to the alienee, the recitals go to his aid with greater force and the Court may be justified in appropriate cases in raising an inference against the party seeking to set aside the sale on the ground of absence of legal necessity wholly or partially, when he withholds evidence in his possession.

12. Kunja Behari husband of Sarala had died in 1937 after a pro-

fracted illness: there is no reliable evidence that he left any property except the residential house, built on a part of the land which Sarala had inherited from her father. Sarala had two sons who were then minors and two daughters who were yet to be married. There were five members in the family to be fed and clothed, and the marriage expenses of the two daughters had to be met. The case that Tulsi the eldest son obtained gainful employment shortly after his father's death and before the sale deed was executed was rightly disbelieved by the Trial Court. The story that Gobinda had taken to hawking vegetables has also been rightly disbelieved by the Trial Court. Sarala had to meet several obligations: she had to pay the annual rent accruing due in respect of the land in dispute and also to pay municipal taxes: she had to feed and clothe herself and her children and to perform the marriage of her daughter Radha. She had no other property and she had no income. The recitals in the deed about the existence of pressure upon the estate are, therefore, amply corroborated by the circumstances.

13. Mr. Purshottam Chatterjee appearing on behalf of the plaintiffs contended that there was evidence only of the debts amounting to Rupees 75/-, Rs. 25/- as rent for the land payable to the head-lessor and Rs. 50/- expenditure incurred for the marriage of the daughter Mangala. Counsel relied upon the recitals made in a plaint filed in a suit for recovery of rent by the landlord against Sarala after the sale deed in which the rent for the years 1941, 1942 and 1943 was claimed. Counsel also relied upon the evidence that in the community to which Sarala belonged, the marriage of a daughter only costs Rs. 50/-. That evidence, in our judgment, is wholly unreliable. In any event apart from the obligation to pay rent and to meet the expenses of marriage of her daughter Mangala various other obligations had to be met. The argument that Sarala belonged to a community in which the male members used to be employed as "household servants" and that Tulsi and Gobinda were so employed is also not supported by any reliable evidence. In our judgment, the High Court ignored the strong inference which arose out of these circumstances and especially out of the participation by Gobinda in the execution of the agreement of sale and the sale deed.

14. In our view the case of the defendants 1 & 2 that the sale deed was supported by legal necessity of Sarala was amply made out and the Trial Court was right in holding that the sale deed was executed for legal necessity. From the attestation by Gobinda one of the sons of the agreement of sale and the sale deed and the recitals in those deeds, viewed in the light of the other evidence, we are of the opinion that the legal necessity set up by the defendants 1 & 2 is amply proved.

15. It was urged before us that because the 10th defendant died before the certificate was given by the High Court for appeal to this Court, and the heirs of the 10th defendant were not brought on the record, the appeal abates in its entirety. There is, however, no clear evidence whether the 10th defendant died before or after the judgment of the High Court. Again, the plaintiffs had in the suit only claimed a relief for declaration that the alienation in favour of defendants 1 & 2, i.e. Chapalabala and Bani-kana made on March 13, 1942, was without legal necessity and was not binding upon them, and for a declaration of their title to the disputed land. The alienees from defendants 1 & 2 were, it is true, impleaded as parties, but no relief was claimed against them. Nor was any averment made in the plaint about the reasons for and the circumstances in which they were so impleaded. Since the plaintiffs only claimed relief against defendants 1 & 2, and that relief cannot be granted to the plaintiffs, we think, the circumstances that the heirs of the 10th defendant are not impleaded in this appeal does not affect the right of the defendants to claim that the appeal must be dismissed.

16. The appeal is therefore allowed and the suit filed by the plaintiffs is dismissed with costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

HEGDE, J.: — This appeal by certificate arises from the decision of a Division Bench of the Punjab and Haryana High Court in a writ petition wherein the appellants challenged the validity of proceedings under Sections 4, 6, 9 and 17 (2) (c) of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 as amended by the Punjab Legislature. For convenience sake we shall refer to that amended Act as 'the Act'. The High Court dismissed the writ petition.

2. It appears that several contentions were sought to be advanced before the High Court but in this Court only three contentions have been pressed for our consideration
i. e., (1) the acquisition in question being one for a company, proceedings should have been taken under Sections 38 to 44-B of the Act, the same having not been taken, the proceedings taken are void; (2) there was no urgency and hence recourse should not have been had to Section 17 of the Act and (3) Section 17 (2) (c) is inapplicable to the facts of the case.

3. Now we may state the facts relevant for the purpose of deciding the questions in dispute.

4. On 14/17th March, 1969, Government of Haryana issued a notification under Section 4 of the Act notifying for acquisition the land concerned in this case. The notification further directed that action under Section 17 (2) (c) of the Act shall be taken on the ground of urgency and the provisions of Section 5-A shall not apply in regard to the said acquisition. The preamble to the said notification says that

"whereas it appears to the Governor of Haryana that land is likely to be required to be taken by Government, at public expenses, for a public purpose, namely for the setting up a factory for the manufacture of China-ware and Porcelain-ware including wall Glazed Tiles, etc., at village Kasser, Tehsil Jhajjar, District Rohtak, it is hereby notified that the land in the locality described in the specification below is likely to be required for the above purpose".

On March 18, 1969 the Government issued a notification under Section 6 of the Act acquiring the land for a public purpose. On March 28, 1969 notices under Section 9 of the Act were served on the appellants. On April 8, 1969, the appellants filed the writ petition giving rise to this appeal.

5. The allegations in the writ petition include the assertion that there was no urgency in the matter of acquiring the land in question and therefore there was no justification for having recourse to Section 17 and thus deprive the appellants of the benefit of Section 5-A of the Act. It was further alleged therein that the acquisition in question was made for the benefit of a company and hence proceedings should have been taken under Sections 38 to 44 (B) of the Act and that there was no public purpose involved in the case. It was further pleaded that the land acquired was not waste and arable land and that Section 2 (c) of the Act did not confer power on the Government to dispense with the proceedings under Section 5-A. In the counter-affidavit filed by the Deputy Director of Industries (Administration), Government of Haryana on behalf of the State of Haryana, the above allegations were all denied. Therein it is stated that at the instance of the State of Haryana,

Government of India had issued a letter of intent to a company for setting up a factory for the manufacture of Glazed Tiles etc., in village Kasser. That project was to be started with the collaboration of a foreign company known as Pilkington Tiles Ltd. The scheme for setting up the project had been finalised and approved by the concerned authorities. On November 26, 1968, the Government wrote to one of the promoters of the project, Shri H. L. Somany asking him to complete the "arrangements for the import of capital equipment and acquisition of land in Haryana State for setting up of the proposed factory". It was further stated in that communication that the Government was pleased to extend the time for completing the project upto April 30, 1969. Under those circumstances it had become necessary for the State of Haryana to take immediate steps to acquire the required land. It was under those circumstances the Government was constrained to have recourse to Section 17 of the Act. The Government denied the allegation that the facts of this case did not come within the scope of Section 17 (2) (c). It was also denied that the acquisition in question was not made for a public purpose.

6. We have earlier seen that in the notification issued under Section 4, it had been stated that the acquisition was made "at public expenses, for a public purpose" namely for the setting up a factory for the manufacture of China-ware and Porcelain-ware including wall Glazed Tiles etc.

7. In the writ petition it was not denied that the acquisition in question was made at "public expenses". All that was challenged in the writ petition was that the purpose for which the acquisition was made was not a public purpose.

8. There is no denying the fact that starting of a new industry is in public interest. It is stated in the affidavit filed on behalf of the State Government that the new State of Haryana was lacking in industries and consequently it had become difficult to tackle the problem of unemployment. There is also no denying the fact that the industrialization of an area is in public interest. That apart, the question whether the starting of an industry is in public interest or not is essentially a question that has to be decided by the Government. That is a socio-economic question. This Court is not in a position to go into that question. So long as it is not established that the acquisition is sought to be made for some collateral purpose, the declaration of the Government that it is made for a public purpose is not open to challenge. Section 6 (3) says that the declaration of the Government that the acquisition made is for public purpose shall be conclusive evidence that the land is needed for a public purpose. Unless it is shown that there was a colourable exercise of power, it is not open to this Court to go behind that declaration and find out whether in a particular case the purpose for which the land was needed was a public purpose or not — see Smt. Somavanti v. State of Punjab, (1963) 2 SCR 774 = (AIR 1963 SC 151) and Raja Anand Brahma Shah v. State of U. P., (1967) 1 SCR 373 = (AIR 1967 SC 1081). On the facts of this case there can be hardly any doubt that the purpose for which the land was acquired is a public purpose.

9. In view of the pleadings referred to earlier it is not open to the appellant to contend that the State Government had not contributed any amount towards the cost of acquisition. We were informed at the bar that the State Government had contributed a sum of Rs. 100/- towards the cost of the land which fact is also mentioned in the award of Land Acquisition Officer. That being so it was not necessary for the Government to proceed with the acquisition under Part VII of the Act — see Somavanti's case, (1963) 2 SCR 774 = (AIR 1963 SC 151) (supra).

10. Now coming to the question of urgency, it is clear from the facts set out earlier that there was urgency. The Government of India was pleased to extend time for the completion of the project, upto April 30, 1969. Therefore, urgent steps had to be taken for pushing through the project. The fact that the State Government or the party concerned was lethargic at an earlier stage is not very relevant for deciding the question whether on the date on which the notification was issued, there was urgency or not. The conclusion of the Government in a given case that there was urgency is entitled to weight, if not conclusive.

11. This takes us to the question of applicability of Section 17 (2) (c) to the facts of the case. The appellant had denied in the affidavit that the entire land acquired is either waste or arable land. That contention of his has not been examined by the High Court. Therefore, we have to proceed on the basis that the case does not come within the scope of Section 17 (1). The State has also not purported to act under Section 17 (1). It has purported to act under Section 17 (2) (c). Therefore, we have to see whether the State could have proceeded on the facts of this case under Section 17 (2) (c). Section 17 as amended by the Punjab Act 2 of 1954, Punjab Act 17 of 1956 and Punjab Act 47 of 1956 to the extent necessary for our present purpose reads thus:

"17 (1). In cases of urgency whenever, the appropriate Government so directs, the Collector, though no such award has been made, may, on the expiration of fifteen days from the publication of the notice mentioned in Section 9, sub-section (1) take possession of any waste or arable land needed for public purposes or for a Company. Such land shall thereupon vest absolutely in the Government free from all encumbrances.

Explanation.....

(2) In the following cases, that is to say:—

(a) Whenever owing to any sudden change in the channel of any navigable river or other unforeseen emergency, it becomes necessary for any Railway Administration to acquire the immediate possession of any land for the maintenance of their traffic or for the purpose of making thereon a river-side or ghat station or of providing convenient connection with or access to any such station;

(b) Whenever in the opinion of the Collector it becomes necessary to acquire the immediate possession of any land for the purpose of any library or educational institution or for the construction, extension or improvement of any building or other structure in any village for the common use of the inhabitants of such village, or any godown for any society registered under the Co-operative Societies Act, 1912 (Act II of 1912), or any dwelling-house for the poor, or the construction of labour colonies or houses for any other class of people under a Government-sponsored Housing Scheme or any irrigation tank, irrigation or drainage channel, or any well, or any public road;

(c) Whenever land is required for a public purpose which in the opinion of the appropriate Government is of urgent importance, the Collector may, immediately after the publication of the notice mentioned in sub-section (1) and with the previous sanction of the appropriate Government enter upon and take possession of such land, which shall thereupon vest absolutely in the Government free from all encumbrances.

Provided that the Collector shall not take possession of any building or part of a building under this sub-section without giving to the occupier thereof at least forty-eight hour's notice of his intention so to do

(3) In every case under either of the preceding sub-sections the Collector shall at the time of taking possession offer to the persons interested compensation for the standing crop and trees (if any) on such land and for any other damage sustained by them caused by sudden dispossession.....

(4) In the case of any land to which in the opinion of the appropriate Government, the provisions of sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) are applicable, the appropriate Government may direct that the provisions of Section 5-A shall not apply"

12. Herein we are only concerned with the scope of Section 17 (2) (c) as the vires of Section 17 (2) is not challenged. Section 17 (2) (c) if read by itself is plain. It seems to permit the appropriate Government to direct that the provisions of Section 5-A shall not apply whenever land is required for public purpose which in the opinion of the appropriate Government is of urgent importance. The conditions precedent for the application of Section 17 (2) (c) are (1) that the land must be required for a public purpose and (2) the appropriate Government must be of the opinion that the purpose in question is of urgent importance. But it was urged on behalf of the appellants that we should apply ejusdem generis rule in interpreting Section 17 (2) (c). The contention on behalf of the appellants was that though Section 17 (2) (c) read by itself covers a very large field, that provision should be given a narrower meaning because of the provisions in Section 17 (2) (a) and (b). It was urged that as the general words contained in Section 17 (2) (c) follow the specific words of the same nature, in Section 17 (2) (a) and (b), those general words must be understood as applying to cases similar to those mentioned in Section 17 (2) (a) and (b).

13. The ejusdem generis rule is not a rule of law but is merely a rule of construction to aid the Courts to find out the true intention of the legislature. If a given provision is plain and unambiguous and the legislative intent is clear, there is no occasion to call into aid that rule. Ejusdem generis rule is explained in Halsbury Laws of England (3rd Edn.) Vol. 36 p. 397 paragraph 599 thus:

"As a rule, where in a statute there are general words following particular and specific words, the general words must be confined to things of the same kind as those specified, although this, as a rule of construction, must be applied with caution, and subject to the primary rule that statutes are to be construed in accordance with the intention of Parliament. For the ejusdem rule to apply, the specific words must constitute a category, class or genus; if they do constitute such a category, class or genus, then only things which belong to that category, class or genus fall within the general words....."

14. It is observed in Craies on Statute Law (6th Edn) p. 181 that:

"The ejusdem generis rule is one to be applied with caution and not pushed too far, as in the case of many decisions, which treat it as automatically applicable, and not as being, what it is, a mere presumption, in the absence of other indications of the intention of the legislature. The modern tendency of the law, it was said, is "to attenuate the application of the rule of ejusdem generis". To invoke the application of the ejusdem generis rule there must be a distinct genus or category. The specific words must apply not to different objects of a widely differing character but to something which can be called a class or kind of objects".

15. According to Sutherland Statutory Construction (3rd Edn) Vol. II, p. 395, for the application of the doctrine of ejusdem generis, the following conditions must exist.

(i) The statute contains an enumeration by specific words;

(ii) The members of the enumeration constitute a class;

(iii) The class is not exhausted by the enumeration;

(iv) A general term follows the enumeration and

(v) There is not clearly manifested an intent that the general term be given a broader meaning than the doctrine requires.

16. The scope of the eiusdem generis rule has been considered by this Court in several decisions. In State of Bombay v. Ali Gulshan, (1955) 2 SCR 867 = (AIR 1955 SC 310) it was observed:

"Apart from the fact that the rule must be confined within narrow limits, and general or comprehensive words should receive their full and natural meaning unless they are clearly restrictive in their intendment, it is requisite that there must be a distinct genus, which must comprise more than one species, before the rule can be applied".

In Lilavati Bai v. The State of Bombay, 1957 SCR 721 = (AIR 1957 SC 521), it was observed:

"The rule of eiusdem generis is intended to be applied where general words have been used following particular and specific words of the same nature on the established rule of construction that the legislature presumed to use the general words in a restricted sense; that is to say, as belonging to the same genus as the particular and specific words. Such a restricted meaning has to be given to words of general import only where the context of the whole scheme of legislation requires it. But where the context and the object and mischief of the enactment do not require such restricted meaning to be attached to words of general import, it becomes the duty of the Courts to give those words their plain and ordinary meaning".

17. The same view was reiterated by this Court in K. K. Kochini v. States of Madras and Kerala, AIR 1960 SC 1050.

18. Bearing in mind the principles set out earlier, we shall now consider whether the general import of the words in Section 17 (2) (c) should be cut down in view of Section 17 (2) (a) and (b). Under Clause (a) of Section 17 (2), the acquisition is to be made by the Railway Administration when owing to any sudden change in the channel of any navigable river or other unforeseen emergency it becomes necessary for the administration to acquire the immediate possession of any land for the maintenance of the traffic or for the purpose of making thereon a river-side or ghat station or for providing convenient connection with or access to any such station. We would like to emphasize that under this provision, the acquisition can only be made by the Railway Administration and that when it considers that immediate possession of any land is necessary for the purposes mentioned therein. Under Clause (b) of sub-section (2) of Section 17, before an acquisition can be made, the Collector must form an opinion that it has become necessary to acquire the immediate possession of the land concerned for the purposes mentioned therein. Under Clause (c) of Section 17 (2), the acquisition can be made only when the appropriate Government forms the opinion that because of urgent importance, the concerned land has to be acquired for the purposes mentioned in that provision. Under Clause (a) the decision to acquire has to be made by the Railway Administration. Under Clause (b), the acquisition can be made only on the formation of the required opinion by the Collector. Under Clause (c) the acquisition can be made only when the requisite opinion is formed by the appropriate Government. Further under Clause (a) the acquisition has to be made to meet certain unforeseen emergency as a result of which the immediate possession of the land is necessary. Under Clause (b) the Collector must form an opinion that it has become necessary to acquire the immediate possession of land but under Clause (c) the requirement is that the appropriate Government must form the opinion that the acquisition is of urgent importance. Under Clauses (a), (b) and (c) of sub-section (2) of Section 17, the decision to acquire land has not to be made by the same authority but by different authorities. Further the conditions under which the acquisition has to be made differ from clause to clause. Therefore, there is no basis to say that the general words in Clause (c) follow the particular and specific words in Clauses (b) and (c). Nor can it be said that the specific words contained in Clauses (a) and (b) constitute a category, class or genus. Hence, we are unable to accept the contention that in interpreting Clause (c) of Section 17 (2), we should apply the rule of ejusdem generis.

19. As none of the contentions taken by the appellants are acceptable, this appeal fails and is dismissed. But in the circumstances of the case we make no order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

P. JAGANMOHAN REDDY, J.: — These Appeals are by a Certificate under Article 132-C of the Constitution of India against the Judgment of the Calcutta High Court, which have by an order of this Court dated 25-8-1969 been consolidated for the purpose of hearing. The short question for determination in these Appeals is whether under the Provisions of the West Bengal Board of Secondary Education Act 5 of 1963 read with Rule 8 of the West Bengal Board of Secondary Education (Appointment of Secretary) Rules, the Appellant could be discharged from the service of the Board of Education. The Appellant was an office Superintendent of the Board constituted under the West Bengal Secondary Education Act 37 of 1950 (hereinafter called 'the 1950 Act'). He was promoted as Assistant Secretary on 12-7-1952, as Deputy Secretary on 18-6-56 and on the 1st/8th August 1962 he was appointed as Secretary on probation and confirmed on 1-8-63 by an order dated the 24th August '63. The Appellant continued in this office till 25th November '66 when his services were dispensed with, with immediate effect on payment of 3 months salary in lieu of notice. In his place the Government by its order of the same date appointed temporarily Respondent 6-D. Mazumdar, Director of Consumer Goods, West Bengal as Secretary for a period not exceeding 6 months from the date on which he takes charge of the office. As we have earlier mentioned the initial Act under which his appointment was made was the Act of 1950. Subsequently another Act known as the West Bengal Secondary Education

(Temporary Provision) Act, 22 of 1954 was passed by the Legislature, by which the Board created by the Act of 1950 was superseded and its powers were vested in an Administrator appointed by the State Government. It was the Administrator who had appointed the Petitioner on probation. On the 20th February '63 the West Bengal Board of Secondary Education Act 5 of 1963 (hereinafter called 'the 1963 Act') was passed which came into force on 1-1-1964. Before this Act came into force certain regulations were made on 12-12-63 under the Act of 1950, Rule 4 of which dealt with the conditions of service which were similar to those in Rule 4 of 1951 regulations made on 19-9-51. Under regulation 4 of 1951 the Board had power to dispense with the services of the Secretary or any officer by giving 3 months notice or on payment to him of 3 months salary in lieu of notice. Act 22 of 1954 it may be mentioned did not abolish the Board but only authorised the Administrator to carry on the duties and functions vested in the Board so that the Appellant when he was appointed on probation by the Administrator was an employee of the Board. The 1963 Act by Clause 1 of Section 46 repealed both the 1950 Act as well as the temporary provisions Act 22 of 1954 and by sub-clause (2) it provided that "all Officers and other persons in the employment of the Board of Secondary Education immediately before the commencement of this Act shall until provision is made continue in the service of the Board". It may here be mentioned that prior to the enforcement of the Act on 1-1-64 the Government had made and published rules under that Act known as the West Bengal Secondary Education (Appointment of Secretary) Rules 1963 Rule 8 whereof is in the following terms:

"The State Government shall have the power to dispense with the services of the Secretary on three months' notice or in lieu of such notice on payment of three months' salary and also to discharge or dismiss the Secretary from service without notice or compensation in the event of misconduct or of a breach of any of the duties attached to the post of Secretary".

2. It is in exercise of powers vested under this Rule that the Governor dispensed with the services of the Appellant which is now challenged. The learned Advocate for the Appellant contends inter alia that:—

(i) the rule under which the Appellant's services have been dispensed with have no application to the case of a person who continues in service under Section 46 (2) (c) of the 1963 Act,

(ii) being an employee of the Board, his services could only be terminated by the Board and not by the State Government,

(iii) Section 46 (2) (c) envisages that till some other employment is found for all those persons who were in employment of the Board of Secondary Education before the commencement of the 1963 Act, they cannot be discharged.

3. For an appreciation of these contentions it is necessary to examine the relevant provisions of the 1963 Act.

4. Under Section 2 (a) the Board means the West Bengal Board of Secondary Education established under the 1963 Act. Section 3 empowers the State Government as soon as may be after the Act comes into force to establish the Board named the West Bengal Secondary Education Board. The Board shall be a body corporate with perpetual succession and a common seal. Section 4 deals with the composition of the Board which it may be stated is totally different to that which comprised the Board, under the 1950 Act. The appointment of persons in the service of the Board and their condition of service etc., are the subject matter of Section 16, the relevant provisions of which are as follows:—

(1) The Board shall have a Secretary who shall be appointed by the State Government.

(2) The Board may appoint such other officers and servants as it considers necessary for carrying out the purposes of this Act.

(3) The terms and conditions of appointment and the scales of pay and allowances, if any shall—

(a) as respect the Secretary be such as may be prescribed, and

5. Sub-section (1) of Section 45 empowers the State Government after previous publication, to make rules for carrying out the purposes of this Act and sub-section (2) (f) provides that:

"In particular, and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such rules may provide for all or any of the following matters, namely—

(f) the terms and conditions of appointment; the scale of pay and the rules of discipline relating to the Secretary of the Board.

It is under the last mentioned provision, 45 (2) (f), that the rules were made, Rule 8 of which we have already extracted. It will thus be seen that the 1963 Act constituted an entirely new Board of Secondary Education and after repealing the old Acts it continued the services of the Officers and other persons in the employment of the Board of Education under the old Act until other provision is made. It may be stated that the power of appointment of a Secretary for the Board under Section 16 is not vested in the Board but in the Government as such there can be no validity in the contention of the learned Advocate for the Appellant that the Government has no power to appoint a Secretary in place of the Appellant who according to him still continues as Secretary under the Board. As we read the provisions, we are clear in our minds and it admits of no doubt that the Board has no power to appoint a Secretary, nor has the Appellant a right to the post as such. All that the Act provides is for the continuance of the Employees of the previous Board till other arrangements are made, namely till a Secretary is appointed by the Government. In our view the appointment of the new Secretary can be traceable to the powers vested in the Government under Section 16 irrespective of the power vested under the rules. The argument that Appellant being an employee of the Board his services could only be terminated by the Board and not by the State Government has no validity in that the old rules have been repealed and the new Board has no power to appoint a Secretary. It has been urged before us that a decision of this Court in State of Assam v. Kripanath Sarma, (1967) 1 SCR 499 = (AIR 1967 SC 459), lends support to the contention of the learned Advocate. That case was under the Assam Elementary Education Act, 1962

the relevant provisions of which are not in pari materia with the provisions of the Act which we are called upon to consider. The Respondents in that case were Elementary Education School Teachers appointed under the Assam Basic Education Act, 1954. That Act was repealed by the Assam Elementary Education Act, 1962 under which the Board was to be constituted and in the place of the School Boards functioning under the 1954 Act, the Deputy Inspectors of Schools were made Assistant Secretary of the said Board within their respective jurisdiction. Section 34 (2) provided that all the Elementary School Teachers appointed under the 1954 Act would be taken over by the State Board and who under Section 38 were further deemed to have been employed by the said Board. The statute therefore provided that they were the employees of the Board. Section 46 (2) (c) however merely continues them and does not deem them to be employees of the Board. What happened in that case was that the Board merely passed a resolution "that all teachers who are not Matriculates or who have not passed the Teachers test but who are working as Teachers in School shall be discharged with effect from 31-3-63". The Assistant Secretary without obtaining specific sanction from the Board issued orders for their discharge which he had no power to do. In those circumstances the power to terminate the services being in the Board, it was held that the order of termination by the Assistant Secretary was invalid. This case does not help the Appellant. Lastly the learned Advocate sought to press in aid a Judgment of a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Bidyut Kr. Biswas v. West Bengal Board of Secondary Education, (1969) 73 Cal WN 417, in which the provisions of Section 46 (2) (c) of the 1963 Act were dealt with in support of his contention that the persons in the employment of Board of Secondary Education under the 1950 Act could only be discharged if an alternative employment is found for them inasmuch as the words 'until other provision is made' justifies that conclusion. This point has not been raised in the Writ Petition nor has it been urged either before the Single Bench or before the Division Bench of the High Court and is sought to be raised for the first time before this Court. We cannot permit him to do so, and therefore express no views on this aspect of the case. In the result the Appeals are dismissed but in the circumstances without costs.

Appeals dismissed.

K. S. HEGDE AND
P. JAGANMOHAN REDDY, JJ.

Krishna Beharilal (dead) by his legal representatives (in both the appeals), Appellants v. Gulabchand and others (in both the appeals). Respondents.

Civil Appeals Nos. 74 and 75 of 1967, D/- 16-3-1971.

(A) Deed — Construction — Ordinary rule of construction of a document is to give effect to the normal and natural meaning of the words employed in the document — AIR 1952 SC 145 and AIR 1933 PC 67, Rel. on. (Para 4)

The words "malik mustakil" are strong, clear and unambiguous. Where a compromise deed specifically says that the properties given to the widow were to be enjoyed by her as "Malik Mustakil" and these words are not qualified by other words and circumstances appearing in the document, the Courts must hold that the estate given is an absolute one. (Para 4)

(B) Evidence Act (1872), Sec. 115 — If a person having full knowledge of his rights as a possible reversioner enters into a compromise which settles his claim as well as the claim of the opponent at the relevant time, he cannot be permitted to go back on that arrangement when reversion actually opens — (X Ref. Hindu Law — Family arrangement — Estoppel) — AIR 1961 SC 797, Followed; L. P. A. Nos. 3 and 4 of 1964, D/- 3-5-1966 (Madh Pra), Reversed. (Para 6)

Thus where under a compromise the presumptive reversioners purported to give a portion of the suit properties absolutely to the widow in consideration of her giving up her claim in respect of the other properties they would be estopped from contending that they are entitled to succeed to the properties given to the widow.

(Para 6)

A Hindu widow cannot enlarge her estate by entering into a compromise with third parties to the prejudice of the ultimate reversioners. But the same will not be true if the compromise is entered into with persons who ultimately become the reversioners. (Para 6)

(C) Constitution of India, Article 136 — Where the issue raised in the suit is broad enough to cover the plea of estoppel and that plea has been argued and considered by the lower Courts without any objection from the plaintiffs, they cannot be permitted in an appeal by special leave, to contend that the defendant had not taken any specific plea of estoppel. (Para 7)

(D) Hindu Law — Family arrangement — To consider a settlement as a family arrangement, it is not necessary that the parties to the compromise should all belong to one family — AIR 1966 SC 323, Followed.

The word "family" in the context of a family arrangement is not to be understood in a narrow sense of being a group of persons who are recognised in law as having a right of succession or having a claim to a share in the property in dispute. If the dispute which is settled is one between near relations then the settlement of such a dispute can be considered as a family arrangement. AIR 1966 SC 323, Followed. (Para 8)

fact and law arise for decision. It would be convenient to set out the material facts before formulating the questions arising for decision. In the State of Gwalior there was a firm known as Chhedilal Chaturbhuj. Chhedilal, the owner of the firm had two sons and one daughter. The genealogy of the family of Chhedilal is as follows:

2. After the death of Chhedilal, it appears the firm in question came into the possession of some of the children of Parvati. In 1926, Bulakichand, grandson of Chhedilal filed a suit against Jwalaprasad (his first cousin). Karnimal, Raggamal and Pannalal seeking possession of the firm. Therein he appears to have alleged that Jwalaprasad who had a half share in the suit properties had been colluding with the other defendants. Bulakichand died during the pendency of the suit. Thereafter his widow Pattobai was impleaded as his legal representative. During the pendency of the suit Jwalaprasad, Karnimal, Raggamal and Pannalal also died. Neither Jwalaprasad nor Karnimal left any successors. Raggamal was succeeded by his son Ganeshilal and Pannalal by his son Lakshmichand. They were duly impleaded in the suit. On June 7, 1941, the parties to the suit compromised their disputes.

It may be noted that to that compromise the minor sons of Lakshmichand as well as of Ganeshilal were also parties. Before compromising the suit the parties had obtained the leave of the court as the minor defendants had joined the compromise. Under the compromise, a portion of the suit properties was given to Pattobai and the remaining portion to the defendants in that suit. Pattobai alienated the properties given to her under three different sale deeds i. e. one on July 15, 1941 and the other two on July 24, 1941. The first sale deed was for a sum of Rs. 1,000/- and the other two for Rs. 9,000/- and Rs. 20,500/- respectively. The appellant is the alienee under all these sale deeds. In 1953, Lakshmichand and his sons and Ganeshilal and his sons instituted three suits seeking declarations that the alienations referred to above are not valid and binding against them, the presumptive reversioners to the estate of Bulakichand. One of those suits is still pending trial. These appeals arise from the other two suits. During the pendency of those suits Pattobai died. Thereafter the suits were contested only by the appellant, the alienee (he will be hereinafter referred to as the defendant). The trial court dismissed the two suits holding that in view of the compromise in the earlier suit, the parties are estopped from challenging the validity of the sale deeds as under that compromise the estate given to Pattobai is an absolute one. In appeal the first appellate Court confirmed the judgment of the trial Court on the ground that as the plaintiffs had not amended the plaint seeking possession of the suit properties after the death of Pattobai, the suits were not maintainable. On further appeals being taken by the plaintiffs, the High Court set aside the first appellate Court's judgment. It came to the conclusion that the first appellate Court should have taken into consideration the change in the circumstances that had taken place pending the trial of the suits and moulded the relief according to law. It, accordingly remanded the cases to the first appellate Court for disposal of the same on merits. After remand the first appellate Court again affirmed the decision of the trial Court on two grounds viz. (1) that the plaintiffs were estopped from claiming any right in the suit properties as an absolute estate had been given to Pattobai in respect of those properties and (2) that under any circumstance the compromise in question should be considered as a family arrangement and as such is not liable to be reopened. This decision was affirmed by a single Judge of the High Court in second appeal. Thereafter the plaintiffs took up the matter in appeal to the Letters Patent Bench. The Letters Patent Bench reversed the judgment of the Courts below. It held that the compromise entered into in 1941 was an illegal compromise and as such the same cannot be used to non-suit the plaintiffs. It also disagreed with the conclusion of the learned single Judge that the compromise recorded amounted to a family settlement. These appeals are directed against that judgment.

3. The first question that falls for consideration is whether on a true construction of the compromise decree it can be held that Pattobai had been given an absolute estate? According to the plaintiffs Pattobai having been impleaded to the suit as a legal representative of her husband, in law she could not take an absolute estate; she could only have a widow's estate and therefore in construing the compromise decree, we must bear in mind the principles of Hindu Law and if we do so, the only possible conclusion is that the intention of the parties was only to give her a life estate. On the other hand it is contended on behalf of the defendant that under law Pattobai was entitled to enjoy all the properties included in the plaint in the earlier suit during her lifetime but she agreed to give up her right in bulk of the properties in consideration of her getting an absolute estate in a small portion of the properties involved in that suit. It was further urged on his behalf that the compromise deed specifically says that the properties given to Pattobai are to be enjoyed by her as "Malik Mustikal" which means absolutely and hence there is no basis for the contention that she took a widow's estate.

4. The ordinary rule of construction of a document is to give effect to the normal and natural meaning of the words employed in the document. The compromise deed specifically says that the properties given to Pattobai were to be enjoyed by her as "Malik Mustakil". The meaning of the expression "Malik Mustakil" an urdu word, has come up for consideration before this Court in some cases. In Dhyan Singh v. Jugal Kishore, 1952 SCR 478 = (AIR 1952 SC 145) this Court ruled that the words "Malik Mustikal" were strong, clear and unambiguous and if those words are not qualified by other words and circumstances appearing in the same document, the Courts must hold that the estate given is an absolute one. A similar view was taken by the Judicial Committee in Bishunath Prasad Singh v. Chandika Prasad Kumari, 60 Ind App 56 = (AIR 1933 PC 67). The circumstances under which the compromise was entered into as well as the language used in the deed do not in any manner go to indicate that the estate given to Pattobai was anything other than an absolute estate.

5. The Letters Patent Bench of the High Court held that the compromise entered into was an illegal compromise. It came to that conclusion on the basis that a Hindu widow cannot enlarge her own rights by entering into a compromise in a suit. But the High Court overlooked the fact that this was not a compromise entered into with third parties. It was a compromise entered into with the presumptive reversioners. Further at no stage the plaintiffs had pleaded that the compromise entered into in 1941 was an illegal compromise. The plaintiffs took no such plea in the plaint. There was no issue relating to the validity of the compromise. Hence the High Court was not justified in going into the validity of the compromise. Further even if the compromise was an invalid one, the parties to the compromise are estopped from challenging the impugned alienations: see Dhyani Singh's case, 1952 SCR 478 = (AIR 1952 SC 145) (supra).

6. This takes us to the question of estoppel. As seen earlier, the trial Court, the first appellate Court as well as the learned single Judge of the High Court have concurrently come to the conclusion that the plaintiffs are estopped from challenging the impugned alienations. But the Letters Patent Bench took a different view. Its conclusion, as mentioned earlier, proceeded on the basis that a Hindu widow cannot enlarge her own estate by entering into a compromise with others. It is well settled that a Hindu widow cannot enlarge her estate by entering into a compromise with third parties to the prejudice of the ultimate reversioners. But the same will not be true if the compromise is entered into with persons who ultimately become the reversioners. It was urged on behalf of the respondents that Pattobai was impleaded in the earlier suit only as a legal representative of her deceased husband; therefore, she could only represent his estate and not carve out an estate for herself. But this argument overlooks the fact that according to Pattobai she was entitled to enjoy the entire properties included in the earlier suit during her lifetime; but under the compromise a fraction of those properties were given to her absolutely; that being so the plaintiffs are estopped from backing out of that compromise. It was urged on behalf of the plaintiffs that the representation made by the defendants in the earlier suit is at best a representation as regards the true legal position and such a representation cannot estop them; before there can be an estoppel, the representation must be about some fact, the opposite side must rely on that representation and must suffer some detriment by acting on the basis of that representation. It was urged on their behalf that in this case the only representation that the plaintiffs are said to have made is that pattobai had an absolute estate in a portion of the suit properties; this cannot be said to be a representation of a fact and therefore the same cannot form any basis for invoking the rule of estoppel. We are unable to accept this contention. From the facts set out earlier, it is clear that Bulakichand claimed the entire estate for himself after the death of Jwalaprasad. If the contention of Bulakichand is correct, as we must assume for the purpose of this case, then Pattobai would have been entitled to enjoy the entire properties during her lifetime. But she gave up her right in a substantial portion of those properties on the representation by the defendants that she can take a portion of the suit properties absolutely. This is a representation of a fact and not of law. The representation is that the defendants were willing to confer on Pattobai an absolute right in a portion of the suit properties if she gave up her right in the remaining properties. Pattobai relied on that representation and gave up her claim in respect of a substantial portion of the properties included in the earlier suit. Hence the plaintiffs particularly Lakshmichand and Ganeshilal who alone were the reversioners to the estate of Bulakichand on the date of the death of Pattobai, are estopped from contending that they are entitled to succeed to the properties given to Pattobai. The other plaintiffs have no independent right of their own in the properties with which we are concerned. In Dhyani Singh's case, 1952 SCR 478 = (AIR 1952 SC 145) (supra) this Court ruled that even if an award made is invalid, the persons who were parties to that award are estopped from challenging the validity of the award or from going behind the award in a subsequent litigation. In T. V. R. Subbu Chetty's Family Charities v. M. Raghava Mudaliar, (1961) 3 SCR 624 = (AIR 1961 SC 797), this Court ruled that if a person having full knowledge of his rights as a possible reversioner enters into a transaction which settles his claim as well as the claim of the opponent at the relevant time, he cannot be permitted to go back on that arrangement when reversion actually opens. At the time of the compromise Lakshmichand and Ganeshilal were the nearest presumptive reversioners. They must be deemed to have known their rights under law. Under the compromise they purported to give a portion of the suit properties absolutely to Pattobai, evidently in consideration of her giving up her claim in respect of the other properties. They cannot be now permitted to resile from the compromise and claim a right inconsistent with the one embodied in the compromise. They cannot advance their case by impleading their sons as co-plaintiffs. Their sons can only claim through them.

7. For the first time in this Court it was urged that the plea of estoppel was not available to the defendant as no such plea had been taken in the pleadings. It is true that no specific plea of estoppel had been taken in the written statement filed by the defendant. But he had definitely stated in paragraph 14 of his written statement that the plaintiffs are bound by the compromise and have no right to deny the right of Pattobai over the whole of the properties sold to him. One of the issues raised in the suit (Issue No. 4) is:

"Are the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 bound by the terms of compromise filed in Civil Original Suit No. 3 of S. Y. 1991 of the High Court? If so, what is its effect?"

This issue is broad enough to cover the plea of estoppel. The plea of estoppel had been urged and considered by all the Courts without any objection from the plaintiffs. They cannot be now permitted to contend that the defendant had not taken any specific plea of estoppel.

8. The next question that we have to consider is whether the compromise in question can be considered as a settlement of family disputes. It may be noted that Lakshmichand and Ganeshilal who along with Pattobai were the principal parties to the compromise were the grand-children of Parvati who was the aunt of Bulakichand. The parties to the earlier suit were near relations. The dispute between the parties was in respect of a certain property which was originally owned by their common ancestor namely Chhedilal. To consider a settlement as a family arrangement, it is not necessary that the parties to the compromise should all belong to one family. As observed by this Court in Ram Charan Das v. Girija Nandini Devi, (1965) 3 SCR 841 at pp. 850 and 851 = (AIR 1966 SC 323 at pp. 328 and 329) the word "family" in the context of the family arrangement is not to be understood in a narrow sense of being a group of persons who are recognised in law as having a right of succession or having a claim to a share in the property in dispute. If the dispute which is settled is one between near relations then the settlement of such a dispute can be considered as a family arrangement — see Ramcharan Das's case, 1965-3 SCR 841 = (AIR 1966 SC 323) (supra).

9. The Courts lean strongly in favour of the family arrangements to bring about harmony in a family and do justice to its various members and avoid in anticipation future disputes which might ruin them all — see Sahu Madho Das v. Pandit Mukand Ram and anr.

10. For the reasons mentioned above we are of the opinion that in view of the compromise entered into between the parties in 1941, the suits from which these appeals arise are not maintainable. In that view, it is not necessary to go into the question whether the alienations were effected for valid necessity, a question that has not been gone into finally.

11. In the result these appeals are allowed and the suits from which these appeals arise dismissed with costs throughout.

Appeals allowed.

Mines and Minerals (Regulation and Development) Act (1957), S. 30 — Central Government in exercise of its suo motu power cancelling mining lease granted to appellant by State Government — Appellant not informed at any stage that Central Government proposed to exercise its suo moto power and was not asked to show cause against exercise of such power— Failure of Central Government to do so held had vitiated the order — (C. Mr. M. C. Chagla, Senior Advocate (Miss Kailash Mehta and A. K. Nag, Advocates with him), for Appellants; Mr. Jagadish Swarup Solicitor-General of India, (Mr. R. C. Prasad Advocate with him), (for Nos. 1, 3 and 4) and Mr. V. A. Seyid Muhammad, Senior Advocate, (Mr. S. P. Nayar, Advocate with him), (for No. 2), for Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

HEGDE, J.:— On June 24, 1959, the Deputy Commissioner Santal Parganas caused a notice dated June 20, 1959 published in the Bihar Gazette in accordance with the provisions of Rule 67 of the Mineral Concession Rules, 1949, of the availability for regrant of mining rights in respect of fireclay over the whole of village Palasthali No. 39, situate in Thana Hala, Block Kasta, Sub-Division Jamtara in the District of Santal Parganas. He announced in that notice that the said area will be available for regrant with effect from August 1, 1959 and invited applications for grant of mining lease in respect of that area in accordance with the provisions of Mineral Concession Rules, 1949. The appellant, a partnership firm applied for that lease on June 24, 1959 itself. Thereafter other persons including the 5th respondent Nankhu Singh also applied for obtaining the lease in question. The State Government of Bihar granted the lease to the appellant on March 31, 1962. In pursuance of that grant a written agreement was entered into between the State Government and the appellant and the same was duly registered. The State Government rejected the applications of the other applicants. Even during the pendency of the applications before the State Government the 5th respondent moved the Central Government under rule 54 of the Mineral Concession Rules, 1960 which had replaced the 1949 Rules. Therein he prayed that the grant of the lease in favour of the appellant, if it had been made, should be cancelled and that he should be granted the mineral lease in question. The Central Government served a copy of that petition on the appellant and called for its comments. At the same time it called for the comments of the State Government as well. After receiving the comments of the State Government, the same were passed on to the appellant as well as to the 5th respondent and their further comments were called for. After examining the representation made by the parties and the comments offered by the State Government, the Central Government dismissed the petition made by the 5th respondent on September 30, 1964. The Order of the Central Government reads thus:

"Government of India

Ministry of Steel & Mines,

(Department of Mines and Metals),
No. MV-1 (569)/61 New Delhi, the 30th Sept., 1964

From

Shri A. Nabar,
Under Secretary to the Government of India.

To

Shri Nankhu Singh,
P. O. Churulia, Distt. Burdwan
(West Bengal)

Subject: Application under rule 54 of the Mineral Concession Rules, 1960 in respect of Mining lease for fire-clay over 248 acres in Mouza Palasthali, P. S. Nala, Distt. Santal Parganas.

Sir,

I am directed to refer to your application dated 17-10-1961 on the above subject and to say that after careful consideration the Central Government hereby reject your revision application as being time-barred.

Yours faithfully,
Sd/- A. Nabar,

Under Secretary to the Government of India."

2. Thereafter the Central Government passed a further order on November 5, 1964 and that order reads thus:

"Registered A/D
Government of India
Ministry of Steel and Mines
(Department of Mines and Metals)
No. MV-1 (569)/61 New Delhi, the 5th November, 1964.

From

Shri H. S. Sahni,
Under Secretary to the Government of India.

To

The Secretary to the Government of Bihar, Department of Mines and Geology, Patna.

Subject: Revision application under rule 54 of the Mineral Concession Rules, 1960 from Shri Nankoo Singh relating to Mining lease for Fire-clay over 248 acres in Santal Par-gana District.

Sir,

In continuation of this Ministry's letter of even number dated 30-9-1964 on the above subject, I am directed to say that since no entry in the standard register was made as required under former rule 67 of the Mineral Concession Rules, 1949, the area could not have been held to be available and the four applications (referred to in para 2 of the State Government's letter no.
3181/M, dated 9-6-1962) would be deemed to be premature and should have been rejected on that ground alone.

Even assuming that the notification was valid, the first two applications were premature under rule 68 and on that ground should have been rejected. Apart from this the application of M/s. D. N. Roy and S. K.
Bannerjee was deemed to be rejected on the expiry of 9 months from the date of receipt of application i.e. 24-3-1960. The party did not come up in revision. The application, therefore, ceased to exist and the order of the State Government granting the lease to this party on 31-3-1962 was without jurisdiction. The grant and consequent execution of the Mining lease are therefore, void.

In view of the position explained above the Central Government in exercise of their revisionary power conferred by Rule 55 of Mineral Concession Rules, 1960 and all other powers enabling in this behalf hereby set aside the order of the State Government contained in their letter No.

A/MM/4031/62-1789M, dated 31-3-1962 (mentioned in State Government's letter No. A/MM/4031/62-3181/M, dated 9-6-1962) granting Mining lease to M/s.
D. N. Roy and S. K. Bannerjee and further direct them to throw open the area again under Rule 58 (1) of Mineral Concession Rules 1960 for re-grant. The notification should clearly indicate the date from which the area could be available for re-grant and the date by which the petitioners should submit their applications for mineral concession.

4. M/s. D. N. Roy and S. K.
Banerjee are being informed.

Yours faithfully,
Sd/- H. S. Sahni

Under Secretary to the Government of India.

Copy forwarded to M/s. D. N. Roy and S. K. Banerjee village and P. O.
Churulia, Distt. Burdwan (West Bengal) with reference to their letter dated 12-6-1963.

Sd/- H. S. Sahni

Under Secretary to the Government of India".

3. Aggrieved by this order the appellant moved the Patna High Court
under Article 226 of the Constitution to quash the order of the Central Government dated November 5, 1964 (which will hereinafter be referred to as the 'impugned order'). The High Court dismissed its petition. As against the order of the High Court the appellant has brought this appeal after obtaining certificate of fitness from the High Court.

4. It was urged before the High Court that the Government having passed the final order on September 30, 1964, it had no power to review its own order and make any further order. Admittedly there is no provision under the Mines and Minerals (Regulation and Development) Act, 1957 or under the Mineral Concession Rules, 1960 empowering the Central Government to review its order. The High Court did not hold that the Central Government had any power to review its own order either under the Mines and Minerals (Regulation and Development) Act, 1957 or under the Mineral Concession Rules.
It upheld the Central Government's order on two grounds namely that the order dated September 30, 1964 is not a complete order as it did not dispose of the application made by the 5th respondent completely and secondly the Central Government had suo motu power to review the order of the State Government under Section 30 of the Mines and Minerals (Regulation and Development) Act, 1957. These conclusions of the High Court were assailed before us.

5. In his application under Rule 54 of the Mineral Concession Rules, 1960, the 5th respondent prayed for (i) setting aside the grant made in favour of the appellant and (ii) grant the area in question on lease to him. The High Court thought that these are two independent prayers. In its view the Central Government by its order dated September 30, 1964 had disposed of only the prayer of the 5th respondent to grant the area on lease to him but it had not disposed of his first prayer namely to cancel the grant in favour of the appellant. In our opinion this is an incorrect approach. The two reliefs asked for by the 5th respondent were interconnected reliefs. In the context in which they were made, they cannot be considered as independent prayers. No grant in his favour could have been made without first setting aside the grant made in favour of the appellant. Therefore the first relief asked for by the 5th respondent is a necessary condition precedent for a grant in his favour. Further by its order dated September 30, 1964, the Central Government dismissed the entire application of the 5th respondent on the ground that the same was time-barred. If his application in respect of one part of his prayer was time-barred, it was equally time-barred in respect of the other part.

6. The impugned order of the Central Government does not show that it was made in the exercise of its suo motu power. It is purported to have been made on the basis of the application made by the 5th respondent under Rule 54 of the Mineral Concession Rules, 1960. In paragraph 3 of that order it says "in view of the position explained above the Central Government in exercise of their revisionary power conferred by Rule 55 of Mineral Concession Rules, 1960 and all other powers enabling in this behalf hereby set aside the order of the State Government contained in their letter No. A/MM/4031/62-1789M dated 31-3-1962".

7. It is true that the order in question also refers to "all other powers enabling in this behalf". But in its return to the writ petition the Central Government did not plead that the impugned order was passed in exercise of its suo motu powers. We agree that if the exercise of a power can be traced to an existing power even though that power was not purported to have been exercised, under certain circumstances, the exercise of the power can be upheld on the strength of an undisclosed but undoubted power. But in this case the difficulty is that at no stage the Central Government intimated to the appellant that it was exercising its suo motu power. At all stages it purported to act under Rules 54 and 55 of the Mineral Concession Rules, 1960. If the Central Government wanted to exercise its suo motu power it should have intimated that fact as well as the grounds on which it proposed to exercise that power to the appellant and given him an opportunity to show cause against the exercise of suo motu power as well as against the grounds on which it wanted to exercise its power. Quite clearly the Central Government had not given him that opportunity. The High Court thought that as the Central Government had not only intimated to the appellant the grounds mentioned in the application made by the 5th respondent but also the comments of the State Government, the appellant had adequate opportunity to put forward his case. This conclusion in our judgment is untenable. At no stage the appellant was informed that the Central Government proposed to exercise its suo motu power and asked him to show cause against the exercise of such a power. Failure of the Central Government to do so, in our opinion, vitiates the impugned order.

8. For the reasons mentioned above we allow this appeal as well as the writ petition and set aside the impugned order. Central Government shall pay the costs of the appellant in this Court as well as in the High Court.

Ordered accordingly.

Mr. S. V. Gupte, Sr. Advocate, (Mr. D. N. Mukherjee, Advocate with him), for Appellants; Mr. P. K. Chatterjee, Advocate, for Respondent No. 1.

Following Judgment of the Court was delivered by GROVER, J.: — This is an appeal by special leave from a judgment of the Calcutta High Court. It arises out of a suit for declaration of title to property which was a tank known as Gangasagar in plot No. 4302 and for recovery of its possession together with mesne profits.

2. Kshirode Charan Duley and his brothers who were represented in the suit by defendants 4 to 6 were the original tenants of the property. The plaintiff claimed that he had purchased the right, title and interest of the original tenants, namely, the Duleys by a kubala for a consideration of Rs. 1800/- in the year 1955. It appears that the owner of the property served a notice on the successors of Duleys to quit the same and it was alleged that they had surrendered possession to B. Sen defendant No. 3 who was trustee of Bipinbehari Sen Memorial Trust in April 1953. Thereafter B. Sen defendant No. 3 granted a settlement to the present appellant who was impleaded as defendant No. 1 in the suit. This happened in the year 1953. Certain criminal proceedings took place between the parties under Section 145 wherein it was held that defendant No. 1 was in actual possession of the property. This led to the filing of the suit by the plaintiff who claimed his right through Duleys who were the original tenants. The main defence of defendant No. 1 and defendant No. 2 his son was that the predecessors of the plaintiff had merely the jalkar right which had been validly terminated by a notice to quit with effect from the end of Chaitra 1359 B. S. The trial Court dismissed the suit and an appeal to the Subordinate Judge also failed. The High Court in second appeal decreed the suit.

3. The points which were agitated before the first appellate Court were: (1) what was the nature and purpose of the lease of the predecessors of the plaintiff. Had they merely jalkar right or right of tenancy in the suit property? (2) Did the plaintiff acquire any right title or interest by virtue of his purchase from the pro forma defendants? The first appellate Court held that the grant was merely of tank, fisheries and not that of raiyati with a right of occupancy. The question of relinquishment of possession by the Duleys after the expiry of the lease was also considered but the finding given was that it was defendant No. 3, namely, B. Sen who was in actual possession and not the plaintiff, of the property in dispute. It is difficult to find in the judgment of the first appellate Court any clear decision on the second point relating to the acquisition by the plaintiff of any right, title and interest by virtue of purchase of rights from Duleys. The High Court considered the evidence in detail and came to the conclusion that the tenancy which subsisted between B. Sen defendant No. 3 and the Duleys was governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, hereinafter called the "Act". It became a permanent one after 12 years from the year 1322 B. S. It was, therefore, held that the plaintiff-vendor was in possession of the disputed property as a raiyat with a right of occupancy. If that was so the tenancy could not have been terminated by means of the notice Ext. 3. The view of the Courts below that the plaintiff did not get any right, title or interest by virtue of Ext. 1 because of the termination of the tenancy by the notice Ext. 3 was found to be erroneous.

4. The learned counsel for the appellants has sought firstly, to assail the conclusion of the High Court with regard to the nature of the tenancy which subsisted between B. Sen and Duleys. It has been urged that under Section 100, Civil Procedure Code, it was not open to the High Court to interfere with questions of fact. The High Court has pointed out that certain material evidence in the shape of documents was not considered by the first appellate Court and a good deal of assumptions of fact were made. Apart from that on proved and admitted facts it was open to the High Court to find what the nature of the tenancy was.

5. It is clear from the judgment of the High Court that no attempt was made to argue that the relationship between the predecessors of the plaintiff and the landlord was governed by the provisions of any enactment which dealt with non-agricultural tenancies. Once the tenancy was governed by the Act and it became permanent under its provisions the only manner in which it could come to an end was the one provided by the Act. It has not been shown to us that the notice Ext. P. 3 which was served on the predecessors of the plaintiff was sufficient in law and complied with the provisions of the Act to bring to an end the permanent tenancy. The only argument that has been pressed on behalf of the appellants on this point is that after the notice had been served on the predecessors of the plaintiff they had surrendered their tenancy rights. This could be done under Section 86 of the Act. The provisions of Section 86 were never pressed before the High Court. They require examination of and investigation into several other matters which it is not possible to go into at this stage. Even the question of surrender was never sought to be put into issue in the trial Court.

6. We find no merit in this appeal which is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Mr. A. S. R. Chari, Sr. Advocate,
(Mr. J. P. Goyal, Advocate and M/s.
Kshatriya and Chatterjee, Advocates, with him), for Appellant; Mr. O. P.
Rana, Advocate, for Respondent.

DUA, J.: — In this appeal by special leave the appellant Matru alias Girish Chandra challenges his conviction under Section 302 read with Section 34, I. P. C., and under Section 382, I. P. C. For the former offence he was sentenced to imprisonment for life and for the latter to rigorous imprisonment for four years. Both the sentences were directed to run concurrently.

2. The appellant, along with Mohar Singh and Saheb Singh were committed to the Court of Sessions for trial for offences under Sections 302/34, I. P. C. for the murder of Smt. Omwati, wife of Ram Chander (F. W. 1) and of their three year old son Sua Lal and under Section 382, I. P. C. for committing theft of cash, ornaments and other things from the house of the deceased. The offences were alleged to have been committed on May 29, 1964 between 10 and 11 a. m. in the township of Shamsabad.

3. The appellant and the deceased were admittedly next door neighbours in Mohalla Chaukhanda at the relevant time. Ram Chandra had two sons, the elder one Ramji being six years old. On the day of occurrence at about 9 a. m., Ram Chandra left his house for his shop about three furlongs away, leaving behind in the house his wife and two sons. About an hour later Omwati sent the elder son to the shop with some food for his father. A few minutes later Ram Chandra sent to his house some vegetables through his servant. After sometime his servant returned to the shop and informed Ram Chandra that his wife was lying in the house in pool of blood. After calling his nephew to look after the shop Ram Chandra immediately went to his house and found his wife lying dead in the courtyard near the well whereas his 3 year old son Sua Lal was lying dead in a room close to the courtyard. The box inside the room also appeared to have been opened and its contents pilfered. Some gold and silver ornaments which his deceased wife was wearing that morning were found missing. Information of the occurrence was lodged at the police station Shamsabad at about 12.40 in the afternoon. But as he did not suspect anyone he merely stated the circumstances in which he came to know of the occurrence and found his wife and child dead in the house. It was stated in the report that Rs. 200/- in cash and three ornaments including a ring had been taken away by the miscreants. Matru, appellant, who was the next door neighbour came to Ram Chandra's house before the first information report was lodged and remained with him till the report was made to the police. The investigating officer found blood at both the places where the two dead bodies were lying. The blood-stained and unstained earth was collected and sealed. Next morning it appears Chhotey Lal (P. W. 2) and Nathu Lal (P. W. 10) went to see Ram Chandra between 6 and 7 a. m. Chhotey Lal informed him that he (Chhotey Lal) had seen Matru and two unknown persons entering Ram Chandra's house at about 10 or 10.30 a. m., on the previous day and Nathu Lal gave him the information that at about 11 a. m. on the day of the occurrence he had seen Matru and two other persons coming out of his house. These witnesses at that time did not attach any importance to the three persons entering and after some time coming out of Ram Chandra's house. However, later when they learnt about the double murder in Ram Chandra's house between 10 and 11 a. m. they thought that they should tell Ram Chandra what they had seen on the morning of May 29 at about the time of the occurrence.

4. It is said that about six months prior to the occurrence relations between Omwati and the wife of Matru, appellant, had become strained. One of Matru's daughters was married and the other was of marriageable age but both were living with their parents. Omwati suspected that some people used frequently to visit Matru's house without any cogent reason and also gave currency to this fact. Matru's wife naturally resented this. About six months prior to the occurrence an incident is stated to have taken place which gave rise to a quarrel between the two women. Matru's wife threw a stone which struck Omwati on her head. Ram Chandra did not attach much importance to this incident considering it to be a matter of common occurrence amongst womenfolk. Later, however, Omwati seems to have told her husband that she had been threatened by Matru's wife with dire consequences. Ram Chandra advised his wife not to have anything to do with Matru's wife. After the occurrence, the appellant, it appears, remained in his house till the inquest was over but thereafter he seems to have disappeared. On receiving information about Matru and his two companions going into his house and coming out a short while later round about the time of the occurrence, Ram Chandra informed the investigating officer what he had been told by Chhotey Lal and Nathu Lal. The Sub-Inspector searched the appellant's house at about 9 a. m. on May 30, but he was not found there, nor was any incriminating thing found in the house. A search for the appellant was made but he could not be traced till three days later. On June 1, when the investigating officer learnt that Matru was likely to go to his village to see his children he was apprehended and on search of his person a spectacle case containing a pair of spectacles and a gold ring was recovered from the folds of his dhoti. Complicity of Mohar Singh became known to the police on Matru's interrogation. But Mohar Singh could not be arrested till September 13, 1964. When arrested, he offered to recover a shawl, one of the stolen properties, which he had sold to Darbarilal (P. W. 17) for Rs. 70. The shawl was accordingly recovered at Mohar Singh's instance from Darbarilal. Saheb Singh was also arrested on suspicion.

5. The Sessions Judge found the appellant guilty of murder and also of an offence under Section 382, I. P. C. Since there was no evidence of specific part played by the appellant the extreme penalty was not imposed on him. As observed earlier under Section 382, I. P. C. he was sentenced to four years rigorous imprisonment. Mohar Singh was acquitted of the offence under Section 302/34, I. P. C. as also of the offence under Section 382, I. P. C. He was, however, convicted for an offence under Section 411, I. P. C. and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for two years. Saheb Singh was given benefit of doubt and acquitted. The only evidence against Saheb Singh was that of his identification by Nathu Lal (P. W. 10) which was not corroborated by any other evidence and identification alone in the circumstances was considered unsafe for convicting him.

6. Both the convicts appealed to the High Court. That Court came to the conclusion that Matru had a motive to commit the crime and that Chhotey Lal (P. W. 2) and Nathu Lal (P. W. 10) were reliable witnesses and that the investigation was neither tainted nor unfair to the accused. The statement of Ram Chandra (P. W. 1), husband of the deceased, and his conduct throughout also appeared to be quite straightforward. The ring which had been recovered from Matru's possession at the time of his arrest was held to be the one which the deceased was wearing when her husband left the house in the morning of the occurrence. This was considered to be a very incriminating circumstance. All these circumstances taken along with the fact that Matru had absconded were held to connect the appellant with the crime beyond reasonable doubt. Mohar Singh, from whose possession nothing had been recovered was given benefit of doubt and acquitted. The recovery of the shawl from Darbarilal in the absence of any writing was not considered to be incriminating enough to justify Mohar Singh's conviction because it did not exclude reasonable doubt about his innocence.

7. In this Court it was strongly argued on behalf of the appellant Matru that the circumstantial evidence does not establish his complicity in the offence charged. The police investigation was also assailed and it was submitted that identification of the articles alleged to have been stolen and later recovered was not of much value because the articles alleged to have been recovered were commonly available and had no distinguishing marks of identification. Objection was also raised to the admissibility of Ex. Ka-4, a letter written by the deceased to her father in which reference was made to injury received by her as a result of a brick thrown by Matru's wife. This ground was not included in the original memorandum of appeal dated May 1, 1968 presented in this Court, but permission to raise this ground was sought by means of an application dated July 25, 1968 which was allowed by this Court while granting special leave. It was contended that this letter was inadmissible in evidence as it did not contain any statement relating to the cause of Omwati's death or to the circumstances of the transaction which resulted in her death. According to the argument this letter did not fall within the purview of any of the clauses of Section 32, Indian Evidence Act under which alone it could be held admissible in evidence. Shri Chari also submitted that the other two co-accused having been acquitted, Section 34, Indian Penal Code became inapplicable to the case of the appellant and his conviction under Section 302 read with Section 34, I. P. C. must be held to be contrary to law. For this submission he relied on Prabhu Babaji Navle v. State of Bombay, AIR 1956 SC 51. Finally counsel argued on the authority of Hanumant v. State of M. P., (1952) 3 SCR 1091 = (AIR 1952 SC 343) that in case of circumstantial evidence the circumstances from which the conclusion of guilt is to be drawn should be fully established and all the established facts should be consistent only with the hypothesis of the guilt of the accused. In the present case the circumstantial evidence is not of conclusive nature and tendency, said Shri Chari.

8. Normally this Court does not go into the evidence and appraise it for itself in criminal appeals under Article 136 of the Constitution because this Article does not confer a right of appeal on a party. It merely clothes this Court with discretionary power to scrutinise and go into the evidence in special circumstances in order to satisfy itself that substantial and grave injustice has not been done. In the case before us we are persuaded to go into the evidence because of several exceptional features. It was a case of circumstantial evidence and the two accused who had been charged along with the appellant under Section 302 read with Section 34, I. P. C. were acquitted. The appellant, a neighbour of the deceased, remained with her husband at the place of occurrence till the report was made to the police on the day of the murder. Indeed, he accompanied Ram Chandra for lodging the report. The question of admissibility and value of Ex. Ka-4 and the probative value of the identification proceedings of the articles alleged to have been stolen and recovered were also seriously canvassed at the Bar. And apart from the argument that the circumstantial evidence on the record does not exclude reasonable possibility of the appellant's innocence, the further question was raised that if these two pieces of evidence, namely, Ex. Ka-4 and the identification of the articles were to be ignored then there was absolutely no evidence on which a serious argument about the appellant's guilt could be founded.

9. Now, the deceased Omwati and her infant son were undoubtedly both murdered at about 10 or 11 on the morning of May 29, 1964. Ram Chandra Gupta, the husband of Omwati had no reason to suspect Matru, appellant, (his neighbour) of this crime. In the F. I. R. Ex. Ka-10 no one was named as a suspect and only the following articles of property were stated to be missing;

1. Gold chain weighing about 3 tolas, plain twisted design worth Rs. 375/-;
2. One pair of gold jhumki together with kundal weighing $1\frac{1}{2}$ tolas worth Rs. 150/-;

3. One gold ring longitudinal design weighing $\frac{1}{2}$ tola worth Rs. 75/-. This was stated to have been worn by the deceased; and

4. Currency notes worth Rs. 200/- stated to have been in the box.

It may here be pointed out that when P. W. 1 Ram Chandra came into the witness box he attempted to prove Ex. Ka-3, a supplementary list of missing articles which list, he said, had been handed over to the investigating officer soon after the preparation of the inquest report. The production of this list was objected to and though the trial Court relied on it, the High Court ruled it out as hit by Section 162, Criminal Procedure Code. The position, therefore, remains that the description of the ring in the F. I. R. is the only description we have on the record and also that there is no mention of the spectacle case and the spectacles in the F. I. R. Suspicion fell on the appellant only when Chhotey Lal, barbar (P. W. 2) and Nathu Lal (P. W. 10) saw Ram Chandra on the following morning (May 30, 1964) and informed him of what they had separately seen on the morning of the 29th at about the time of the alleged murder. What they conveyed to Ram Chandra has already been noticed by us. It was on the basis of this information that Ram Chandra is said to have informed the investigating officer about his suspicion against the appellant. The recovery of the articles, even if the evidence of these two witnesses is believed, would have a material bearing on the case because if the recovery proceedings of the articles said to have been recovered from the appellant's possession does not inspire confidence and it is not possible to hold beyond reasonable doubt that these were the very articles found missing from the house of the deceased, then it may be extremely difficult to sustain the appellant's conviction on the prosecution evidence. In this connection particular importance attaches to the ring stated to have been worn by the deceased because if that ring is not proved to be the same which is alleged to have been worn by the deceased Omwati at the time of her murder then no inference would seem to arise against the appellant.

10. The prosecution case against the appellant is mainly sought to be established by the evidence of P. W. 2 and P. W. 10 and by the evidence relating to the recovery from the appellant of the articles alleged to belong to the deceased supported by the evidence of motive on the part of the appellant for committing this crime and corroborated by the appellant's alleged conduct in trying to mislead Ram Chandra and the investigating Officer and finally by disappearing after the lodging of the F. I. R. The trial Court, as also the High Court, both relied on these four pieces of evidence for convicting the appellant.

11. To begin with it is noteworthy that Ram Chandra himself does not seem to have thought that the appellant was inimical towards the deceased and he did not suspect the appellant of complicity in the murder. According to his own testimony it was only after Chhotey Lal (P. W. 2) and Nathu Lal (P. W. 10) had informed him about what they had seen on the morning of May 29, that he recollected that about five or six months prior to the occurrence there was an altercation between Omwati and the appellant's wife. This would clearly indicate that the alleged altercation had not left any serious impact on the mind of Ram Chandra and the appellant's admitted presence in the house of Ram Chandra till the lodging of the F. I. R. indicates that relations between Ram Chandra and the appellant were not openly hostile or unfriendly. The evidence of P. W. 2 shows that the appellant and two other persons came out of the appellant's house and entered the house of Ram Chandra on the morning of May 29, and the evidence of P. W. 10 shows that the appellant and two other persons came out of Ram Chandra's house and entered that of the appellant on the same morning a little later. This evidence having been believed by the two Courts below may be accepted. But so far as the question of time when these two witnesses saw the appellant and two other persons going into and coming out of Ram Chandra's house is concerned they seem to have given the time from their impression. Ram Chandra (P. W. 1) does not say that P. W. 2 and P. W. 10 had told him on the morning of May 30 that when they saw the appellant and his two companions on May 29, they had a Potli with them. It also seems somewhat unbelievable that the appellant with his companions should have entered the house of Ram Chandra with the purpose of committing murder and theft in broad day light particularly when P. W. 2, a barber who knew him and lives about one furlong away from his house had actually seen him. It is unlikely that the appellant should have failed to notice P. W. 2. It is in the evidence of P. W. 2 that the appellant and his companions came out of the appellant's house and entered that of Ram Chandra when the witness called out the name of Panditji meaning thereby Puttupal Pandit. Again, if the appellant and his two companions had committed the gruesome murder of Omwati and Sualal (Omwati aged 25 years had 4 incised wounds, 3 in the neck and one in the abdominal cavity and Sualal, 3 years old, had three incised wounds on his neck and one on his right wrist) within half an hour and had also stolen the articles including a ring, a gold kundal, jhumki and silver tori worn by the deceased on her person and also broken open a box and removed therefrom a shawl and Rs. 200/- within a short span of half an hour as alleged by the prosecution, then it is somewhat surprising that their movements and behaviour should not have reflected any abnormality. At least Nathu Lal does not seem to have noticed any abnormal behaviour which would excite his suspicion. Now, the appellant and his companions were seen by P. W. 2 and P. W. 10, broadly speaking, between 10 and 11 in the morning. We would give these two witnesses a margin for their inaccuracy in regard to the time as deposed by them in the witness box. P. W. 2, it may be recalled, gives the time as between 10 and 10.30 a. m., when he saw the appellant and his companions and P. W. 10 gives the time between 10.30 and 11 a. m. when he saw them coming out of the house of P. W. 1. The F. I. R. was lodged at 12.40 p. m. which means that Ram Chandra (P. W. 1) must have arrived at his house a little earlier. The appellant, according to P. W. 1, had been with him when the F. I. Report was got written at his house and he went along with P. W. 1 for lodging the said report. The behaviour and conduct of the appellant, judged by normal standards, is not suggestive of his involvement in such heinous crime unless he was an experienced criminal (of which there is no suggestion) with extraordinary balance of mind and a disciplined control over his senses and faculties. In the absence of any direct evidence this consideration cannot be completely ruled out as irrelevant when weighing the circumstantial evidence in a case like the present.

12. This takes us to the recovery of the alleged stolen articles from the appellant and their identification. The main evidence of recovery consists of the statements of Head Constable Ahibaran Singh (P. W. 5) and of Nathu (P. W. 10) and the recovery memo Ex. Ka-1 dated June 1, 1964. P. W. 5 has deposed in his examination-in-chief that he did not know the appellant. According to him, an approver had informed him at about 7 p. m. on June 1, that the appellant would be coming to his house that evening to meet his children. At about 7.30 p. m., P. W. 5 along with Bankey, Nathu, Dilasa and two constables sat near Bankey's house waiting for the appellant. It was the approver who pointed out the appellant, whereupon, on being interrogated by the witness, the appellant tried to run away. He was, however, apprehended. In the course of this process the appellant received some injuries. Now, the person described as the approver has not been produced as a witness and indeed even his identity has not been disclosed. It is noteworthy that there is no mention of any approver anywhere else on the record. What is still more intriguing is that even though Nathu was not previously known to the witness, within half an hour of the information about the appellant's expected visit to his house P. W. 5 managed to collect Nathu and two other persons for arresting him. The statement made by P. W. 5 in this connection makes interesting reading. He said:

"I received information through an approver at about 7 p. m. that he shall come home to meet his children from the jungle of Imadpur by night. At this I sat near the house of Bankey by the side of the passage, along with Bankey, Nathu, Dilasa and two constables. Matru, accused present in Court came from the side of Imadpur at about 7.30 O'clock. The approver pointed him out. On being interrogated by me, he took to his heels. I caught him after surrounding and causing slight injuries to him. When I duly searched his person in presence of the witnesses, the case Ex. 3, was recovered from the right phent of the dhoti which he was wearing. On opening it, the spectacles, Ex. 2 and ring Ex. 1 were found in it. I prepared their memo, Ex. Ka-1 correctly at that spot immediately and obtained the signatures and thumb impressions of the witnesses over it. I sealed the articles there after sewing them in cloth Before the arrest of Matru, I and the witnesses had searched each other's persons". In cross-examination it was elicited from him:

"The approver had not told me that he was carrying articles also with him. I took the witnesses for help. I did not recognise him also. Imadpur might be about half a mile from the place where I arrested him. I did not make people sit on any other way. I sat on that very way. I took Nathu with me while he was coming out of a temple in Mauza Jatpura. I took Bankey from Bazar Kalan and Dilasa from Mauza Jatpura. I had not told the witnesses that there was possibility of articles being recovered from him. I did not know Nathu from before. I might have seen him. I did not know that his name was Nathu. Matru was at a distance of about ten paces towards the South of me when I saw him for the first time. He was coming from the western side." Now, considering the fact that it was only at about 7 p. m. that the approver had informed P. W. 5 that the appellant was coming to his house and at 7.30 p. m. the arrest was actually made, it seems to be somewhat surprising that he should have within that short time collected Nathu, whom he did not know before, Bankey and Dilasa from various places and come to the spot in time for effecting the appellant's arrest and search. Bankey and Dilasa have also not been produced as witnesses. Nathu, who has appeared as P. W. 10, has stated in his examination-in-chief about the arrest and search of the appellant in the following words:

"On the fourth day of murder, i. e., after a gap of two days at about 7 p.m. the Head constable took me, Bankey and others with him. One person was keeping his face covered. He asked me to accompany him saying that he had to arrest a man. He had taken Dilasa as well. We sat in mohalla Tikuriya near the house of Bankey. We searched the persons of the constables and Head Constable. We searched the persons of us all. A little later, Matru accused, present in Court came from the western side. The person who was with us pointed out that he was Matru. Matru started running away. At this the Head constable and the constables caught hold of him. They gave him one or two danda blows while trying to catch him. When his person was searched, a case for keeping spectacles, containing a pair of spectacles and a gold ring, was recovered from the right phent of Matru accused. All these things were sewn in cloth and sealed on the spot. Memo was prepared there on the spot. It was read out. My thumb impression was also obtained. (Ex. Ka-1 read over) Yes. These very contents were read out (Shown Ex. 1-3 says) Now, I shall not be able to identify the articles as to whether they are the same or some other. It happened long ago".

13. P. W. 16, Jamuna Prasad, retired police constable is another witness who claims to have been present at the time when Matru was arrested. He was at that time posted as a constable at P. S. Shamsabad. In examination-in-chief he said nothing about the appellant's arrest or the recovery of the articles from him. It was only in cross-examination that he deposed that he was with P. W. 5 at the time of the appellant's arrest and after arresting him the party returned to the police station at about 8 or 8.30 p. m. His version is:—

"Diwanji (presumably referring to P. W. 5) had a talk with one person in my presence. After that he asked me to go along with him. So I accompanied him. We met Bankey witness in Kalan Bazar. I cannot tell whether Bankey has not some shop or not or if he has got it, where is it? We met Nathu near the Naria. After arresting Matru, we returned to the Police Station at about 8 or 8.30 O'clock in the evening".

He has, however, given no details of the articles recovered nor about the appellant's search. The testimony of these witnesses is far from impressive and the story of recovery is difficult to accept on its face value. The memo of recovery is Ex. Ka-1. It purports to have been prepared at 7.30 p. m. on June 1, 1964. According to it on Matru's search, a spectacle case containing "a spectacle and a gold ring as per description given below corresponding to the case as offence No. 67 under Sections 302/380, I. P. C. was recovered from the right side of the phent of his dhoti". The description of the articles recovered, according to this memo, is:

1. One spectacle case of black colour, having dark blue colour inside;
2. One spectacle, having brown frame, white glasses, not circular, half frame;

3. One gold ring, longitudinal design, having green enamel with lengthwise, with red and blue flowery decision on the enamel. The ring is somewhat bent.

It is signed by Head Constable, Ahibaran Singh and attested by Bankey, Dilasa and Nathu. It does not mention the place where the search was effected though the memo is stated to have been prepared in a shop without giving any particulars of the shop. This memo does not materially add to the oral testimony of recovery. This is all the evidence of recovery of the articles. We do not find it safe on this evidence to hold that the articles mentioned in Ex. Ka-1 were recovered from the appellant's possession at the time of his arrest on June 1, 1964 at 7.30 p. m. Neither P. W. 5, the investigating H. C. nor Nathu, (P. W. 10) can be considered to be witnesses on whom implicit reliance can be placed without proper corroboration from a more disinterested and dependable source. Having not been impressed by the evidence of recovery, the identification test of the articles can be of little help to the prosecution, though even on that point the prosecution evidence is equally uninspiring. Identification tests, it may be pointed out, do not constitute substantive evidence. Such tests are primarily meant for the purpose of helping the investigating agency with an assurance that their progress with the investigation into the offence is proceeding on right lines. Now, although the articles are stated to have been recovered on June 1, the test identification was held by Shri Jwala Prasad Srivastava, Magistrate, on October 23, 1964. The reason for this delay as suggested is that similar articles had to be procured for mixing up with the articles recovered. But the manner in which this delayed identification has been held in this case is highly unsatisfactory. Jwala Prasad Srivastava, Magistrate, First Class, who had conducted the test identification appeared as P. W. 21. In his examination-in-chief he said:

"Even before the dates for identification proceedings were fixed but the identification could not be conducted because similar articles had not been received. The articles were opened and shown to the contractor once so that correct articles could be brought. On 13-7-1964 he made an application that the articles should be shown to him. The articles must have been shown to him within some days after that. The date must have been mentioned there but that order sheet is missing. Even then, I took a precaution that none except the contractor and the Court moharrir should see the articles. Just after showing the articles to the contractor, I got the same sealed in the Court room in my presence".

In cross-examination he said:

"The khol (case) Ex. 3 was old. Out of the khols which were mixed, one or two were perhaps new. That too was similar (dissimilar ?) but the dissimilarity was not so much, that I ought to have noted it (shown paper No. 49/147 of SC File) Yes, this note is mine.

"The case of the spectacle is old one whereas the mixed cases were new" (marked Ex. Kha 19). The counsel for the accused persons moved an application on the same day after the identification proceedings. I had read it. The allegations regarding the ring, were not correct. So I did not note them in my order. The order sheet of some particular dates regarding the identification proceedings, were preserved. The same has been found. The order sheet of two dates has been found. Out of them, one bears the signature of my predecessor. I recognise the same. (marked Ex. Kha-21). The other one does not bear the signature of any one. I do not remember exactly who presented the application Ex. Kha 11. Perhaps it was moved by the contractor's man. That man used to come frequently. (Marginal note on Ex. Ka-11 shown. That encircled in red pencil and marked X) I do not recognise the same. I cannot tell who made this entry and when. At present I cannot tell on which date the articles were shown. I did not find any such entry in the record which could tell on which date the articles were shown to the contractor. Only the word 'allowed' is written with the date 13-7-64.

..... Only one man of the contractor used to bring the articles before me. I do not remember his name. I can only recognise him by face. It is quite wrong that on 1-9-64 these articles were brought to the Court and were shown to the witnesses. I do not remember orally on which date these articles were taken out from the malkhana. It is wrong to say that all the articles which were to be mixed, were dissimilar. Only the cases of the spectacles were somewhat new".

The statement of this witness reveals the unsatisfactory manner of dealing with the test identification. We are unable to place any reliance on these proceedings.

14. This takes us to the question of motive. We have already noticed that the altercation between the deceased Omwati and the appellant's wife does not seem to have been taken seriously by either party. The proceedings under Section 107, Criminal P. C. to which a reference has been made were started by Ram Chandra against the appellant after the occurrence in question and, therefore they are not relevant on the question of motive for the present offence of murder. The appellant's counsel questioned the admissibility of Ex. Ka-4, the letter said to have been written by the deceased to her father, on the ground that it did not fall within the purview of Section 38, Indian Evidence Act. The objection appears prima facie on plain reading of the section to possess merit. But even if this letter were to be held admissible we are not satisfied that the motive which this letter suggests is of strong and impelling nature so as to induce the murder of Omwati and her infant child. The motive suggested by this letter, coupled with the testimony of P. W. 2 and P. W. 10, may at best give rise only to a suspicion against the appellant; but suspicion however strong cannot take the place of proof.

15. The appellant's conduct in absconding was also relied upon. Now mere absconding by itself does not necessarily lead to a firm conclusion of guilty mind. Even an innocent man may feel panicky and try to evade arrest when wrongly suspected of a grave crime: such is the instinct of self-preservation. The act of absconding is no doubt relevant piece of evidence to be considered along with other evidence but its value would always depend on the circumstances of each case. Normally the Courts are disinclined to attach much importance to the act of absconding, treating it as a very small item in the evidence for sustaining conviction. It can scarcely be held as a determining link in completing the chain of circumstantial evidence which must admit of no other reasonable hypothesis than that of the guilt of the accused. In the present case the appellant was with Ram Chandra till the F. I. R. was lodged. If thereafter he felt that he was being wrongly suspected and he tried to keep out of the way we do not think this circumstance can be considered to be necessarily evidence of a guilty mind attempting to evade justice. It is not inconsistent with his innocence.

16. One other circumstance which on the facts of this case also deserves notice is the non-recovery of the weapon of offence and the fact that no stains of blood were noticed by any one on the appellant's clothes even though he was with Ram Chandra right upto the lodging of the F. I. R. and even accompanied him for that purpose. The Courts below seem to us to have failed to take into consideration all the relevant facts and circumstances of the case. As proof of the appellant's guilt depended solely on circumstantial evidence it was incumbent on the Courts below to properly consider and scrutinise all the material factors and circumstances for determining whether the chain of circumstantial evidence is so complete as to lead to the only conclusion of the appellant's guilt. In our view, the cumulative effect of the circumstantial evidence in this case falls far short of the test required for sustaining conviction. We are, therefore, constrained to allow this appeal set aside the appellant's conviction and acquit him.

Appeal allowed.

M/s. Nur-ud-din Ahmed, Indra Mohan Singh and U. P. Singh, Advocates, for Appellants. B. P. Jha, Advocate, for Respondent.

DUA, J.: This appeal by special leave by nine appellants is directed against the common judgment of the High Court of Judicature at Patna dismissing two criminal appeals (Nos. 457 and 481 of 1965) from the judgment of the first Additional Sessions Judge, Chapra: (1) convicting Rajkishore Singh, Bindheyachal Singh and Ram Bachan Bhar: (a) under Ss. 302/24, I. P. C., for the murder of Raj Bahadur Dubey and sentencing them to imprisonment for life; and (b) under Section 148, I. P. C. and sentencing them to rigorous imprisonment for two years; (2) convicting Dhup Narayan Singh, Bhikari Singh, Suresh Singh, Kirpal Singh, Behram Singh and Dudnath Singh (a) under Ss. 326/149, I. P. C. and sentencing them to rigorous imprisonment for six years; (b) under S. 323, I.P.C. and sentencing them to rigorous imprisonment for one year and (c) under S. 147, I. P. C. but imposing no sentence; (3) convicting Dhup Narayan Singh, Bhikari Singh, Suresh Singh, Rajkishore Singh, Bindheyachal Singh and Ram Bachan Bhar under S. 201, I.P.C. and sentencing them to rigorous imprisonment for two years with a fine of Rs. 100 each: in default of payment of fine they were to undergo rigorous imprisonment for six months. All the sentences were to run concurrently.

2. Before narrating the prosecution story the relationship of the appellants inter se may be broadly stated. Ramkishore Singh, Bindheyachal Singh, Dhup Narayan Singh and Suresh Singh, appellants 1, 2, 4 and 6 respectively are closely related to one another. Rajkishore Singh is son of Nagina Singh whereas Dhup Narayan Singh and Bindheyachal Singh are sons of Ram Das, brother of Nagina Singh. Suresh Singh is the son of Bindheyachal Singh. Bhika Singh is related to Nagina Singh and Ram Bachan Bhar is his ploughman. These six appellants belong to village Amapur also known as Adampur. The remaining three appellants belong to village Santhi. Kirpal Singh and Bali Ram Singh are brothers and Dudhnath Singh is their pattidar. We may now turn to the broad features of the background of the prosecution story. Khata no. 100 in village Sandhi consists of a number of plots including plots nos. 2245 and 2246. The total area of this Khata consists of 7 bighas, 8 kathas and 3 dhuria. The landlords of this Khata were Bal Bahadur Prasad and others and the recorded tenants Jang Bahadur Rai and Bal Govind Rai. Its rent having fallen into arrears the entire holding was sold in execution and purchased by the landlords themselves sometime in September, 1932. Notwithstanding this sale in favour of the landlords the tenants continued in possession of plots nos. 2245 and 2246 where the present occurrence took place. The tenants also obtained Sada Hukumnama from the landlords sometime in August, 1934 and paid rent to them. When the Zamindari vested in the State Government the owners mentioned Bal Govind and Jang Bahadur as their tenants being entered in the jamabandi in 1963. Nagina Singh applied to the Land Revenue Department for correction of the jamabandi entries basing his claim on the allegation that Kaghunath Rai, Ramdhari Rai and others were zarpeshgidars of the Malkiat interest of Khata no. 100 and for arrears of rent the zarpeshgidars had obtained a decree and in its execution in September, 1922 had purchased the khata and secured its possession. Out of the Khata one bigha and 19 dhuria appertaining to plots nos. 2245 and 2246 were settled with Ram Das Singh, brother of Nagina Singh. This was claimed on the basis of a registered patta and it was on the footing of this document that Nagina Singh and the members of his family laid claim to the possession of the said two plots. These proceedings were still pending when the occurrence in question took place.

3. The prosecution version of the occurrence may now be briefly stated. The two plots nos. 2245 and 2246 which have been amalgamated belong to Banke Singh son of Jang Bahadur (P.W. 1) and Bal Govind Singh (P.W. 6) as their kasht (cultivation) and they claimed to have been in possession all along. Three days prior to the occurrence in question which took place on October 23, 1963 Banke Singh had ploughed and harrowed the land. On the date of occurrence at 6 a.m. Banke Singh and Bal Govind went to the field to sow jow and korse crops. As they were about to finish the sowing operations Rajkishore Singh came there and suggested that sowing should be done only after the settlement of the dispute. Bal Govind suggested that a panchayati should be called to decide this matter. Rajkishore thereupon went to call the panchas. Bal Govind also asked Banke Singh to call Radha Kishen from village Santhi and Raj Ballabh Dubey who was upmukhia (who lost his life in the occurrence) from village Basantpur. Kashi Dubey (P.W. 3) and Balram Dubey (P.W. 8) and one Kapil Dev Tiwari were with Raj Ballabh Dubey at that time. On being apprised of the controversy Raj Ballabh Dubey agreed to act as pancha. He took a blank piece of paper and a pencil with him and also persuaded the three persons mentioned above to accompany him. On arrival at the spot Bankey Singh found his uncle and Radha Kishan near the eastern side of the disputed field and Rajkishore Singh along with 40 or 50 persons variously armed towards the southwest corner of the field. An altercation appeared to be going on between the two parties. On Raj Ballabh Dubey's arrival Rajkishore Singh enquired from him as to why he had come there, to which Raj Ballabh Dubey replied that he had come to do panchayati. Rajkishore retorted that the field belonged to him and there was no question of a panchayati. This being refuted by Raj Ballabh Dubey there was exchange of hot words. Thereupon Rajkishore Singh and his partymen started throwing brickbats with the result that Bal Govind, Raj Ballabh Dubey and others began running towards north east. They were chased by the party of Rajkishore Singh. Raj Ballabh Dubey appears to have lagged behind. Rajkishore Singh gave him a bhalla blow in the stomach. This was followed by another bhalla blow by Bindheyachal Singh on the left side of his stomach. Raj Ballabh Dubey as a result fell down in the field of Ram Chandra Singh. Thereafter Ram Bachan Bhar gave a blow on his chest. In consequence of these blows Raj Ballabh Dubey died. Kapil Dev Tiwari protested but he too was assaulted by Dhup Narayan Singh and Bhikari with lathis felling him down. On protest being raised by Baliram against this high-handedness he also received lathi blows. Kripal, Dudhnath, Baliram and Suresh thereafter struck him with lathis and felled him down. Thereafter Rajkishore Singh, Bindheyachal Singh, Bhikari and Dhup Narayan Singh tied Raj Ballabh Dubey in a green chadar belonging to him and carried him away tied on a lathi towards the river Sarjoo. They threw the dead body into the river. The dead body was, however, not recovered in spite of search with the result that no post-mortem examination could take place.

4. As against this the defence version, to which a passing reference has already been made, is that the entire khata no. 100 was purchased at an auction sale by Raghunath Singh, the zarpeshgidar who settled the plots in dispute in November, 1925 with Ram Das Singh under a registered patta. Ram Das Singh and Nagina Singh claimed to be in possession of the land in dispute by virtue of the said patta and used to pay rent as agreed. After the vesting of the zamindari when no demand of rent was made from them they made enquiries and learnt that in the jamabandi the entries had been made in favour of Bal Govind Singh. Thereupon they filed a petition for correction of those entries. Since they were in possession of the disputed land, three or four days prior to the occurrence in question it was ploughed on their behalf. On the day of the occurrence three men were sowing seeds and Dhup Narayan Singh was washing his face when at about 10 a.m. some persons came from the northern side and began to assault the ploughmen and beat the bullocks. Dhup Narayan Singh rushed towards them and saw Bal Govind Singh, Shemsher Singh, Bankey Singh and others. When he protested and raised alarm ten persons came there to support him and 30 or 40 persons appeared in support of the opposite party. There was uproar and use of lathis on both sides. Dhup Narayan Singh thereupon ran away. The accused denied having carried away the dead body of Raj Ballabh Dubey and thrown it into the river. In arguments, relying on the cross-examination of Bal Govind Singh (P.W. 6) it was urged that Bindheyachal Singh was unable to use bhalla with his right hand. But this was not the case of this accused at the trial and

P.W. 6 had merely learnt that Bindheyachal Singh's right hand had been damaged by electric shock. The witnesses for the defence deposed about the sale, the payment of rent and the possession of the disputed land by the accused. Evidence was also led showing injuries on the persons of Mahabir Basi and Ram Prakash Singh who were surprisingly enough not produced as witnesses to prove as to how they had received those injuries.

5. The trial court held that the two plots in question were in the actual possession of Nagina Singh's family. They had been ploughing them prior to the date of the occurrence and on that day three men sowed jow and korse. Raj Ballabh Dubey was called to act as a pancha and he came there with three companions. The party of the accused who were all armed collected there. After an altercation with Raj Ballabh Dubey the accused threw brickbats and after a chase assaulted Raj Ballaba Dubey, Kapil Dev and Bali Ram. This assault resulted in Raj Ballabh's death, whose dead body was carried away and thrown into the river Sarjoo. The alleged injury to Bindheyachal Singh's right hand was not considered to be sufficiently cogent to discredit the prosecution evidence implicating him. The appellants were convicted and sentenced, as already noticed.

6. The appellants challenged their conviction by means of two appeals presented in the High Court but that Court upheld their conviction and sentence. That court expressed its final conclusion in these words:

"The evidence is that the accused persons had thrown brickbats and not being satisfied with that, even after the prosecution party took to their heels, they chased them and thereafter assaulted them. Chase by armed people resulting in assault certainly shows that the chaser has the common object to assault the members of the prosecution party. Therefore, it must be held that all these nine accused persons who had taken part in chase and assault became members of an unlawful assembly the common object of which was to assault the prosecution party and thereby committed the offence of rioting. Since Rajkishore Singh, Bindhyachal Singh and Ram Bachan Bhar were armed with bhalas they have rightly been found guilty of the charge under section 148, Indian Penal Code. The remaining six accused persons who were armed with lathis have also been rightly found guilty of the charge under section 147, Indian Penal Code.

From the manner in which Rajkishore, Bindhayachal and Rambachan Bhar surrounded Raj Ballabh and assaulted him with bhalas on vital parts of the body and thereby caused his death the irresistible conclusion is that they had common intention to kill him and as such they committed an offence under section 302/34, Indian Penal Code and so their conviction thereunder has to be upheld. Conviction of Dhupan, Suresh, Bhikari, Kirpal, Baliram Singh and Dudhnath under S. 326/149, Indian Penal Code is also fully justified. When they were members of an unlawful assembly with common object to assault prosecution party and the members of that assembly were armed with deadly weapons, such as bhala, the least knowledge that can be attributed to them is that there was likelihood of grievous hurt being caused to the members of the prosecution party.

The evidence of the eye-witnesses is that Rajkishore Singh, Bindhyachal Singh, Bhikhari Singh and Dhup Narayan tied the body of Rajballabh in a green chadar and carried it from the place of occurrence towards the river Sarjoo on a lathi. Evidence of P.Ws. 5, 9, and 12 who saw the body being carried in a bundle shows that Suresh and Rambachan Bhar were also involved in the disappearance of the body, at times they were also carrying it. All these six accused persons have rightly been convicted and sentenced under section 201, Indian Penal Code.

In face of the evidence of assault on Kapildeo and Balram Dubey already discussed above, conviction and sentence of accused Dhup Narain, Bhikhari Singh, Suresh Singh, Baliram Singh, Dudhnath Singh and Kripal Singh under section 323 of the Indian Penal Code are fully justified."

7. Before us the appellants' learned counsel strongly contended that on the concurrent findings of the Courts below that the possession of the disputed land was with Rajkishore Singh and his party and the fact that three ploughmen were injured during the course of the occurrence it must be held that the appellants were the victims of unlawful aggression at the hands of their opponents and whatever injuries they may be found to have inflicted, were caused in exercise of the right of private defence. It was emphasised that the appellants being in possession there could not be any question of their agreeing to any panchayati and the story in this regard is a fabrication. Raj Ballabh Dubey, deceased, according to the argument, was a member of the party which came to take forcible possession of the land in possession of the appellants. He was a wrestler and a bully and, therefore, designedly brought by the opposite party to help them. There being no unlawful assembly formed by the appellants Section 149, I. P. C. was inapplicable and there being no common intention to murder or to commit an offence Section 34, I.P.C. was also not attracted. The cases against individual accused persons, the counsel argued, were not considered by the courts below and he added that even the presence of the three appellants, sentenced to imprisonment for life, is not satisfactorily established on the record. It was further complained that in spite of repeated requests by the accused persons no identification parade was held. The identification at the trial in court without a prior test identification parade in the circumstances would be of little value, said the counsel.

8. It is true that both the courts below have upheld the possession of the plots in dispute to be with the family of Nagina Singh. But this finding is clearly not conclusive on the question of the guilt or innocence of the accused. The courts below, it may be pointed out, have, believing the prosecution evidence, upheld the story about panchayati. In spite of elaborate arguments addressed by Mr. Nuruddin, the learned counsel for the appellants, we are unable to find any cogent ground for disagreeing with the evaluation of the prosecution evidence on this point by the courts below. The judgment of the learned Additional Sessions Judge contains a very exhaustive discussion on this point and the reasoning seems to us to be unexceptionable. The High Court on appeal, after appraising the testimony of the eyewitnesses and considering the attending circumstances and the probabilities of the case also agreed with those conclusions. The finding on this point on which both courts have agreed is binding on us and must be accepted as final, not open to reassessment.

9. The next question relates to the actual occurrence. That a conflict did take place at the time alleged by the prosecution at the place of the occurrence and that the deceased was present there is not disputed even by the accused persons. The difference between the two rival versions lies in the fact that each side claims to be the victim of aggression by the opposite party. The denial of panchayati by the accused having been repelled as unacceptable it seems to us to be more probable that the accused after having agreed to a panchayati desired as a second thought to go back on it and for this reason felt anxious to frustrate the offer of panchayati. On this point too the courts below have concurrently accepted the version of the prosecution witnesses which again seems to be in consonance with the probabilities and is also supported by the attending circumstances. May be that Raj Ballabh Dubey was a wrestler, though this fact is denied by Banky Singh (P.W. 1) according to whom Raj Ballabh Dubey used only to take physical exercises regularly, but that by itself does not mean that the acceptance of the prosecution version by the two courts below must be held to be so grievously erroneous as to require it to be reversed by us. Their appraisal of evidence being free from any serious infirmity has to be accepted. According to the trial court the prosecution party was not armed and the injuries on the persons of Mahabir and Ram Pravesh, who were not examined as witnesses, have not been shown to have been caused in the course of the present occurrence. The medical evidence in regard to their injuries, in the statement of Dwarka Prasad (D.W. 5) a private medical practitioner, did not impress the court. The plea of private defence was expressly ruled out. The High Court agreed with this view. That court added that if at all there was a right of private defence available to the accused in the beginning, it must be deemed to have ceased as soon as the prosecution party took to their heels and in that situation to chase the fleeing men and to assault them at a considerable distance could not be justified on the plea of the right of private defence. The final outcome of the conflict on the facts found is also, in our view, proof positive of the aggression by the accused. We have, therefore, no option but to accept the concurrent conclusions of the two courts below on this point as well. The further question of the dead body of the deceased Raj Ballabh Dubey having been carried away by the party of the accused is similarly concluded by the concurrent findings of the two courts below and despite the persuasive manner of Mr. Nuruddin's arguments we have not been able to find any infirmity in these conclusions. A faint-hearted suggestion thrown by the appellant that Raj Ballabh Dubey's dead body having not been traced, his death cannot be considered to be conclusively established has on the evidence and the conclusions of the courts below merely to be stated to be rejected.

10. The next question which requires consideration is that of guilt of the individual accused persons. The trial court found Raj Kishore, Bindheyachal Singh and Ram Bachan guilty of the murder of Raj Ballabh Dubey and liable to be punished under Sections 302/34, I.P.C. The charge under Ss. 302/149, I.P.C. according to that court was not made out against all the members of the prosecution party though one under Ss. 326/149 was clearly established. The High Court also upheld the guilt of the three appellants Raj Kishore, Bindheyachal Singh and Ram Bachan Bhar under Sections 302/34, I. P. C. The evidence of Bankey Singh (P. W. 1), Kashi Dubey (P. W. 3), Bal Govind Singh (P. W. 6) and Balbhadra Singh (P. W. 10) was relied upon for this finding. This evidence, in our view, fully supports the conclusions of the two Courts below and no ground for interference in this appeal is made out. The appellant's learned counsel drew our attention to the dying declaration of Bal Ram Dubey (P. W. 8), Exhibit J, recorded by Shri R. K. Singh on the 24th October, 1963 in which he imputed his own injuries to lathi blows by Bindheyachal Singh. According to the counsel this at least throws a serious doubt on Bindheyachal Singh's complicity in the murderous assault on the deceased by bhalla as deposed to by other witnesses. This submission, though attractive on first impression, is unacceptable on deeper thought on the facts and the conclusions of the courts below. The trial court did not rely on this dying declaration. The Magistrate who had recorded it was not examined as a witness and according to its contents Bal Ram Dubey was not fully conscious at that time. Now this witness is 75 years of age and had received six injuries as stated by P.W. 19, Dr. Sahai. One injury was grievous and it had resulted in fracture of humerous bone. He was medically examined at about 1 p.m. on the 24th October. The doctor of course does not seem to have recorded in his injury report that he was unconscious but that does not necessarily mean that later, at about 2.35 p.m. when his dying declaration was recorded, his condition could not have become worse. But this consideration apart, the High Court has found sufficient evidence even after excluding the testimony of Balram Dubey (P.W. 6) on which to sustain the finding that Rajkishore, Bindheyachal Singh and Ram Bachan Bhar had assaulted Raj Ballabh Dubey with bhallas with the intention of killing him. Incidentally it may be pointed out that Ram Narayan Dubey, brother of the deceased, had more than once filed written applications in the court of the Magistrate seized of the case, stating that Bal Ram Dubey and Kapil Dev Tiwari had been won over by the accused. Two such applications are dated 3rd February, 1964 (Ex. 14) and 20th June, 1964 (Ex. 14/1). These applications were filed in connection with the insistence of the accused to have them identified by Balram Dubey and Kapil Dev Tiwari. As Balram Dubey identified only Ram Bachan Bhar on 24th June his evidence was discarded. On considering all the circumstances we do not think that on the basis of Ex. J. alone it is possible to discard the evidence of the two eye-witnesses which has been accepted by both the Courts below. At this stage we may also appropriately dispose of the appellants' argument seriously pressed before us that in spite of repeated demands by the accused test identification parades were not held with expedition and this has prejudiced the appellants. The first application, to which our attention was drawn in this connection, was put up before the Sub-Divisional Officer dealing with this case on 2nd January, 1964, in which it seems to have been prayed that the accused persons should not be produced in court on 3rd January, 1964 and also not till the test identification parade was finished. This application was, however, not pressed on behalf of the accused. On 3rd January, 1964 the accused were produced in custody and the court gave a direction to expedite the test identification parades. It appears that later the accused started pressing for immediate test identification parades. But in view of the fact that there was a counter-charge of some of the witnesses having been won over and the fact that the accused were apparently also known to the identifying witnesses test identification parade in this case can hardly be of any use. Kapil Dev Tiwari, the other identifying witness died a natural death before he could appear as a witness in the case. So the test identification by him which is not a substantive piece of evidence but can only be used as corroborative evidence could not be of much evidentiary value. What has just been stated clearly shows that the identification parades are of little value to the prosecution and there is no question of the accused having been prejudiced by the late identification parades. We are not relying on them at all. The appellants' suggestion some what casually made during the course of the arguments that Bindheyachal Singh was not capable of wielding bhala with his right hand, which argument was not accepted by the trial Court, appears to us to be without foundation.

11. This takes us to the other charges. Here again, the evidence of three witnesses P. Ws. 1, 3 and 6 has been accepted by both the Courts below and we are unable to find any cogent ground for disagreeing with them. The likelihood of the infliction of grievous hurt by the unlawful assembly, having a common object of assaulting the prosecution party, who were chased while running away, is amply established and has been so found by the Courts below. No legal infirmity or failure of justice has been made out. The general alternative submission that the appellants had only exceeded their right of private defence is equally unfounded because on the facts on the record and on concurrent conclusions of the two Courts below there is no question of any right of private defence because the prosecution party has not at all been shown to be the aggressors. The question of exceeding this right can thus hardly arise. This appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Court was delivered by

RAY, J.: — This is an appeal by special leave from the judgment dated 5 April, 1968 of the High Court of Gujarat setting aside the order of acquittal passed by the Sessions Judge, Ahmedabad on 21 September, 1965 on a charge for an offence under Section 302 read with Section 34 of the Indian Penal Code and convicting the appellants and sentencing each of them to imprisonment for life.

2. The three appellants Bhika Valu, Dhuna Magha and Valu Vela were the accused in this case. They belonged to the Barwad community of Gundi village of Dholka Taluka, Ahmedabad Rural District. In this village there were two factions one of the Koli Patels and the other of Bharvads. Five or six years prior to the date of occurrence, namely 20 February, 1965, 5 or 6 Bharvads of Gundi village were murdered. Amongst those murdered were Vajakaran Vaha, Ranchhod Valu, Ganda Kama, Deva Kama and Vela Kama. The appellant Bhika Valu is the nephew of Vajakaran Vaha and is brother of Ranchhod Valu both of whom were among the murdered Bharwads. The appellant Dhuna Magha is an agnate of the three murdered Bharwads Ganda Kama, Deva Kama and Vela Kama. The appellant Valu Vela is the son of murdered Bharwad Vela Kama. In respect of the said offences of murders of those Bharwads, a charge-sheet was brought against 23 Koli Patels of the village and out of them, four persons were convicted and sentenced to various terms of imprisonment. Falji Teja, the deceased in the present appeal and Pitambar Bhura and Rupsing Raja, two prosecution witnesses in this case were among the 23 Koli Patels implicated in those offences of murders. Since the murder of Bharwads relations between Koli Patels and Bharwads were not friendly. The present offence was alleged to have been committed in consequence of the strained relations between the Koli Patels and the Bharwads.

3. The prosecution case was this. On 20 February, 1965 Falji Teja and his son Khengar went to the Bhurkhi Railway Station which was about two furlongs from the place of the occurrence. Falji and Khengar went to meet the train, which would arrive at about 3 p. m. to engage agricultural labourers if they could be obtained. Falji and Khengar met the train but could not find any agricultural labourer. Then they started on the return journey to Gundi Village. When they passed over a culvert near the Panchayat Office at Gundi accused No. 1 ran up from behind and gave a blow with an axe to Falji on the left leg from behind. Falji fell down. Accused Nos. 2 and 3 ran up to the spot. Accused No. 2 was armed with a spear and accused No. 3 with a Dharia. All the three accused started giving blows to Falji. As a result of the injuries Falji died on the spot. Three accused ran away. Falji Teja had a double barrelled gun with him and that gun fell from his hand when he was assaulted. Accused No. 1 carried away the gun which Falji Teja had carried with him.

4. Khengar who was a young boy of about 14 got frightened and ran away. He informed his mother Bai Samu about the assault on his father and told her who the assailants were. At the time of the assault Pitambar Bhura a Koli Patel was proceeding from his house in Gundi to Bhurkhi Railway Station and he saw the entire incident from a place. Another prosecution witness Rupsing Raja also a Koli Patel was behind Pitambar Bhura and was on his way to the field. He also saw the incident of assault on Falji. After the assault Rupsing Raja went back to the village and informed Mera Mathur whose wife Bai Raju was working as an agricultural labourer with Falji. Thereafter Bai Samu went to the place of incident. Rupsing Raja and Mera Mathur also went to the spot by that time. At the place where the dead body of Falji Teja was lying, Pitambar Bhura and Rupsing Raja confirmed the information which Bai Samu had received from Khengar as to the three accused being the assailants of Falji.

5. One Kavabhai Mansing happened to go to a well near the scene of offence. Kavabhai Mansing saw Bai Samu and found her weeping. Kavabhai Mansing went up to Bai Samu and saw Falji lying dead with injuries. Rupsing Raja, Mera Mathur, Pitambar Bhura were also present when Kavabhai Mansing went up to the scene of offence. Bai Samu told Kavabhai Mansing about the incident and asked him to go and send a telegram to the Koth Police Station. Kavabhai Mansing went to the Bhurkhi railway station and contacted the Station Master and asked him to send information to Koth Police Station. The Station Master, Bhurkhi got in touch with the Koth Railway Station and recorded the message.

6. The Police Sub-Inspector from Koth Police Station proceeded to Gundi village. He held inquest on the dead body. He made a panchnama. When the three accused ran away accused No. 2 left behind him at the scene of the offence his spear. The blade of the Dharia which was used by accused No. 3 was broken and the broken portion of the blade was left behind at the scene of the offence. The Police Officer took charge of the spear and the broken portion of the blade of Dharia. The dead body was sent to Dhandhuka for post-mortem examination. The statements of Pitambar Bhura and Rupsing

Raja were recorded on 20/21 February, 1965 in the night and the following day the statements of other witnesses were recorded. The three accused presented themselves before the Police Inspector on 21 February, 1965. The Police Sub-Inspector discovered in the presence of Panchas a gun which accused No. 1 had concealed at the house of a tailor. The Police Inspector further discovered a Dharia which accused No. 3 had concealed at the hedge of the Vada land of one Bharvad Vama Vaja. The piece of blade of Dharia which was found at the scene of the offence matched the broken edge of the Dharia discovered. An axe was also discovered by accused No. 1 who led the police party and the panchas to the Vada land of Vama Vaja and from there took out an axe. The reports of the Chemical Analyser and Serologists indicated that there were stains of human blood on the gun and on the handle of the Dharia and the other portion of Dharia. There were blood stains on the axe but the blood had so integrated that the origin could not be determined.

7. After investigation a charge-sheet was submitted against the three accused. They were charged under Section 302 read with Section 34 of the Indian Penal Code and accused No. 1 was charged under Section 379 of the Indian Penal Code. All the accused denied having committed an offence.

8. The Sessions Judge examined the case under three broad heads. The first was evidence of motive. The second was evidence of eye-witnesses Pitambar Bhura and Khengar Falji and Rupsing Raja. The third was circumstantial evidence in the shape of discovery of blood stained articles, viz., stolen gun, farsi with stain of blood on them on information received from accused No. 1 and discovery of Dharia with stains of human blood on information received from accused No. 3. As to the prosecution witnesses the Sessions Judge found that since the incident of murder of some Bharvads six years prior to the date of occurrence Falji and others including witnesses Pitambar Bhura and Rupsing Raja who were also accused along with Falji in the trial of the Bharvad murder case belonged to the faction of Koli Patels who bore enmity against the Bharvads. The accused, in the present case, were Bharvads and the witnesses and the deceased Falji were Koli Patels. The Sessions Judge therefore held that the prosecution witnesses were partisan and they belonged to a rival faction. Khengar being the son of Falji and a young boy of 14 was found by the Sessions Judge to be a witness whose evidence had to be very carefully scrutinised along with the evidence of Pitambar Bhura and Rupsing Raja. The Sessions Judge considering the evidence found that it could not be said with reasonable certainty that the witnesses were persons whose presence at that place would be natural in ordinary course of events. The consideration which weighed with the Sessions Judge was that if Khengar was present the accused would not have spared Khengar to remain an eye-witness. The Sessions Judge also on analysis of medical evidence found discrepancies between the medical evidence and the evidence of the witnesses to be a serious infirmity.

9. According to the Sessions Judge, the most serious infirmity in the prosecution case was that the First Information Report did not mention the name of accused No. 3 Valu Vela as one of the assailants. Kavabhai stated that Bai Samu wife of Falji had given the names of accused No. 1 and accused No. 2 and thereupon Kavabhai carried the information to the Station Master. The Sessions Judge concluded that the truthfulness of the evidence of these three eye-witnesses as a whole was not free from doubt and their evidence could not be accepted as sufficient for conviction in the absence of corroboration.

10. The Sessions Judge found that though the prosecution had established that there were strained relations between the accused and the deceased it could not be said that the incident of murder of Bharvads had not resulted in strained relations between Falji and any other Bharvad of the village but that possible motive for the murder could not be treated as corroboration of the evidence of the three eye-witnesses Pitambar, Khengar and Rupsing.

11. As to the discovery of blood stained articles, viz., stolen gun, farsi and Dharia and a piece of apparel called "Pachhedi" having a blood stain, the Sessions Judge held that considering that there were two factions it was highly desirable that persons other than Koli Patels were taken as Panchas and examined as witnesses. The evidence of Panch witness Chaturbhai was found by the Sessions Judge tainted because the prosecution did not examine the other two Panchas one of whom was a Muslim and the other a Sindhi.

12. The High Court set aside the order of acquittal and convicted the appellants. The High Court accepted the evidence of Khengar son of Falji, Bai Samu widow of Falji and relied on the evidence of Khengar by reason of corroboration of various pieces of circumstantial evidence.

13. The High Court did not consider it safe to rely on the testimony of Pitambar because of the previous enmity between him and the Bharvads and on the additional ground that Pitambar was trying to improve upon his earlier version regarding the names of the assailants that were disclosed by Bai Samu. The High Court also found it not prudent to rely upon the testimony of Rupsing because he belonged to the rival faction which bore animosity against the Bharvads and at the time of the incident Rupsing was at a distance of more than 100 feet and therefore Rupsing might not have identified the three assailants of Falji.

14. As to Khengar's evidence the High Court said that he had seen his own father being seriously assaulted by use of dangerous weapons and his failure to appeal to Rupsing and Pitambar to come to the help of his father was not unnatural for a boy of his age at that critical time. The High Court therefore rightly said that Khengar who was a young boy of about 14 years of age must have been very much frightened and his action of rushing towards the village to his own house raising shouts all the time was quite natural in view of his age and his relationship with the victim and the nature of the assault.

15. The High Court rightly rejected the criticisms of Khengar's evidence, namely, that he said that no passenger had got down at Bhurki Railway Station whereas Rupsing Raja said that he saw some passengers coming from the opposite direction and the conflict between the medical evidence and Khengar's evidence that Falji had fallen down with his face downwards and the conflict between the medical evidence and Khengar's evidence as far as external injuries Nos. 1 and 2 were concerned. The doctor was not asked as to whether these two injuries Nos. 1 and 2 could not have been caused when Falji was lying with his face downward.

16. The other piece of evidence as to whether there was any passenger who had got down at Bhurki Railway Station was also found by the High Court not to be a ground for doubting Khengar's testimony because Rupsing was not asked any question as to whether the persons he met in the village coming from the opposite direction were passengers.

17. The High Court adopted the correct approach in finding that though there were no infirmities of Khengar's evidence as it stood but in view of the fact that he was a young boy it would be prudent to seek corroboration of Khengar's evidence.

18. The High Court correctly relied on the evidence of Bai Samu in corroboration of Khengar's testimony. Khengar told Bai Samu that his father was assaulted and on Bai Samu asking him who the assailants were Khengar told her that accused No. 2 Dhana Megha and accused No. 3 Valu Vela and accused No. 1 Bhikha Valu had assaulted his father. Bai Samu in cross-examination maintained that Khengar had given her the names of the three accused as the assailants of her husband. Kavabhai was near the well which is situated at a short distance to the north of Panchayat Office and on the date of occurrence he saw Bai Samu on the road near the culvert. Kavabhai saw Bai Samu weeping and went to her. Kavabhai saw Falji Teja lying dead on the ground with blood injuries. According to Kavabhai Bai Samu told him that Bhika Valu and Dhana Megha had killed her husband. Kavabhai went to the Station Master, Bhurki. The Station Master Chakravarti did not know Gujarati. Kavabhai spoke to him in Gujarati. The Station Master said that he understood from what Kavabhai told him that Bhikha Valu was murdered by Dhana Megha. The High Court rightly said the Station Master Chakravarti was not familiar with the Gujarati language and because of that there was misunderstanding of what Kavabhai said and wrong names were mentioned.

Bai Samu was in great distress and agony of her life. Therefore it would be reasonable to find that though under the circumstances Bai Samu might have given out the names of three individuals Kavabhai understood her to mention the names of accused No. 1 and accused No. 2.

19. The High Court referred to the three Panchnamas Exhibits 20, 21 and 23 as pieces of circumstantial evidence. Exhibit 20 is the deposition of the Panch witness Nanubhai who spoke of injuries on the different portions of the dead body, a piece of Dharia blade to be found lying at a short distance from the dead body and a cap and a piece of cloth used as a head gear found lying there. The spear was also found lying at some distance from the dead body. The Panchnama Exhibit 21 was recorded in connection with the scene of offence. Panch witness Nanubhai spoke of the piece of apparel Pachhedi of the nature of a short dhoti worn by accused No. 3 and taken charge by the police on 21 February, 1965. Accused No. 3 put on the pachhedi. It appeared to have a blood-stain and the police took charge of it under Panchnama Exhibit 23. Exhibit 21 also spoke of the piece of blade of Dharia found lying at a distance of one pace to the south of the dead body and the spear was found lying at a distance of about 7 paces to the west of the dead body. The Panchnama Ex. 23 mentioned that there was one blood spot on the right side on the "thigh portion" of that Pachhedi and accused No. 3 was allowed to change the pachhedi by wearing another pachhedi which he had with him and the spot of blood which was noticed on the pachhedi of accused No. 3 was encircled under the signature of Panch witnesses.

20. The High Court referred to the evidence of Dr. Lala who performed the post-mortem examination on the body of Falji Teja. Dr. Lala's evidence was that all the injuries could have been caused by sharp cutting instrument and the death of Falji Teja was due to shock and haemorrhage as a result of the fracture of the skull. Dr. Lala spoke of six injuries on Falji Teja. Injury No. 4 a cut on the back of left upper arm lower one third skin deep could have been caused by a spear. Injury No. 3 a semi-circular incised wound cutting through the bone and exposing the brain starting

21. The High Court dealt with the arguments advanced on the medical evidence that injuries Nos. 1 and 2 on the outer angle of left eye and over the left ear were so located that they could not have been caused when he was lying with his face downward. No questions were put to Dr. Lala about this aspect of the case and the High Court rightly said that it was not possible to accept the submission on behalf of the accused that those two external injuries could not have been caused when the deceased was lying with his face towards the ground.

22. The High Court correctly found corroboration from the injuries on the dead body and the three different weapons, viz., the axe, the spear and the Dharia and the wearing apparel pachhedi. The medical evidence was that the different injuries could have been inflicted by Dharia, axe and spear. External injury No. 4 could have been inflicted by a spear or by an axe. Khengar's evidence was there was a spear injury but he had not specified the part of the body where the spear had landed. Khengar might have noticed only the action of accused No. 2 in thrusting the spear but did not notice how and in what manner the spear landed on the person of Falji. Therefore, there could not have been discrepancy between Khengar's and the medical evidence. A spear was found lying at the scene. A broken blade of a Dharia was also lying near the dead body. The Police Sub-Inspector recorded inquest and took charge of that broken piece of Dharia blade. Stains of human blood were found on the Dharia blade. The stains of blood on the spear had so integrated that its origin could not be determined. Therefore, looking at the place from which the spear was found and the circumstances under which the spear was taken charge of by the police, it is clear that the spear must have been stained with Falji's blood and must have been left behind by the person or persons who assaulted Falji.

23. The injuries on the dead body were consistent with the three different weapons and the three different types of weapons rendered it not unreasonable for the High Court to come to the conclusion that there were three assailants each of whom was having a different weapon and each of whom caused injuries to the deceased Falji. Khengar's testimony is corroborated by the testimony of Bai Samu that the three accused assaulted the deceased and caused injuries to the deceased by means of axe, spear and Dharia. The pachhedi which was taken charge from accused No. 3 immediately after he was arrested had stains of human blood. The High Court examined the pachhedi and found that there was only one cutting taken out from the pachhedi and that too was from the portion around which there was a circle in ink and the signature of panch witness Nanubhai was also there. No other cutting was taken out from the pachhedi. There was only one tear on the pachhedi. This cut mark was taken out from the portion encircled in ink when the Panchanama was made. The stain of human blood on the pachhedi worn by accused No. 3 was a strong reliable piece of evidence.

24. The discovery of a gun and an axe by accused No. 1 and a Dharia by accused No. 3 is of great importance for the purpose of corroboration. Panch witness Chaturbhai was a panch to three different panchanamas in connection with the discovery of different weapons. Hasan Alibhai, and Dayaram Kamaldas were co-panchas with him and accused No. 1 was in police custody at that time. Accused No. 1 said that he would show the place where he had kept the gun and accused No. 1 led the police and the panchas to a place on the station road to the tailor's house which was under construction. Accused No. 1 showed the gun which was lying at that house.

The gun was attached. Panchanama was made and the gun was taken charge of by the police. The gun was shown to be the gun belonging to Falji. The licence showed the number of the gun. The licence was given to Falji. The number and other description tallied. The number of the gun was noted in the panchanama.

25. Accused No. 3 led the police party and the panchas to a place near a small temple of a deity. Accused No. 3 took out a Dharia from the hedge of thorns. The Dharia was attached. A panchanama was made. The Dharia which was attached had its blade broken. There were blood like stains on it. Article 13 was the Dharia produced in Court. The blade which was found from the scene of offence near the dead body and the dharia which was attached matched. The High Court saw the two pieces matched completely at the broken edge and there was no doubt in coming to the correct conclusion that the broken piece of blade was broken from this particular dharia and the remaining portion which was recovered according to the prosecution from the hedge was the other matching part of it.

26. The third panchanama made on 22 February, 1965 stated that accused No. 1 said that he would find out the farsi in a hedge. Accused No. 1 also stated that he had kept the farsi in a hedge and then the panchanama was recorded at the Panchayat Office. Chaturbhai also said in evidence that the distance between the spot from where the dharia was taken out and the place from where farsi was taken out by accused No. 1 might be about 10 feet. The hedge from which the broken dharia and the axe were recovered was about a distance of 20 feet from the station road and the house of the tailor from which the gun of Falji Teja was recovered was on the station road. The High Court rightly said that the criticism on behalf of the accused that Chaturbhai was a Koli Patel and therefore had interest of the community was no ground to hold that Chaturbhai's evidence should not be accepted. Panch witness Nanubhai Virsing was also a Koli Patel and no allegation was made against Nanubhai. The High Court found that nothing was shown to hold that Chaturbhai was an interested witness or to be a professional panch or amenable to the pressure of the police. Panch witness Hasanali was won over by the accused. That is why Hasanali who was cited as a witness was not examined along with Mera Mathur. Other witnesses were also dropped. Dayaram another panch witness was not examined. It was not obligatory to call Dayaram because it could not be said that Chaturbhai was an interested witness.

27. The High Court rightly said that there was no reason to disbelieve the three panchnamas and once that evidence was accepted it clearly followed that the prosecution established that a gun with stains of human blood on it and belonging to Falji Teja was recovered from a spot from where accused No. 1 had kept the gun and the broken blade of the Dharia with stains of human blood on it was recovered from the hedge of the Vada of Vama Vaja the place where accused No. 3 had kept it and the axe was found from another spot in the hedge of Vama Vaja. Discovery of the Dharia and the farsi and the gun corroborated the testimony of Khengar and the further fact that the names of the accused were disclosed by Bai Samu to Kava Mansing. Bai Samu had in her turn been told the names of the three accused as assailants by Khengar. This supports Khengar's version before the Court. Khengar's evidence received corroboration by the discovery of the gun, the axe and the spear.

28. The High Court rightly found that the prosecution case against the three accused had been established beyond reasonable doubt from the evidence of Khengar and from the corroboration which Khengar's evidence received.

29. For these reasons the appeal fails and is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Mr. A. K. Sen, Sr. Advocate, (M/s. A. V. Rangam and T. Raman, Advocates, with him), for Appellant (In all the Appeals); Mr. B. V. Subramanyam, Sr. Advocate, (Mr. B. Parthasarathy, Advocate, with him), for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2 (In all the Appeals).

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

MITTER, J.: — The main question in these three appeals is, whether reception of secondary evidence of a written agreement to grant a lease is barred by the provisions of Sections 35 and 36 of the Indian Stamp Act.

2. The relevant facts are as follows. There is a rice mill in Bhimavaram, West Godavari District, which was formerly owned by the appellant along with respondents 3, 4 and 5. The mill was built on a site with an area of Ac. 1-75 by one K. N. Raju who had obtained a lease thereof from the guardian of respondents 1 and 2. It was executed on 21st December, 1941 and was to expire on 17th July, 1956. The appellant and respondents 3, 4 and 5 were successors-in-interest of the said lease-hold rights. Respondents 1 and 2 served notice of ejectment on the lessees to quit the site and deliver possession on the expiry of the said lease.

3. According to the lessees there were negotiations for a new lease. Respondents 1 and 2 demanded enhanced rent and an agreement was ultimately arrived at on January 6, 1957 between the appellant and respondent No. 5 for themselves and on behalf of respondents 3 and 4 on the one hand and respondents 1 and 2 on the other for grant of a new lease for a period of thirty years commencing on January 1, 1957. The rent was fixed at Rs. 540/- per annum payable every two months. There was an option given to the lessors to purchase the rice mill at a price to be fixed by the President of the Rice Mills' Association but in case the said option was not exercised, the lessees were entitled to remove the structures of the Mill. The lessees were to continue in possession and a deed of lease was to be executed and registered within a short time. The agreement was written on two stamp papers of Rs. 0-12-0 each and signed by the appellant and the 5th respondent on the one hand and respondent No. 1 on his own behalf and on behalf of respondent No. 2. The document was delivered to the respondent No. 1 after execution.

4. The appellant's further case is that thereafter he effected considerable improvements to the mill costing about Rs. 30,000/- and purchased the shares of respondents 3 and 4 in the said mill but respondent No. 5 who had originally joined the appellant in the suit for specific performance of the said agreement sold his share in or about September, 1955 to respondent No. 6 herein.

5. On March 12, 1957 respondents 1 and 2 instituted a suit O. S. No. 31 of 1957 in the Court of the District Munsif of Bhimavaram against the appellant and respondents 3, 4 and 5 besides certain other persons who were in occupation of the site, for recovery of possession after removing the rice mill and structures standing thereon on the basis that on the expiry of the old lease they had become entitled to possession. Respondents 1 and 2 instituted another suit O. S. No. 100 of 1957 on 4th April 1957 in the same Court claiming damages from the appellant and respondent No. 5 for failure to deliver the site from 1st January, 1957 till date of delivery of possession. In paragraph 6 of the plaint in this suit they expressly stated that they would file a separate suit to recover the future mesne profits. The total claim in this suit was computed at Rs. 4,700 being the amount due for 94 days from 1st January 1957 to 4th April 1957 at the rate of Rs. 50 per day. On April 5, 1958 the appellant and respondent No. 5 instituted O. S. No. 92 of 1958 against respondents 1 to 4 praying for specific performance of the agreement to lease mentioned above with a direction that the respondents 1 and 2 should execute the lease deed. By their written statement filed in O. S. No. 92 of 1958 respondents 1 and 2 denied the execution of the agreement to lease while in the two suits for recovery of possession and damages for illegal occupation the appellant and respondent No. 5 pleaded the aforesaid agreement for lease in defence and submitted that they were entitled to remain in possession without any liability as to damages.

6. The three suits were tried together. As respondents 1 and 2 did not produce the original agreement which according to the appellant had remained with them, oral evidence was called by the appellant to prove the execution of the said document. In his judgment the learned Munsif held:

"The plaintiffs have no right to lead any oral evidence in respect of the suit agreement to lease dated 6-1-1957. However, in order to appreciate the case put forward by the plaintiffs in the absence of the agreement to lease oral evidence has been recorded to determine whether the plaintiffs are entitled to specific performance as the full facts must be before the court".

Examining the evidence the learned Munsif recorded his finding that:

"The plaintiffs on whom the burden lies have not proved by evidence of P.Ws. 1 to 5 and 7 which is interested and developed that the agreement to lease dated 6-1-1957 is true and valid."

O.S. No. 92 of 1958 was therefore dismissed. O. S. No. 81 of 1957 was decreed against the appellant and others and they were directed to deliver vacant and peaceful possession after removing the constructions and the mill thereon on or before 9th July 1960. Suit No. 100 of 1957 was decreed against the appellant and respondent No. 5 for Rs. 117-2-10.

7. The Subordinate Judge, Narsapur who heard the appeals from the judgment and decrees of the learned Munsif set them aside. The suit for specific performance of the contract of agreement to lease was decreed and defendants 1 and 2 in that suit were directed to execute and register a lease deed from 1st January, 1957. He accepted the oral evidence tendered on behalf of the plaintiffs in that suit and recorded that the objection regarding the admissibility of the oral evidence was raised only at the time of the arguments on the ground that the agreement was written on a stamp paper of Rs. 1-8-0 when it should have been written on a paper with a stamp of Rs. 60/-. According to the learned Subordinate Judge the defendants had suppressed the agreement to lease whereby the plaintiffs were deprived of the opportunity of making good the deficiency of the stamp. The learned appellate Judge held further that the conditions mentioned in Section 27-A of the Specific Relief Act had been fulfilled. He also found that the parties were contemplating the execution of a deed of lease subsequent to the agreement and the mere fact that plaintiffs continued their possession after the expiry of the period of the previous lease did not take the case out of the purview of Section 27-A of the Specific Relief Act.

8. The High Court in Second Appeal went elaborately into the question of the admissibility of the oral evidence regarding the agreement to lease and held that "although the objection was raised by defendants 1 and 2 in the trial Court at the time of the final arguments and not before the oral evidence was received in regard to the admissibility of oral evidence, even then since Section 36 is not attracted to such an objection, the oral evidence cannot be acted upon. It is inadmissible in evidence and it cannot be received for any purpose."

The appellant before us challenges this finding of the High Court.

9. Learned counsel for the appellant Mr. Sen argued that the admissibility of secondary evidence, be it oral or in writing, must be primarily decided in terms of the Indian Evidence Act. Inasmuch as the original document which was insufficiently stamped was suppressed by the defendants in the suit for specific performance, secondary evidence of the contents of the document could be led in terms of Section 65 (a) of the Evidence Act. The Evidence Act imposed no bar to the reception of oral evidence by way of secondary evidence to prove the terms of the agreement to lease which was in writing and duly executed. According to counsel the Stamp Act did not create a bar with respect to the reception of secondary evidence to prove a document which was unstamped or insufficiently stamped in any case where the party seeking to rely upon the execution of the document and the terms thereof offered to pay the penalty in terms of Section 35 of the Stamp Act. According to Mr. Sen Section 35 raised a bar only in cases which were expressly excluded by proviso (a) to Section 35 and in others where the party seeking to rely on the document was not agreeable to pay the deficiency in the stamp together with the penalty in terms of the said proviso. Mr. Sen further argued that the whole object of S. 35 of the Stamp Act was that the Government revenue due by way of stamp should be protected. But even then Section 36 carved out an exception thereto and allowed the reception of an insufficiently stamped instrument in evidence when it had been admitted without objection at the initial stage. It was not reasonable, according to counsel to limit the operation of Section 36 only to cases where the original instrument was admitted in evidence without objection and logically oral evidence to prove the contents of a document which was insufficiently stamped should be subject to the same but no further infirmity and once such oral evidence was recorded without objection of the party against whom it was tendered, particularly where such party was responsible for the suppression or non-production of the document, it should be acted upon by Courts of law. If the party tendering oral evidence was agreeable to make up the deficiency in the stamp and pay the penalty in terms of Section 35.

10. We find ourselves unable to accept the submissions made on behalf of the appellant. The Indian Evidence Act which was enacted in 1872 consolidates, defines and amends the law of evidence. By various Chapters it deals with matters as to how facts are to be proved and which facts need not be proved. Section 59 of the Act lays down that all facts except the contents of documents may be proved by oral evidence. Documentary evidence is dealt with in Chapter V and Section 61 provides that the contents of the document may be proved either by primary evidence or secondary evidence. Under Section 62 primary evidence means the document itself produced for inspection of the Court. Section 63 shows the different kinds of secondary evidence admissible with regard to documents. It includes several kinds of copies as specified in sub-cl. (1) to (3) of the section, counterparts of documents as against the parties who did not execute them in terms of Clause (4) and oral accounts of the contents of a document given by some person who has himself seen it in terms of Clause (5). Under Section 64 documents must be proved by primary evidence except in cases mentioned thereafter. Section 65 allows secondary evidence to be given of the existence, condition or contents of a document in circumstances specified in Clauses (a) to (g) thereof. Under Section 91 when the relevant portion of a contract or of a grant or of any other disposition of property has been reduced to the form of a document, no evidence shall be given in proof of the terms except the document itself or secondary evidence of its contents in cases in which secondary evidence is admissible under the provisions herebefore contained.

11. As the first Court of appeal recorded the finding that it was the defendants who were responsible for suppression of the original agreement to lease, a finding which was accepted by the High Court, it must be held that no objection to the reception of secondary evidence by way of oral evidence can be raised under the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act.

12. The Indian Evidence Act however does not purport to deal with the admissibility of documents in evidence which require to be stamped under the provisions of the Indian Stamp Act. The Stamp Act which is now in force is an Act of 1899 but it had a fore-runner in a statute of 1879. Chapter IV of the Stamp Act deals with instruments not duly stamped. Section 33 (1) of this Act provides that:

"Every person having by law or consent of parties authority to receive evidence, and every person in charge of a public office, except an officer of police, before whom any instrument, chargeable, in his opinion, with duty, is produced or comes in the performance of his functions, shall, if it appears to him that such instrument is not duly stamped, impound the same". The relevant portion of Section 35 is as below:—

"No instrument chargeable with duty shall be admitted in evidence for any purpose by any person having by law or consent of parties authority to receive evidence, or shall be acted upon, registered or authenticated by any such person or by any public officer, unless such instrument is duly stamped:

Provided that—

(a) any such instrument not being an instrument chargeable with a duty not exceeding ten paise only, or a bill of exchange or promissory note, shall, subject to all just exceptions, be admitted in evidence on payment of the duty with which the same is chargeable, or, in the case of an instrument, insufficiently stamped, of the amount required to make up such duty, together with a penalty of five rupees, or, when ten times the amount of the proper duty or deficient portion thereof exceeds five rupees, of a sum equal to ten times such duty or portion;

xx xx xx."

Section 36 lays down that:

"Where an instrument has been admitted in evidence, such admission shall not, except as provided in Section 61, be called in question at any stage of the same suit or proceeding on the ground that the instrument has not been duly stamped".

13. The first limb of Section 35 clearly shuts out from evidence any instrument chargeable with duty unless it is duly stamped. The second limb of it which relates to acting upon the instrument will obviously shut out any secondary evidence of such instrument, for allowing such evidence to be let in when the original admittedly chargeable with duty was not stamped or insufficiently stamped, would be tantamount to the document being acted upon by the person having by law or authority to receive evidence. Proviso (a) is only applicable when the original instrument is actually before the Court of law and the deficiency in stamp with penalty is paid by the party seeking to rely upon the document. Clearly secondary evidence either by way of oral evidence of the contents of the unstamped document or the copy of it covered by Section 63 of the Indian Evidence Act would not fulfil the requirements of the proviso which enjoins upon the authority to receive nothing in evidence except the instrument itself. Section 35 is not concerned with any copy of an instrument and a party can only be allowed to rely on a document which is an instrument for the purpose of Section 35. 'Instrument' is defined in Section 2 (14) as including every document by which any right or liability is, or purports to be created, transferred, limited, extended, extinguished or recorded. There is no scope for inclusion of a copy of a document as an instrument for the purpose of the Stamp Act.

14. If Section 35 only deals with original instruments and not copies Section 36 cannot be so interpreted as to allow secondary evidence of an instrument to have its benefit. The words "an instrument" in Section 36 must have the same meaning as that in Section 35. The legislature only relented from the strict provisions of Section 35 in cases where the original instrument was admitted in evidence without objection at the initial stage of a suit or proceeding. In other words, although the objection is based on the insufficiency of the stamp affixed to the document, a party who has a right to object to the reception of it must do so when the document is first tendered. Once the time for raising objection to the admission of the documentary evidence is passed, no objection based on the same ground can be raised at a later stage. But this in no way extends the applicability of Sec. 36 to secondary evidence adduced or sought to be adduced in proof of the contents of a document which is unstamped or insufficiently stamped.

15. The above is our view on the question of admissibility of secondary evidence of a document which is unstamped or insufficiently stamped, as if the matter were res integra. It may be noted however that the course of decisions in India in the Indian High Courts, barring one or two exceptions, have consistently taken the same view.

16. One of the earliest decisions is the judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Raja of Bobbili v. Inuganti China Sitaramaswami Garu, (1900) ILR 23 Mad 49. In this case a suit was brought by the Raja of Bobbili to obtain the proprietary possession of an estate once belonging to the family. The original defendant was the widow of a son of the sister of the plaintiff's paternal grandfather, a former Raja of Bobbili, by whom the estate, the subject of dispute was granted by a deed of April 5, 1848 to a cousin who had then married the then Raja's sister. The donee died in 1872, and his widow thereupon restored the estate to the Raja on the footing that the grant had been only for her husband's life. The Raja then granted the estate to another cousin who died in the same year. This was the husband of the original defendant. It was necessary for the Raja to show that the grant of 1848 was absolute and unconditional. The deed of grant was however not forthcoming having been lost. The question was whether the draft, or a copy, of the instrument tendered as secondary evidence of its contents when the original instrument was shown to have been insufficiently stamped, could be subjected to the penalty prescribed by Section 34 of the Indian Stamp Act, 1879 as a preliminary to its being admissible in evidence. The respondent denied that such a deed was ever executed and averred that the gift consisted in transferring the estate to the donee's name in the register, upon the footing that the estate was to revert to the donor, in the event of the donee leaving no heir male of his body. At the trial the plaintiff offered in evidence what purported to be an unauthenticated copy and the defendant objected to the admission of the same on the ground that it was the copy of a document which was insufficiently stamped. The District Judge refused to receive the document or allow it to be proved and dismissed the suit. The appeal to the High Court of Madras was also unsuccessful, the learned Judges of the High Court holding that:

"the copy should not be admitted on payment of a penalty, for the provision of the Stamp Act regarding penalty (Section 39 of Act 1 of 1879) prescribes that such payment shall be endorsed on the document and presupposes that the document is forthcoming".

Before the Judicial Committee Counsel for the appellant admitted that he was not in a position to dispute that the original deed of gift dated 1848 had not been sufficiently stamped in terms of the Madras Regulation XIII of 1816 and that he would be unable to maintain his claim for the estate unless he was permitted to prove the copy of the deed and use it as secondary evidence either on due payment of a penalty in Court, or upon its endorsement by the Collector. He based his right to that remedy on the provisions of the Stamp Act of 1879. The Judicial Committee held on the construction of the said Act that the judgment appealed from was correct observing:

"These clauses throughout deal with, and exclusively refer to the admission as evidence of original documents which, at the time of their execution, were not stamped at all, or were insufficiently stamped. It is only upon production of the original writ, that the Collector has the power given him, or the duty imposed upon him, of assessing and charging the penalty, a duty which he must, in that case, perform by writing an indorsement upon the writ submitted to him, which then, and not till then, becomes probative in law".

Reference was made to Section 33 of the Act of 1879 which is in pari materia with Section 33 of the Act of 1899. Section 34 of the Act of 1879 was on the same lines as the present

Section 35. The Board further held that the effect of granting the remedy which the appellant maintained he was entitled to would be to add to the Act of 1879, a provision which it did not contain, and which the Legislature of India, if the matter had been brought under their notice, might possibly have declined to enact.

17. More than sixty years after the above decision this Court observed that the law laid down there was well settled and that a copy of an instrument could not be validated: State of Bihar v. Karam Chand Thapar & Bros. Ltd., (1962) 1 SCR 827 = (AIR 1962 SC 110). It is not necessary to examine the facts of that case except to note that the contention put forward was whether an instrument i. e., an award received in Court which had been prepared in triplicate, the other two having been sent to the parties, was an original instrument which could be used by the payment of stamp duty under Section 35 of the Stamp Act and validated. This Court held that although the document sent to the Court was marked as a certified copy, it was in reality an original instrument for the purpose of the Stamp Act.

18. The above judgment shows that if the document tendered in Court was not an original instrument but a copy the decision would have been otherwise. However we may point out that the passage which occurs at page 835 of the report (reproduced hereinafter in part) as being quoted from the decision of the Judicial Committee is not to be found in their Lordships' judgment. The latter portion of the passage occurs in the judgment of the Madras High Court in Thaji Beebi v. Tirumalappa Pillai, (1907) ILR 30 Mad 386 at p. 387, but this does not in any way detract from the weight of the opinion expressed by a Bench of five judges of this Court.

19. In Thaji Beebi's case, (1907) ILR 30 Mad 386 (supra) the plaintiff sued upon a "cadjan" mortgage which was said to be in possession of the first defendant whose ancestors were alleged to have created the mortgage in favour of the plaintiff's ancestors. The first defendant denied the existence of any such deed. The plaintiff examined two witnesses to prove the mortgage one of whom stated that he had attested the document which was unstamped. Plaintiffs led oral evidence to prove the mortgage and also put in a petition by the first defendant's ancestor in which the mortgage was admitted. No objection was taken by the defendants to the reception of the secondary evidence. The trial court found the mortgage proved but dismissed the suit on the defendants' plea that the plaintiffs' ancestors had sold away the lands. On appeal the District Judge upheld the decision on the ground that the trial court ought not to have received secondary evidence of the mortgage. The High Court dismissed the Second Appeal on the same ground. The question as to whether it was open to the plaintiff to rely on the oral evidence of the alleged execution of the instrument and the alleged passing of possession of the property under that instrument in order to show that that possession operated to create by prescription only the title of a mortgage in the defendants was answered in the negative by observing:

"To hold otherwise would be to give some effect to the unstamped instrument inasmuch as it would necessarily connect the possession with the contents of the document relating thereto; and that would be contrary to the express provision of Section 35 of the Stamp Act which lays down that an instrument chargeable with duty shall not only not be admitted in evidence for any purpose by any person having by law or consent of parties authority to receive evidence, but also that it shall not be "acted upon" by any such person unless duly stamped."

20. The decisions of different High Courts make it quite clear that the cause of the non-production of the original instrument is immaterial i. e. whether it was lost or whether it was destroyed or even if it was the allegation of the party seeking to prove its contents by alleging that the document was suppressed by his opponent.

21. In Chidambaram v. Mayyappan, AIR 1946 Mad 298 the plaintiffs produced an unstamped document as the basis of their claim. Before the trial commenced a mob invaded the court and set fire to it with the result that records of many cases including the record of the above case were destroyed. When the trial commenced the plaintiff sought to put in a copy of the document and it was objected to on the ground that the copy could not be stamped even on payment of penalty. The Subordinate Judge without admitting the document but leaving the question of its admissibility open until he had heard the arguments of counsel, marked it as an exhibit. In rejecting the plaintiffs' appeal the learned Judges of the Madras High Court referred to the decision of the Privy Council in Raja of Bobbili's case, (1900) ILR 23 Mad 49 (supra) and observed that the destruction by the mob's action put the plaintiffs in no better position.

22. Numerous decisions on the point had been referred to by the learned Judge hearing the Second Appeal in the High Court but we do not think it necessary to take note of them in any detail. Mr. Sen relied strongly on certain observations in a judgment of the Rangoon High Court in Maung Po Htoo v. Ma Ma Gyi, ILR 4 Rang 363 = (AIR 1927 Rang 109). This arose out of a suit for administration of the estate of one Daw Thet San and for a declaration that a deed of gift executed by him was void. The District Court found that the deed of gift was void as being a testamentary disposition and granted a declaration to that effect. In appeal to the High Court the decision that the deed of gift was void was not contested and the only question for decision was whether the adoptions mentioned therein were proved. The appellants wished to use a certain part of the deed as evidence to prove that the plaintiff and one Tun Sein were not adopted while the respondents claimed that it could not be admitted in evidence for any purpose. The deed itself was not produced which admittedly had been in possession of Po Htoo who put in a certified copy alleging that he had lost the original. On a consideration of the entire evidence the District Judge found that the original deed of gift was insufficiently stamped. This decision was not questioned before the High Court but the appellant claimed that it could not be admissible in evidence and was not to be considered for any purpose. Referring to the decision of the Judicial Committee and the passage which we have quoted already the Judges of the Rangoon High Court remarked that their Lordships' observation (quoted by us earlier) that:

"Those clauses throughout deal with, and exclusively refer to, the admission as evidence of original documents, which, at the time of their execution, were not stamped at all, or were insufficiently stamped" did not intend to go as far as their words suggested. According to the Rangoon Judges:

"..... Section 35 of the present Act, read with the provisions of the Evidence Act, excludes both the original instrument itself and secondary evidence of its contents. Similarly, under Section 36, when either the original instrument itself or secondary evidence of its contents has in fact been admitted, that admission may not be called in question in the same suit, on the ground that the instrument was not duly stamped". In this view, they held that the terms of the deed of gift could be considered.

23. With all respect to the learned Judges it appears to us that both the premises of the last sentence of the above quotation and the conclusion based on the same are incorrect. Neither under the decision of the Judicial Committee nor the express words of Section 34 of the Stamp Act of 1879 mentioned in that judgment (present Section 36) allow the leading of secondary evidence of the contents of an insufficiently stamped document.

24. As we have expressed our view already Section 35 imposed a bar on the reception of any but the original instrument and forbade the reception of secondary evidence. Section 36 only lifted that bar in the case of an original unstamped or insufficiently stamped document to which no exception as to admissibility was taken at the first stage. It did not create any exemption in the case of secondary evidence which a copy would undoubtedly be. In the case before the Judicial Committee the copy was one other than the final draft of the original document which had been lost through no fault on the part of the person intending to prove it and yet it was held that the Stamp Act ruled out its admissibility in evidence.

25. For the same reason we must hold that the dictum in Satyavati v. Pallayya, AIR 1937 Mad 431 at p. 432 that:

"Section 36 will also apply when secondary evidence of an instrument not duly stamped had been wrongly admitted". is not good law.

26. Learned counsel for the appellant also relied on the decision in Ponnuswami v. Kailasam, AIR 1947 Mad 422. In this case a suit was filed for recovery of two loans which were evidenced as two documents described as hand letters which were admittedly unstamped. Before the trial stamp duty and penalty was levied by the Court on the footing that they were bonds. The defendant admitted the execution of the two documents but pleaded that in substitution of his liability under them he had executed a promissory note and had made payments towards the same leaving a balance of Rs. 40/- only payable on the loan. Neither party let in any evidence. The defendant raised the only contention that the suit was not sustainable on the two documents because they are inadmissible in evidence for any purpose. The learned Judge in revision took the view that it was not necessary for him to decide as to the exact nature of the two documents to determine whether they were admissible in evidence but he went on to add:

"Assuming that these two documents should not have been legally admitted in evidence, nevertheless it is contended for the petitioner that as the defendant had admitted the execution of the documents and had only pleaded a substitution of liability by the execution of another promissory note and a partial discharge towards it there was no necessity for the plaintiff to adduce proof of his claim by seeking to get the two documents admitted in evidence. In other words the plaintiff will be entitled to a decree on the failure of the defendant to make out the plea set up by him in defence".

We do not think this judgment helps the appellant. If a suit is based on a document which is admittedly unstamped the insufficiency of the stamp is cured by the payment of penalty. The learned Judge never meant to lay down, as is contended for by Mr. Sen, that the defect of insufficiency of stamp is cured by the admission of execution of the document. The learned Judge of the Madras High Court relied on an earlier decision of that Court in Alimane Sahiba v. Subbarayudu, AIR 1932 Mad 963 wherein a suit had been filed on a promissory note which bore a stamp paper but the same was not cancelled. The defendant admitted the execution of the promissory note sued on but pleaded discharge. Subsequently at the stage of the argument the defendant raised a legal objection to the maintainability of the suit on the ground that the stamp affixed to the promissory note had not been cancelled as required by Section 12 of the Stamp Act and contended that the promissory note should accordingly be treated as unstamped for any purpose. In Alimane Sahiba's case, AIR 1932 Mad 693 (supra) the learned Judge stated in clear terms that:

"Under the provisions of Section 12 (of the Stamp Act) therefore it must be taken that this promissory note was not duly stamped and accordingly if any question arose as to its admissibility in evidence the same may have to be held to be inadmissible". The learned Judge however took the view that as facts admitted need not be proved the circumstance that the promissory note was not admissible in evidence is immaterial for the purpose of this case. No doubt the learned Judge added (see at p. 696):

"How when once this document has been admitted in evidence and marked as an exhibit then having regard to the provisions of Section 36, Stamp Act, its admissibility could not be re-opened on the ground of the document not having been duly stamped. That position being clear under the provisions of Section 36, Stamp Act, the whole discussion would thus seem to be entirely unnecessary and for no purpose, so far as the facts of this case are concerned".

It was wholly unnecessary, as was pointed out by the learned judge himself, to consider the question of admissibility under Section 36 of the Act. His decision really rested on the conclusion that a fact which is admitted did not require proof.

27. The case is not an authority for the proposition that secondary evidence of a document is to be treated on the same footing as an unstamped or insufficiently stamped original document.

28. In the result the appeal is dismissed with costs.

29. The respondents moved an application C. M. P. No. 87 of 1971

under Order 47, Rule 5 of the Rules of this Court for a direction that a relief for future mesne profits from the date of the suit be added to the decree. On the facts of this case we cannot allow the application. The respondents in their own plaint had stated that they would file a suit for future mesne profits and it was because of this that the Courts below did not grant any such relief.

Appeal dismissed.

(V 58 C 219)

J. C. SHAH AND A. N. GROVER, JJ.

The Nagar Panchayat, Una, Appellant v. The Una Taluka Sahakari Kharid Vechan Sangh Ltd., Respondent.

Civil Appeal No. 1059 of 1970, D/- 17-9-1970.

Panchayats — Gujarat Panchayat Act 1961 (6 of 1962), Section 307 (c) and (k) — Saurashtra Terminal Tax and Octroi Ordinance (1949), Section 4 — Power of Municipality to collect Octroi under Rules framed under S. 4 — Replacement of Municipality by Nagar Panchayat by Act of 1961 — Ordinance continued to be applicable to Nagar Panchayat by virtue of Section 307 (k), Nagar Panchayat held was entitled to collect octroi — Special Civil Application No. 387 of 1968, D/- 18-2-1970 (Guj), Reversed.

When Section 307 (k) of the Act saved the operation of all laws and rules, etc., other than the Municipal law the intention of the legislature was precise and definite and it is futile to suggest that the Ordinance was not covered by this saving clause. The object underlying Clause (c) of Section 307 was to vest in the Nagar Panchayat the entire Municipal fund including the arrears of taxes and fees as also the powers and rights relating thereto which previously vested in the Municipality. The octroi which was being collected under the Ordinance clearly fell within the ambit of Clause (c). The power and the right, therefore, had passed to the Nagar Panchayat and it was fully entitled to exercise it. Even if in the rules framed under the Ordinance certain expression created a difficulty that could not defeat the right and the power conferred on the Nagar Panchayat by the Act of realising and collecting the octroi which was being done under the Ordinance as saved by Clause (k) of Section 307. Mr. D. V. Patel, Sr. Advocate, (Mr. Vineet Kumar Advocate, with him), for Appellant; Mr. I. N. Shroff, Advocate, for Respondent.

GROVER, J:— This appeal by certificate arises out of a writ petition filed by the respondent which is a Society registered under the Bombay Co-operative Societies Act, 1925 challenging the collection of octroi by the appellant which is the Una Nagar Panchayat.

2. The appellant is a local body constituted under the Gujarat Panchayat Act 1961, hereinafter called the Act, which came into force with effect from April 1, 1963. Prior to its enactment the Bombay Municipal Act 1901, as applied to Saurashtra, was in force in that region of the present State of Gujarat. Under its provisions the Una Municipality was constituted. It was collecting octroi on commodities which were imported into the Municipal limits of Una under the Saurashtra Terminal Tax and Octroi Ordinance, 1949. Under Sec 3 of that Ordinance the Government could impose the tax mentioned thereunder in the cities and towns specified or included later in Schedule I. One of these taxes was a terminal tax on goods imported into or exported from the terminal tax limits. Octroi as defined by Section 2 (2) included a terminal tax. Section 4 gave the power to the Government to make rules by notification for the purpose of carrying out the purposes of the Ordinance. Rules were framed under Section 4 in the Gujarati language. It was provided therein that the collection of Octroi and terminal tax would be done through the Sudhrai of the area entered in the schedule to the ordinance. It is apparent that under the Ordinance it was the State Government which imposed the octroi or the terminal tax in the cities and towns specified in the Schedule and the Sudhrai was only an agency for collection thereof.

3. By a notification dated December 12, 1949 issued under the Ordinance the Government of the erstwhile State of Saurashtra included the town of Una in the Schedule to the Ordinance. Thus octroi and terminal tax became leviable in that town on certain commodities imported there. Section 9 of the Ordinance must also be noticed. According to it the Government was to maintain a separate fund in respect of all monies received by it on account of any of the taxes specified in Section 3 for every city or town or local area specified in Schedule I and such fund after deducting therefrom the expenditure incurred in connection with the levy and collection of such tax was to be applied for the benefit of the inhabitants of the city or town or local area for which it was maintained. The purpose of levying the octroi duty or terminal tax under the Ordinance clearly was to add to the revenue of the local body for the benefit of the people residing within the jurisdiction of that particular local body.

4. So long as Una Municipality remained a municipality as constituted under the Act of 1901, there was no difficulty in the matter of collection of the octroi. After the Act came into force the Nagar Panchayat replaced the Municipality in Una. It continued to collect the octroi till 1967 when the respondent, for the first time, raised an objection that it was not entitled to do so. As the Nagar Panchayat persisted in making the collection a petition under Article 226 of the Constitution was filed in the Gujarat High Court. It has been held by the High Court that since in the Rules promulgated under the Ordinance in Gujarati the collecting agency has been described as Sudhrai which means a municipality the Nagar Panchayat was not competent to collect the octroi under the Ordinance as it did not fall within the meaning or definition of the term "Municipality".

5. In our judgment the High Court was in error in coming to the conclusion that the Nagar Panchayat was not entitled to carry on the work of collection of octroi under the Ordinance even though the ordinance which imposed liability to pay remained in force. Under Section 307 of the Act where any local area was declared to be a gram or nagar under Section 9 and if that area was co-extensive with the limits of a Municipal district or Municipal borough the municipality functioning in such local area was to cease to exist and in its place an Interim Gram Panchayat was to be constituted. According to Cl. (c) of that section the unexpended balance of the Municipal fund that property including arrears of rates, taxes and fees belonging to the Municipality and all rights and powers which rested in the municipality were to vest in the Interim Gram or Nagar Panchayat fund until a new panchayat was constituted in accordance with the provisions of Section 308 (1). Clause (g) provided that all officers and servants in the employ of the Municipality were to become officers and servants of the Interim Panchayat under the Act. Clause (k) was in the following terms:—

"Any law (other than the Municipal law) or any rule, by-law, notification or order issued under such law, which was applicable to and in force in the local area immediately before it was declared as a gram or nagar under Section 9, shall continue to apply to and to be in force in the local area until it is superseded". Section 308 dealt with the term of office of an Interim Panchayat and the steps to be taken to hold election for a new Gram or Nagar Panchayat. The appellant in the present case is indisputably the duly constituted Nagar Panchayat.

6. Section 307 of the Act leaves no room for doubt that wherever a Nagar Panchayat was constituted in place of the Municipality the Municipality disappeared and all its funds including the right to realise taxes etc., vested in the Nagar Panchayat. In other words it was the Nagar Panchayat which was to function as the local body in the area previously constituted as a Municipality. Clause (k) of Section 307 clearly saved all laws or rules which were applicable to the local area which formed a municipality and they were to continue to apply and to remain in force in the area for which the Nagar Panchayat came to be constituted. By no stretch of reasoning could it be said that the Ordinance did not become applicable to the cities and towns specified in Schedule I which came to be constituted as Grams or Nagars under the Act. It is true that no fresh rules were promulgated under the Ordinance adapting the new terminology but even about the word Sudhrai it is a moot point whether it means only a municipality as constituted under the Act of 1901.

7. An argument was raised before the High Court that the Gujarati expression "Sudhrai" meant any local-self governing authority. The High Court observed that this expression as used in the Octroi rules could not have a wider connotation than the expression "municipality" in Section 9 of the Ordinance. When Section 307 (k) of the Act saved the operation of all laws and rules, etc., other than the municipal law the intention of the legislature was precise and definite and it is futile to suggest that the Ordinance was not covered by this saving Clause. The object underlying Clause (c) of Section 307 was to vest in the Nagar Panchayat the entire Municipal fund including the arrears of taxes and fees as also the powers and rights relating thereto which previously vested in the Municipality. The octroi which was being collected under the Ordinance clearly fell within the ambit of Clause (c). The power and the right, therefore, had passed to the Nagar Panchayat and it was fully entitled to exercise it. Even if in the rules framed under the Ordinance certain expression created a difficulty that could not defeat the right and the power conferred on the Nagar Panchayat by the Act of realising and collecting the octroi which was being done under the Ordinance as saved by Clause (k) of Sec. 307.

8. If on account of the absence of proper adaptation in the rules made under the Ordinance any difficulty is being experienced in the collection of octroi it is always open to the State Government to make those clarifications and adaptations and indeed it would be expedient and desirable to do so. So long as the new rules are not framed under the Ordinance or adaptations are not made thereunder the Nagar Panchayat can certainly make the collection through the officers who discharge the same duties as were being performed by their counterparts mentioned in the rules. This is what seems to have been done up till 1967 without any objection by any one.

9. In the result the appeal succeeds and it is allowed with costs in this Court as also the High Court. Appeal allowed.

BHARGAVA, J.: — The predecessors-in-interest of plaintiff-respondents 1 to 3 gave, in 1895, land, bearing Serial Nos. 503 and 506 of Asarva within the limits of Ahmedabad Municipal Corporation, on lease for a period of 49 years at an annual rent of Rs. 199/-, to three persons, Sha Ramchandra Ambaram, Pardesi Sukhlal Anandram and Mehta Bogha Mugatram. These original lessees, during the currency of the lease, made transfers of their rights and also granted sub-leases. A number of Chawls and some other buildings were constructed on the land and some of them were let out on rent. In 1945, the lessors, after serving notice on the occupants to give vacant possession, filed a suit for recovery of possession. The suit was decreed on 8th July, 1946 on the basis of a consent decree as against some of the occupants including the four defendant-appellants. In the agreement, on the basis of which the decree was passed, it was agreed that the defendant-appellants will continue in possession of the property for a period of five years and will hand over possession after the expiry of this period of five years. For this period, they undertook to pay mesne profits every month at various rates on the lands in their possession. Between them, the four appellants were required to pay @ Rs. 227-10-0 per mensem making up an annual amount of mesne profits of Rs. 2731-8-0. Similar terms were included in the consent decree against other defendants who joined the compromise on the basis of which the decree was passed on 8th July, 1946. The remaining defendants in the suit entered into a later compromise and, as a result, another consent decree was passed on 28th January, 1949 against those defendants. Under this decree, these remaining defendants were also entitled to continue in possession for a period of five years from the date of the decree, but were required to pay mesne profits for this period. All the defendants governed by the two decrees dated 8th July, 1946 and 28th January, 1949, had to pay between them mesne profits monthly which worked out to an amount of Rs. 7,314-8-0 per annum. Before the expiry of the period of five years prescribed by either of the two decrees, the Custodian of Evacuee Property, in 1950, took possession of all the properties, as one of the decree-holders had become an evacuee. After the property was released by the Custodian of Evacuee Property, an application was filed by the decree-holders on 26th March, 1953 for execution of the consent decree dated 8th July, 1946 and, in that execution, possession was sought against the appellants of the property which was in their possession. Subsequently, a number of suits were filed for recovery of mesne profits also. The Execution Court directed eviction of the appellants after overruling the various objections raised by them in the execution proceedings. The decision of the Execution Court on the objections taken by the appellants was challenged in appeal before the District Judge, in second appeal before a single Judge of the High Court of Gujarat, and by a Letters Patent appeal before a Division Bench. All the Courts rejected the objections raised by the appellants and upheld the order of the Execution Court directing delivery of possession. It is against the judgment of the Division Bench in Letters Patent appeal in this execution that the appellants have come up to this Court in this appeal by special leave.

2. It is unnecessary for us to mention all the various objections that were taken at various stages by the appellants in the Execution Court, in the Court of the District Judge, or before the single Judge or the Division Bench in the High Court. Only three of the points raised have been urged before us and, therefore, we are called upon to deal with these three points only.

3. The first point raised is that the decree which was passed on 8th July, 1946 was a nullity, because it was passed in contravention of Section 11 (1) of the Bombay Rent Restriction Act No. XVI of 1939 (hereinafter referred to as "the Act"). This objection has been overruled by the High Court on the ground that the provisions of the Act were not attracted by the lease in question on the expiry of which the suit for ejectment was decreed under the consent decree dated 8th July, 1946. Counsel appearing for the appellants urged that the terms of the decree passed as well as the terms contained in the lease-deed of 1895 show that the Act was applicable because the land, to which the suit for ejectment related, was covered by the definition of "premises" to which the Act applies. The expression "premises" is defined in Section 4 (2) of the Act as meaning—

(a) any building or part of a building let separately for any purpose whatever, including any land let therewith, or

(b) any land let separately for the purpose of being used principally for business or trade.

Admittedly, the lease of 1895 was not in respect of any building or part of a building let separately for any purpose whatever. Reliance was placed on Section 4 (2) (b) of the Act on the contention that the land had been let for the purpose of being used principally for business or trade. Having gone through the documents relied upon by counsel for the appellants, we are unable to accept this submission. In the plaint of the suit, as well as in the decree dated 8th July, 1946, there is no mention of the purpose for which the land was let out by the lease of 1895. Reliance was, however, placed on one of the pleadings in the plaint which had been reproduced in the decree in which the plaintiff-respondents recited one of the terms of the lease in the following words:—

"On the expiry of the period of 49 years, the land shall be handed over without raising any dispute or objection or causing any obstruction, after removing whatever structures that might have been erected thereon and after making it as clear as it is." The argument was that this pleading indicates that the land was let out for making structures and those structures could only be utilised by being let out on rent. This purpose would constitute business or trade. We are unable to see any justification for such an inference. The mere fact that there was a mention that structures that might have been erected will be removed can in no way lead to a reasonable conclusion that the principal purpose of the lease was the use of the land for business or trade.

4. Reference, in this connection, was also made to the terms of the lease of 1895; but we are unable to hold that it establishes the case of the appellants that the lease was taken principally for the purpose of using the land for business or trade. All that the lease mentions is that it is for constructing houses and, at a later stage, there is a mention that "in the said fields, the lessees could construct houses in any manner or use it in any manner". The other parts of the lease, on which reliance has been placed are as follows:—

"1. On the land of those fields we can build houses in any manner and we will receive income thereof and you will not raise any dispute or obstruction in respect thereof. We can spend any amount on the construction of those houses which we will not demand from you for whatever reason nor we will have the right to deduct from rent payable to you.

2. If any houses are constructed thereon, we will remove the superstructures. If we do not remove the structures then you will be the owners of the said structures. If you take them, then we and our heirs and representatives will not object".

We are unable to find even in these quotations from the lease any mention that the land is going to be used principally for the purpose of business or trade. The lease does mention that it was being taken for constructing houses. There was no mention at all, however, of the manner in which the constructed houses were to be utilised. Further, there is a clear option given to the lessees that they could use the land in any manner if they did not construct any houses. These are terms on the basis of which it cannot be said that the land was being let out for business purposes.

5. The submission of counsel for the appellants was that, if the purpose was to construct houses and let them out on rent, that would constitute the use of the land for the purpose of business inasmuch as the lessees would be earning income from letting out those houses. We are unable to accept this submission, because we do not think that the word "business" or "trade" used in the definition of "premises" in Section 4 (2) (b) of the Act comprehends within it a lease which is merely for constructing houses. Learned counsel cited before us a number of decisions of Indian and English Courts, including decisions of the Privy Council and this Court, in which the scope of the word "business" was interpreted. That interpretation was given in connection with the word "business" as used either in income-tax law or in the terms of a covenant or the Companies Act, etc. We do not consider that it will be at all profitable to refer to them when interpreting the word "business" or "trade" as used in Section 4 (2) (b) of the Act, because none of those interpretations will cover a case similar to the one before us, where the lease was merely a permissive one giving a right to the lessees to construct houses and let them out or to use the land in any manner. When the purpose of the lease was expressed in this way, it is impossible to hold that the principal use, to which the land was to be put by the lessees, was business or trade. As a consequence of this interpretation, it has to be held that the Act was not applicable to the lease of 1895 and, therefore, no question arises of the decree of 8th July, 1946 being invalid on the ground of contravening Section 11 (1) of the Act.

6. The second point urged by learned counsel was that, by the consent decree itself, a new tenancy was created which was to continue for five years and, in the meantime, the Bombay Rents Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, 1947 came into force and the appellants were protected from ejection under the provisions of that Act. The consent decree does not state that a new tenancy is being created. The argument was that the terms of that consent decree should be interpreted as indicating an intention to create a new tenancy. We are unable to find any such terms. On the face of it, all that the consent decree envisaged was that, though the judgment-debtors were liable to immediate eviction, the decree-holders agreed to let them continue in possession for a period of five years. Since this concession was being granted as a special case, the decree-holders insisted that mesne profits should be paid at a much higher rate so much so that between all the defendants, governed by the two decrees of 8th July, 1946 and 28th January, 1949, the amount payable as mesne profits became Rs. 7,314-8-0 per annum which had no relation with the original rent of Rs. 199/- per annum for the entire land fixed by the lease of 1895. In fact, the decree-holders sought further protection by requiring the judgment-debtors to pay the mesne profits in monthly instalments, and the instalments were so fixed that the mesne profits due for five years were to be paid within a period of three years. There was the further clause that, in case of default of payment of the mesne profits, the defaulting judgment-debtors could be immediately called upon to deliver possession. These terms can, in no way, be interpreted as creating a new tenancy constituting the decree-holders as landlords and the judgment-debtors as their tenants. The terms of the consent decree neither constituted a tenancy nor a licence. All that the decree-holders did was to allow the judgment-debtors to continue in possession for five years on payment of mesne profits as a concession for entering into a compromise. The argument advanced must, therefore, be rejected.

7. Reference was made by learned counsel for the appellants, in support of his argument, to a decision of the Bombay High Court in Gurupadappa Shivlingappa Itgi v. Sayad Akbar Sayad Budan Kadri, 52 Bom LR 143=(AIR 1952 Bom 252) but that case, in our opinion, has no application. In that case, in the consent decree itself, the first clause was that the defendant admits that he is a monthly tenant of the plaintiff and is to continue in possession till January, 31, 1948. This clause specifically and clearly, in the language used, made it manifest that the defendant was a monthly tenant and was to continue in that capacity in possession. It was in these circumstances that it was held that a new tenancy had been created from the date of the consent decree. In the case before us, the terms of the consent decree are in no way comparable with the terms used in the consent decree in that case. The language used in the consent decree in the present case contains no indication of any intention to create a tenancy, so that the Bombay Rent Control Act, 1947 could never apply to the case of the appellants.

8. The third point raised by learned counsel was that, since there was one single suit based on the lease of 1895 for ejectment of persons in possession, there could be only one single decree in that suit and the Court was incompetent to pass two separate decrees on 8th July, 1946 and 28th January, 1949. Counsel, in this connection, relied on the provisions of Rules 1 and 12 of Order XX of the Code of Civil Procedure which relate to the pronouncement of judgment and the Court passing a decree in a suit. These rules have really no relevance. On the other hand, Rule 3 of Order XXIII, C. P. C., clearly envisages a decree being passed in respect of part of the subject-matter of the suit on a compromise, and Rule 6 of Order XII, C. P. C., permits the passing of a judgment at any stage without waiting for determination of other questions. Thus, it is clear that, in the same suit, there can be more than one decree passed at different stages. In the present case, the first decree of 8th July, 1946 was based on a compromise between the plaintiffs and some of the defendants, while the second decree dated 28th January, 1949 decided the rights of the remaining defendants. The two decrees were separate and independent and neither of them could be treated as a nullity.

9. In these circumstances, the Execution Court was right in rejecting all the objections raised by the appellants and in directing delivery of possession. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

M/s. N. N. Keswani and K. K. Bhatia, Advocates, for Appellants; Dr. V. A. Seyid Muhammad, Sr. Advocate, (Mr. S. P. Nayar, Advocate with him), for Respondents.

GROVER, J.: — This appeal by certificate from a judgment of the Punjab High Court (Circuit Bench), Delhi arises out of a suit filed by Harishankar Khanna, who is now dead, for a declaration that his discharge from service by the officer Commanding Engineering Stores Depot (O. C. E. S. D.) Karachi dated July 15, 1946 was illegal, without jurisdiction and ineffective and that it should be declared that he was continuing in service. The suit was decreed by the trial Court principally on the ground that he had not been dismissed by the proper authority and that the provisions of Section 240 of the Government of India Act, 1935, had been contravened. The appeal of the respondent to the Additional District Judge failed. The High Court, however, reversed the decision of the Courts below and dismissed the suit.

2. The case of the appellant as laid in the plaint was that he had joined the Central Provisions Office (C. P. O.) as a Clerk in December, 1941 and in March, 1945 he was absorbed in the office of the Engineer-in-chief, Army Headquarter as an Upper Division Clerk. In December, 1945 he was transferred to the office of the Officer Commanding Engineering Stores Depot, Karachi. In March, 1946 he was granted 15 days leave with permission to go to Delhi. During that period he fell ill and was obliged to take sick leave under medical advice. While he was ailing and confined to bed the O. C. E. S. D. Karachi summarily, illegally and against rules discharged him by means of a letter dated July 24, 1946 although his application for leave was supported by proper medical certificate. He made representations but was only given one month's pay in lieu of notice in the year, 1951. The main point raised in the plaint was that the order of discharge had been made by an authority that was different from the appointing authority. In the written statement it was admitted that Khanna had been granted 16 days leave from March 1946 to April 9, 1946. He subsequently applied for extension of leave from April 10, 1946 to June 25, 1946. He was due back for duty on June 26, 1946 but on expiry of that leave also he neither reported back for duty nor submitted any application for further extension of leave. He was consequently discharged from service with effect from July 15, 1946 in accordance with Article 229, Civil Service Regulations. It was claimed that under that regulation by which the civilians working in the Defence Establishment were governed no notice of discharge was necessary.

3. The main issue which required determination was whether the order of discharge or dismissal of Khanna was wrong, invalid and ultra vires. It was found that Section 240

(1) of the Government of India Act had not been complied with inasmuch as Khanna had been discharged from service by an authority subordinate to that by which he had been appointed and that he had also not been afforded a reasonable opportunity of showing cause against his discharge or removal in terms of Section 240 (3). The suit was held to be within time and a decree was granted by the trial Court that the discharge of Khanna from service was void and inoperative and that he continued to be in service of the Union of India. In the appeal of the respondent the Additional District Judge felt that it was very likely that Khanna had sent an application for extension of leave for the period beyond June 25, 1946 and his application somehow got mislaid in the office of the Engineer-in-Chief. As he had not been given any opportunity to show cause against his proposed dismissal the view of the trial Judge was upheld and the decree was confirmed.

4. When the matter was taken in appeal to the High Court it was heard along with other appeals including the companion appeal (C. A. 1719/67) of Lekh Raj Khurana the judgment in which has been delivered today. On the question of the applicability of Article 311 of the Constitution the High Court expressed the same view which has already been mentioned in the aforesaid judgment. It is, however, difficult to understand how Art. 311 could be applied to an order which was made prior to the coming into force of the Constitution. But in the judgment of the High Court it is stated that the suit of Khanna was based on breach of the rules (presumably Civil Service Regulations) and not on Section 240 of the Government of India Act. It had been contended on his behalf that according to the rules a notice ought to have been issued to him to show cause against the proposed order of discharge. The High Court, however, held that the breach of any rule was not justiciable. In Lakh Raj Khurana's case we have overruled that view and it is not possible to dispose of the matter on the ground that the breach of the rules was not justiciable.

5. No rule appears to have been specifically relied upon before the trial Court or the District Court. Our attention has been invited to the Civil Service Regulations. In Chaudri's Compilation of these Regulations, Vol. 1, it is stated in Article 1 as follows:—

(a) "These Regulations are intended to define the conditions under which salaries and leave and pension and other allowances, are earned by service in the Civil Departments and in what manner they are calculated. They do not deal otherwise than indirectly and incidentally with matters relating to recruitment, promotion, official duties, discipline or the like". In Article 1 (b) it has been stated that the Regulations have been framed so as to embody all orders in force affecting the acting allowance, the leave allowance, the leave, the pension and the travelling allowance of officers, the conditions of whose service in respect of these matters are not defined by the Army and Marine Regulations. According to the respondent the case of Khanna fell under Article 229 of the Civil Services Regulations. This Article is as follows:—

An Officer who remains absent after the end of his leave is entitled to no allowance for the period of such absence, and ceases to have a lien on any appointment—

(i) if his leave was furlough without medical certificate, — immediately, and

(ii) if it was furlough on medical certificate or vacation or privilege leave, — after a week. In the case of officers to whom exception (ii) under Article 251 applies the week commences from the fifteen days mentioned therein".

It is pointed out that as the Officer concerned ceased to have a lien on any appointment in the circumstances of the case his discharge was almost automatic even though an order had to be made to that effect. If the case of the respondent is established that Khanna remained absent after the end of the leave then in view of Article 229 the order of discharge would be perfectly valid and legal. Now so far as the applicability of Section 240 of the Government of India Act is concerned that point was apparently not pressed before the High Court and it cannot be allowed to be raised now. No rule has been shown by which Khanna was governed which contained the same requirements as are to be found in sub-sections (2) and (3) of the above section regarding the authority which was competent to pass the order of discharge or the giving of a reasonable opportunity to show cause against the action proposed to be taken. The order of discharge had been made in view of Article 229 of the Civil Service Regulations and no such requirements exist therein.

6. As regards Article 229 of the Regulations even if it be assumed in favour of Khanna that he had sent his application in time for extension of leave supported by proper medical certificate, as is the evidence, he having died no declaration can now be made that he still continued to be in service. It is common ground that he was not a permanent employee and was holding a temporary post. All that he could, therefore, get was one month's pay in lieu of notice under Article 352 of the Regulations. It is not disputed that the same had in fact been paid to him in 1951.

7. The appeal thus fails and it is dismissed but in view of the entire circumstances the parties are left to bear their own costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Mr. A. S. R. Chari, Sr. Advocate, (Mr. R. Nagaratnam, Advocate, and M/s. Janendra Lal and B. R. Agarwal, Advocates of M/s. Gagrati and Co., with him), for Appellant; M/s. H. R. Khanna and B. D. Sharma, Advocates, for the Respondent.

VAIDIALINGAM, J.: — This appeal by the first accused, on certificate, is directed against the judgment of the Bombay High Court dated September 26, 1968, in Criminal Appeal No. 244 of 1967 confirming his conviction and sentence passed against him by the Presidency, Magistrate Mazgaon, Bombay for offences under S. 120-B, Indian Penal Code read with Section 135 of the Customs Act, 1962 (Act 52 of 1962) (hereinafter to be referred as the Act) and also under Section 135 of the Customs Act in respect of the articles claimed to have been recovered from his possession.

2. The short point that arises for consideration in this appeal is whether Section 24 of the Evidence Act is a bar to the admissibility in evidence of the statement Ex. T given by the appellant to the Customs Officers on a summons issued to him under Section 108 of the Act.

3. The appellant along with six others was charged under the sections mentioned above and after being found guilty was sentenced to undergo one year's rigorous imprisonment and to pay a fine of Rs. 2,000/- for the charges under Section 120-B Indian Penal Code read with Section 135 of the Act. He was also sentenced to undergo one year's rigorous imprisonment and to pay a fine of Rs. 2,000/- for the charge under Section 135 of the Act. The sentences were directed to run concurrently. In default of payment of fine, he was also sentenced to undergo further rigorous imprisonment for the period mentioned in the judgment of the Presidency Magistrate.

4. The case against the appellant was that he and several other persons entered into a conspiracy during the period from June, 1963 to the end of December, 1963 to smuggle wrist watches and other luxury goods such as nylon textiles, toilet requisites, playing cards, cigarette lighters, saffron, etc., from Dubai to India through Mechanised sailing vessel and land the said imported and smuggled goods surreptitiously at any coast near Bombay and then to bring the smuggled goods to Bombay by Motor Vehicles. It was further alleged that in pursuance to the said conspiracy such articles were actually smuggled in the month of December, 1963. The various parts played by the appellant along with the other accused had been given in the evidence of the prosecution witnesses. P. W. 19, Inspector in the Rummaging Division Town Intelligence in the Bombay Customs, on receipt of information in or about December 21, 1963 about the smuggling of the goods conducted searches in various places and seized several smuggled articles.

5. During the pendency of the trial, the third and the fifth accused died and the second accused who was present for some later (sic) absconded necessitating separation of his trial. Some other accused could not be traced at all. Therefore, the trial proceeded against the appellant and accused Nos. 4, 6 and 7. It is not necessary to refer to the pleas of accused Nos. 4, 6 and 7 as they have been acquitted of all the charges by the Presidency Magistrate. The appellant had filed a lengthy written statement on October 24, 1966 denying the charges levelled against him. He had stated that he was not in any manner concerned with any conspiracy. He also denied that any articles had been recovered by the Customs Officers from the houses mentioned by them and stated that in any event he had nothing to do with any of those articles. He pleaded that his brother Cama was inimical towards him and that the latter in connivance with the Customs authorities had foisted this criminal case against him making false allegations. The appellant alleged that he had left Bombay for Ajmer to pay his respects to the Darga on December 21, 1963 and returned to Bombay on January 2, 1964, when he was apprehended by the Customs authorities and kept in detention, in the first instance, till January 7, 1964. During this period of detention he was continuously harassed and interrogated by P. Ws. 5 and 19 and forced to put his signature on January 7, 1964 to a statement already got written and prepared by P. W. 5. He was threatened that if he did not put his signature on the said statement, his mother and another brother will be prosecuted. He further alleged that it was represented to him that the statement to which he was being asked to put his signature was intended only to be used against the second accused and no part of it was meant to be used against him. It may be stated at this stage that the statement recorded from the appellant by P. Ws. 5 and 19, on January 7, 1964 is Ex. T. The statement refers to various matters concerning his relationship with the other accused as well as his connection with several articles which had been seized and which were the subject of the charges.

6. We do not think it necessary to refer to Ex. T. in any great detail nor to the various seizures of articles made by the Customs authorities. It is enough to state that the conviction of the appellant has been substantially based on the confessional statement Ex. T. after finding independent corroboration furnished by other evidence on record in respect of the statements contained in Ex. T.

7. Objections were taken to the admissibility in evidence of Ex. T. on the ground that it is hit by Article 20 (3) and Sections 24 and 25 of the Evidence Act. All these objections were overruled both by the Presidency Magistrate as well as the High Court. The findings of the Presidency Magistrate and accepted by the High Court are that Ex. T. is a voluntary statement and it was a true disclosure made by the appellant. The allegation of the appellant that he was forced to put his signature to Ex. T. which had already been prepared by P. Ws. 5 and 19 and that he was induced to put his signature on the representation that it will be used only against the second accused and not against the appellant, was rejected. The further findings are that Ex. T. was a voluntary statement made by the appellant and that his plea that he was kept under illegal detention from January 2, 1964 to January 7, 1964 was false. It has also been found that Ex. T. is not hit either by Article 20 (3) or by Sections 24 and 25 of the Evidence Act.

8. The only contention that has been raised before us by Mr. A. S. R. Chari, learned counsel for the appellant is, that in view of Section 24 of the Evidence Act, Ex. T. the statement of the appellant recorded by the Customs authorities under the Act, is not admissible in evidence at the trial for the offences in respect of which the appellant was charged and tried. His further contention is that as the conviction has been based substantially on the statements contained in Ex. T. the conviction is illegal. The other contentions based on Article 20 (3) and Section 25 of the Evidence Act which were taken before the High Court have not been taken before us. In fact those contentions are no longer available to the appellant in view of the decisions of this Court. According to Mr. Chari when the statement Ex. T. was recorded by the Customs officials, the appellant was in the position of an accused. It is in evidence that P. W. 5, who recorded the statement warned the appellant that he was bound to state the truth as the officer was conducting a judicial proceeding to which the provisions of Sections 193 and 228, Indian Penal Code apply. This, according to the learned counsel, amounts to a threat and as the statement Ex. T. has been procured on the basis of such a threat, it is inadmissible in evidence.

9. On the other hand, Mr. H. R. Khanna, learned counsel for the State has referred us to the findings recorded by the Presidency Magistrate and accepted by the High Court regarding voluntary nature of Ex. T. The counsel also pointed out that the fact that P. W. 5, who recorded the statement Ex. T. from the appellant, informed him that he was bound to speak the truth as it was a judicial proceeding to which Section 193, I. P. C. applies, does not amount to any threat in law so as to attract Section 24 of the Evidence Act.

9-A. We will now refer to the circumstances under which Ex. T. was recorded as found by both the Courts. Consequent on information received by the Customs authorities, several raids were conducted from December 21, 1963. The appellant went to the Customs House at about 8 A. M. on January 7, 1964. By about 8.30 A. M. summons under Section 108 of the Act was served on him. From 11.30 A. M. onwards to about 8.30 P. M. the process of recording of the statement Ex. T. from the appellant continued excepting for a short break of about 2½ hours for lunch, tea and other requirements. The appellant was arrested immediately after his statement Ex. T. was completed. The seizure of the entire contraband goods was completed by about December 25, 1963. Though the attention of the appellant was drawn to sub-section (4) of Section 108 of the Act, he was not informed or warned that his statement was likely to be used in the event of any prosecution against him for the said offence. Undoubtedly Ex. T. contained various incriminating facts regarding the complicity of the appellant with the offences alleged against him. The Inspector of Customs, P. W. 5, who recorded the statement Ex. T. and P. W. 19, have both admitted that they questioned the appellant till the statement Ex. T was finally completed at 8.30 P. M. on January 7, 1964. Both of them have also asserted that they had not given any threat or offered any inducement to the appellant before the statement Ex. T was made. P. W. 5 has deposed that he drew the attention of the appellant to the last paragraph of the summons issued under Section 108 of the Act. In fact in Ex. T the appellant states that he had received summons No. 3 of 1964 dated January 7, 1964 issued to him under Section 108 of the Act. He has further stated that he had read the summons and that he had further understood that giving false evidence is an offence punishable under Section 193 of the Indian Penal Code. P. W. 5 has further deposed that he had explained to the appellant the provisions of Section 193, I. P. C. and that the statement was being recorded as if he was in Court and that the appellant was bound to speak the truth and that if he made a false statement he would be prosecuted. Based upon these answers of P. W. 5, Mr. Chari, urged that it is clear that P. W. 5 has administered a threat to the appellant and it was in consequence of such a threat that the appellant gave the statement Ex. T and thereby has placed himself in a grave jeopardy of action being taken against him under the Act.

10. Before we refer to Section 24 of the Evidence Act, it is desirable to advert to the relevant provisions of the Customs Act. Sections 107 and 108 are as follows:

"Section 107. Power to examine persons—

Any officer of customs empowered in this behalf by general or special order of the Collector of Customs may, during the course of any enquiry in connection with the smuggling of any goods,—

(a) require any person to produce or deliver any document or thing relevant to the enquiry;

(b) examine any person acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the case.

Section 108. Power to summon persons to give evidence and produce documents—

(1) Any gazetted officer of customs shall have power to summon any person whose attendance he considers necessary either to give evidence or to produce a document or any other thing in any inquiry which such officer is making in connection with the smuggling of any goods.

(2) A summons to produce document or other things may be for the production of certain specified documents or things or for the production of all documents or things of a certain description in the possession or under the control of the person summoned.

(3) All persons so summoned shall be bound to attend either in person or by an authorised agent, as such officer may direct; and all persons so summoned shall be bound to state the truth upon any subject respecting which they are examined or make statements and produce such documents and other things as may be required:

Provided that the exemption under Section 132 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, shall be applicable to any requisition for attendance under this section.

(4) Every such inquiry as aforesaid shall be deemed to be a judicial proceeding within the meaning of Section 193 and Section 228 of the Indian Penal Code".

11. Section 122 of the Act deals with confiscation of goods and levy of penalty. Section 124 deals with the procedure to be adopted before ordering the confiscation of any goods or imposing any penalty on any person. Section 135 deals with prosecution before a criminal Court in the circumstances mentioned in Clauses (a) and (b) and that prosecution is without prejudice to any action taken under the Act.

12. This Court had to consider in Romesh Chandra Mehta v. State of West Bengal, (1969) 2 SCR 461 = (AIR 1970 SC 940) whether an officer of customs under the Sea Customs Act, 1878 was a police officer and whether the statements made to him were hit by Art. 20 (3) of the Constitution and inadmissible in evidence under Section 25 of the Evidence Act. A further question also arose whether an officer of customs acting under the Act is in any event a police officer within the meaning of Section 25 of the Evidence Act and hence the confessional statements made to him were inadmissible in evidence. After a consideration of the scheme of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, this Court held that a Customs Officer does not exercise, when enquiring into a suspected infringement of the Sea Customs Act, powers of investigation which a police officer may in investigating the commission of an offence and that he is invested with the power to enquire into infringements of the Act primarily for the purpose of adjudicating about forfeiture and penalty. Further it was held that the said officer has no power to investigate an offence triable by a Magistrate and that he can only make a complaint in writing before a competent Magistrate and hence Section 25 of the Evidence Act has no application. It was further held that the steps taken by the Customs Officer are for the purpose of holding an enquiry under the Sea Customs Act and for adjudging confiscation of goods dutiable or prohibited and imposing penalties and that the Customs Officer does not at that stage accuse the person suspected of infringing the provisions of the Sea Customs Act with the commission of any offence. Finally, it was held that a person examined under Section 171-A of the Sea Customs Act does not stand in the character of an accused person inasmuch as there is no formal accusation made against him by any person at the time and hence any statement made by such a person to a Customs Officer is not hit by Article 20 (3) of the Constitution.

13. The scheme of the Act was also considered in the said decision and some points of difference between the Act and the Sea Customs Act, 1878 were noted. But notwithstanding the slight difference in the powers exercised by a Customs Officer under the Act, it was held that the Customs Officer under the Act is not a police officer within the meaning of Section 25 of the Evidence Act. It was emphasised that the proceedings taken by him are for the purpose of holding an enquiry into suspected cases of smuggling and that the Customs Officer is for all purposes an officer of the Revenue. It was laid down that as the Customs Officer under the Act is not a police officer, the Statement made before him by a person, who is arrested or against whom an enquiry is made, are not covered by Section 25 of the Evidence Act. It was further laid down that until a complaint is filed before a Magistrate, the person against whom an enquiry is commenced under the Customs Act does not stand in the character of a person accused of an offence under Section 135. The discussion on this aspect is wound up by this Court as follows:

"..... The Customs Officer even under the Act of 1962 continues to remain a revenue officer primarily concerned with the detection of smuggling and enforcement and levy of proper duties and prevention of entry into India of dutiable goods without payment of duty and of goods of which the entry is prohibited. He does not on that account become either a police officer, nor does the information conveyed by him, when the person guilty of an infraction of the law is arrested, amount to making of an accusation of an offence against the person so guilty of infraction. Even under the Act of 1962 a formal accusation can only be deemed to be made when a complaint is made before a Magistrate competent to try the person guilty of the infraction under Secs. 132, 133, 134 and 135 of the Act. Any statement made under Sections 107 and 108 of the Customs Act by a person against whom an enquiry is made by a Customs Officer is not a statement made by a person accused of an offence".

14. From this decision it follows that a Customs Officer conducting an inquiry under Section 107 or 108 of the Act is not a police officer and the person against whom the inquiry is made is not an accused and the statement made by such a person in that inquiry "is not a statement made by a person accused of an offence."

15. The same position has been reiterated in the later case of Ilias v. Collector of Customs, Madras, (1969) 2 SCR 613 = (AIR 1970 SC 1065).

16. Now coming to Section 24 of the Evidence Act, it runs as follows: "Section 24: Confession caused by inducement, threat, or promise, when irrelevant in criminal proceeding:

A confession made by an accused person is irrelevant in a criminal proceeding, if the making of the confession appears to the Court to have been caused by any inducement, threat or promise having reference to the charge against the accused person, proceeding from a person in authority and sufficient, in the opinion of the Court, to give the accused person grounds which would appear to him reasonable for supposing that by making it he would gain any advantage or avoid any evil of a temporal nature in reference to the proceedings against him".

17. To attract the provisions of this section, the following facts have to be established:

(a) that the confession has been made by an accused person to a person in authority;

(b) that it must appear to the Court that the confession has been obtained by reason of any inducement, threat or promise proceeding from a person in authority;

(c) that the inducement, threat or promise must have reference to the charge against the accused person; and

(d) the inducement, threat or promise, must, in the opinion of the Court, be such that the accused in making the confession believed or supposed that by making it he would gain any advantage or avoid any evil of temporal nature in reference to the proceedings against him.

18. We have already pointed out that when the appellant appeared before the Customs Officers on the morning of January 7, 1964, he was served with a summons under Section 108 of the Act and that it was after the receipt of the summons, the appellant gave the statement Ex. T. From the decision in, (1969) 2 SCR 461 = (AIR 1970 SC 940), it is clear that when an inquiry is being conducted under Section 108 of the Act, and a statement is given by a person against whom the inquiry is being held it "is not a statement made by a person accused of an offence and the person who gives the statement does not stand in the character of an accused person". Therefore the first essential fact to be established, to attract Section 24, referred to above is lacking in this case, as the appellant was not an 'accused person'.

19. We have already stated that it has been found by both the Courts that the statement Ex. T is a voluntary statement made by the appellant. Mr. Chari attempted to bring the statement Ex. T under Section 24 of the Evidence Act because of P. W.

5 having informed the appellant that the statement was being recorded as if he was a Court and that the appellant was bound to speak the truth and that if any false statement is made, he would be prosecuted. P. W. 5 has also stated that he explained Section 193, I. P. C. to the appellant. According to the learned counsel this conduct of P. W. 5 clearly amounts to a threat being administered to the appellant.

20. It is not in dispute that P. W. 5 who recorded the confession, is a person in authority within the meaning of Section 24 of the Evidence Act. But the question is whether, when P. W. 5 drew the attention of the appellant to the fact that the inquiry is a judicial proceeding to which Section 193, I. P. C. applies and that the appellant must speak the truth, it can be considered to be a threat ".... proceeding from a person in authority" under the section.

21. We are not inclined to accept the contention of Mr. Chari that in the circumstances mentioned above any threat has proceeded from a person in authority to the appellant, in consequence of which the statement Ex. T was given. Section 108 of the Act gives power to a Customs Officer of a gazetted rank to summon any person to give evidence in any inquiry in connection with the smuggling of any goods. The inquiry made under this section is by virtue of sub-section (4) deemed to be a judicial proceeding within the meaning of Sections 193 and 228 of the Indian Penal Code. A person summoned under Section 108 of the Act is bound to appear and state the truth when giving the evidence. If he does not answer he would render himself liable to be prosecuted under Section 228, I. P. C. If, on the other hand, he answers and gives false evidence, he would be liable to be prosecuted under S. 193, I. P. C. for giving false evidence in a judicial proceeding. In short, a person summoned under Section 108 of the Act is told by the statute itself that under threat of criminal prosecution he is bound to speak what he knows and state it truthfully. But it must be noted that a compulsion to speak the truth, even though it may amount to a threat, emanates in this case not from the officer who recorded the statement, but from the provisions of the statute itself. What is necessary to constitute a threat under Section 24 of the Evidence Act is that it must emanate from the person in authority. In the case before us there was no such threat emanating from P. W. 5, who recorded the statement or P. W. 19, who was guiding the proceedings. On the contrary the officers recording the statement were only doing their duty in bringing to the notice of the appellant the provisions of the statute. Even if P. W. 5 had not drawn the attention of the appellant to the fact that the inquiry conducted by him is deemed to be a judicial proceeding, to which Section 193, I. P. C. applies, the appellant was bound to speak the truth when summoned under Section 108 of the Act with the added risk of being prosecuted, if he gave false evidence.

22. Further, it is to be seen that it is not every threat, inducement or promise even emanating from the person in authority that is hit by Section 24 of the Evidence Act. In order to attract the bar, it has to be such an inducement, threat or promise, which should lead the accused to suppose that "by making it he would gain any advantage or avoid any evil of temporal nature in reference to the proceedings against him". In the case before us what is it that the appellant has been told? He has been told that the law requires him to tell the truth and if he does not tell the truth, he may be prosecuted under Section 193, I. P. C. for giving false evidence. This, we have held, does not constitute a threat under Sec. 24 of the Evidence Act. The plea of the appellant was that he was compelled to make the statement under the threat that otherwise his mother and another brother will be prosecuted. He has further stated that he was induced to make the statement on the belief that it will be used only against the second accused and not against him. These pleas of the appellant have been disbelieved by both the trial Court and the High Court. Therefore, it follows that even assuming that there was an inducement or threat, the appellant had no basis for supposing that by making the statement he would gain any advantage or avoid any evil with reference to the proceedings in respect of which an inquiry was being conducted by the Customs Officers. Therefore, even on this ground also Section 24 of the Evidence Act has no application.

23. For all the above reasons we hold that by the mere fact that the Customs Officer P. W. 5, who recorded the statement Ex. T, explained the provisions of Section 193, I. P. C. and informed the appellant that he was bound to tell the truth and that he is liable to be prosecuted if he made a false statement, there was no threat given to the appellant. We accordingly hold that Section 24 of the Evidence Act has no application and the statement Ex. T was properly admitted in evidence in the trial of the appellant. Both the Courts have found that there is also independent evidence to corroborate the truth of the statements in Ex. T. The question of admissibility of Ex. T in evidence, having been decided against the appellant, no other point has been argued before us.

24. In the result, the appeal fails and is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

(C) Constitution of India, Article 217 (3) — The mere fact that the President was assisted by machinery of Home Affairs Ministry in serving notices and receiving communications addressed to him cannot lead to inference that he was guided by that Ministry in arriving at his decision particularly when no rules were framed regarding inquiries under Art. 217 (3) — (1967) 71 CWN 926, Reversed.

Even in the matter of serving notice and asking for representation from a Judge of the High Court where a question as to his age is raised, the President's Secretariat should ordinarily be the channel, that the President should have consultation with the Chief Justice of India as required by the Constitution and that there must be no interposition of any other body or authority, in the consultation between the President and the Chief Justice of India.

(Para 31)

Any irregularity in procedure viz., sending the papers through the Home Minister and the Prime Minister who countersigned them as if it was an executive matter does not affect the validity of order of the President on ground that he was guided by the Home Minister or the Prime Minister.

(Para 22)

(D) Constitution of India, Article 217 (3) — The sending of case papers and entire evidence to the Chief Justice and obtaining his advice fully comply with requirements of Article — Personal discussion with the Chief Justice is not at all a condition precedent to a valid decision.

(Para 23)

(E) Constitution of India, Article 217 (3) — The President while determining age of a High Court Judge discharges judicial and not executive function — Though rules of natural justice have to be followed, personal hearing to concerned Judge is not obligatory.

Normally, an opportunity for an oral hearing should be given to the Judge whose age is in question, and the question should be decided by the President on consideration of such materials as may be placed by the Judge concerned and the evidence against him after the same is disclosed to him. The President acting under Article 217 (3) performs a judicial function of grave importance under the scheme of our Constitution. He cannot act on the advice of his Ministers.

(Para 31)

Article 217 (3) does not guarantee a right of personal hearing. Nor is a personal hearing a necessary incident of rules of natural justice. Except in proceedings in Courts, a mere denial of opportunity of making an oral representation will not, without more, vitiate the proceeding. A party likely to be affected by a decision is entitled to know the evidence against him, and to have an opportunity of making a representation. He however cannot claim that an order made without affording him an opportunity of a personal hearing is invalid. The President while making an enquiry is not a Court and the giving of personal hearing is entirely discretionary.

(F) Constitution of India, Article 217 (3) — Order of President even though made final can be set aside by Court in appropriate cases though Court will not sit in appeal over order and will not substitute its own opinion for that of President by weighing the evidence before President.

(Para 31)

The Court can interfere with the order of the President where it appears that it was passed on collateral considerations or the rules of natural justice were not observed, or that the President's judgment was coloured by the advice or representation made by the executive or it was founded on no evidence.

Mr. Jagadish Swarup, Solicitor
General of India, (M/s. Ram Panjwani and S. P. Nayar, Advocates, with him), for Appellant; Respondent in person.

Court was delivered by

SHAH, C. J.: — Jyoti Prakash Mitter—hereinafter called 'the respondent'—was a candidate for the matriculation certificate examination of the Bihar University, held in April, 1918. In the Bihar Government Gazette declaring him successful the age of the respondent was shown to be 16 years 3 months in April 1918. The respondent offered himself as a candidate for admission to the Indian Civil Service at an examination held in 1923 by the United Kingdom Civil Service Commission. On that occasion he declared that his date of birth was December 27, 1901. The respondent joined the High Court Bar at Calcutta in May 1931. On February 11, 1949 the respondent was appointed as Additional Judge and on December 26, 1949 he was recommended for appointment as a permanent Judge. He then declared that he was 45 years of age.

2. In 1956 the Government of India collected information relating to the educational and other qualifications of the Judges of the High Courts and their respective dates of birth. The declaration made by the respondent that his date of birth was December 27, 1904 was accepted. The Government of India having received information that the true date of birth of the respondent was December 27, 1901 commenced an enquiry. On April 17, 1959 the Chief Justice of the High Court of Calcutta asked the respondent to make a formal statement relating to his date of birth. On May 27, 1959 the respondent wrote to the Chief Justice of the High Court, Calcutta that his age entered in the matriculation certificate was incorrect, and that he was shown to be three years older than he actually was, because a true declaration of his age would have prevented him from appearing for the matriculation examination in 1918. The respondent also tendered an affidavit of one Panchakari Banerjee that the question of his age was discussed with Sir Arthur Trevor Harries who was in 1949 the Chief Justice of the High Court of Calcutta.

3. A suggestion made by the Chief Minister of West Bengal that the respondent may agree to abide by the decision of the Chief Justice of India on the question of his true date of birth was not accepted by him. The respondent also did not furnish any material in support of his case that he was born in December, 1904. By order dated May 15, 1961 the President of India on the recommendation of the Minister of Home Affairs directed that the age of the respondent be determined on the basis of the date of birth declared in the matriculation certificate.

4. The respondent then moved a petition in the High Court of Punjab at Delhi for a declaration that he was entitled to hold office till December 27, 1964 and for a writ of mandamus restraining the Union of India from giving effect to the order of the President. The petition was dismissed. The respondent then filed a petition on January 2, 1962 in the High Court of Calcutta impleading the Chief Justice of the High Court of Calcutta as a party respondent praying for an order directing the Chief Justice to treat him as continuing in office till December 27, 1964 and "to assign judicial work" to him. He urged that the decision of the Government of India in pursuance of which the Chief Justice of the High Court had acted was "illegal, arbitrary and unconstitutional" and that the Chief Justice had no jurisdiction to act upon that decision. That petition was dismissed in limine. But a Special Bench of the High Court in appeal filed by the respondent directed that rule nisi be issued. This Court dismissed an appeal against the order of the High Court: Hon'ble Mr. Justice Himansu Kumar Bose, Chief Justice, High Court, Calcutta v. Jyoti Prakash Mitter, AIR 1964 SC 1636. A Special Bench of five Judges of the Calcutta High Court then heard the petition. The petition filed by the respondent was ordered to be dismissed and the rule was discharged. This Court in appeal against the order of the High Court: Jyoti Prakash Mitter v. Hon'ble Mr. Justice Himansu Kumar Bose, Chief Justice, High Court, Calcutta, (1965) 2 SCR 53 = (AIR 1965 SC 961) gave certain directions.

To appreciate the reasons for making those directions it is necessary to take into account certain developments.

5. When the appeal was pending in this Court, Article 217 of the Constitution was amended by the Constitution (Fifteenth Amendment) Act, 1963 and Clause (3) was added thereto to the following effect with retrospective effect:

"If any question arises as to the age of a Judge of a High Court, the question shall be decided by the President after consultation with the Chief Justice of India and the decision of the President shall be final".

Clause (1) of Article 217 was also amended by the Constitution (Fifteenth Amendment) Act, 1963, with effect from October 5, 1963 and the age of superannuation of Judges of the High Court was fixed at sixty-two years.

6. This Court held that Clause (3) of Article 217 having retrospective operation, validity of the order passed by the President must be adjudged in the light of Clause (3) of Article 217 and since the Ministry of Home Affairs had placed the file before the President in accordance with the rules of business, the procedure could not be assimilated to the requirements of Article 217 (3). The Court observed:

"The question concerning the age of the appellant (respondent herein) on which a decision was reached by the President on May 15, 1961, affects the appellant in a very serious manner; and so, we think considerations of natural justice and fair-play require that before this question is determined by the President, the appellant should be given a chance to adduce his evidence. That is why we think that, on the whole, it would not be possible to accept the Attorney-General's contention that the order passed by the President on May 15, 1961, can be treated as a decision within the meaning of Article 217 (3). We ought to make it clear that in dealing with the grievance of the appellant that his evidence was not before the President at the relevant time, we are not prepared to hold that his failure or refusal to produce evidence at that stage should be judged in the light of the retrospective operation of Article 217 (3); such a consideration would be totally inconsistent with the concept of fair-play and natural justice which ought to govern the enquiry contemplated by Article 217 (3)"; and that:

"The appellant has contended before us that if we hold that the impugned decision of the President does not amount to a decision under Article 217 (3); he is entitled to have a formal decision of the President in terms of the said provision. The Attorney-General has conceded that this contention of the appellant is well founded. He, therefore, stated to us on behalf of the Union of India that in case our decision on the main point is rendered against the Union of India, the Union of India will place the matter before the President within a fortnight after the pronouncement of our judgment inviting him to decide the question about the appellant's age under Article 217 (3). Both parties have agreed before us that in case the decision of the President is in favour of the appellant, the appellant will be entitled to claim that he has continued to be a Judge notwithstanding the order passed by the Chief Justice of the Calcutta High Court and will continue to be a Judge until he attains the age of superannuation".

7. Thereafter the President of India directed the Secretary, Ministry of Home Affairs, to call upon the respondent to "make such representation as he may wish to make in the matter and produce such evidence as he may desire to produce in support of his claim that his correct age should be determined on the basis of his date of birth being taken as December 27, 1904", and after consulting the Chief Justice of India by order dated September 29, 1965, determined the date of birth of the respondent as December 27, 1901.

8. The legality of the procedure followed by the President in making the order is challenged by the respondent. It is, therefore, necessary to set out in some detail the various steps taken before passing that order. On November 17, 1964 the Secretary of the Ministry of Home Affairs drew up a note tracing the history of the litigation upto the decision of this Court, and invited the President to determine the age of the respondent under Article 217 (3). The note of the Secretary was submitted to the President through the Minister of Home Affairs and the Prime Minister. On November 21, 1964 the President signed an order calling upon the respondent to make such representation as he may wish to make in the matter and to produce such evidence as he may desire. The respondent submitted his representation on December 7, 1964 and annexed therewith photostat copies of two documents, an almanac and a horoscope on which he relied and certain affidavits. By his forwarding letter the respondent prayed for an oral hearing before the President to enable him "to adduce his evidence and to produce in original the documents in the Annexures and to make submissions in support of his case". The respondent repeated his request for oral hearing by a letter addressed to the Secretary to the President on the same day. On December 9, 1964 the Secretary to the Ministry of Home Affairs wrote to the respondent asking him to send the original documents copies of which were annexures to his representation to enable him (Secretary) to place them before the President. On the same date, the Secretary to the Ministry of Home Affairs also supplied to the respondent a copy of his note dated November 17, 1964, seeking the determination of the President, and copy of the President's directive dated November 21, 1964. After receiving the copies the respondent by letter dated December 10, 1964 submitted an additional representation. On the same date the respondent submitted to the Secretary, Ministry of Home Affairs, documents in original relied upon by him in his representation. On December 14, 1964 the respondent addressed a letter to the Secretary to the President, forwarding a copy of his additional representation, with a request that representation together with the original documents, which he had handed over to the Ministry of Home Affairs, be called for from that Ministry and be placed before the President. On December 21, 1964 the Secretary, Ministry of Home Affairs sent a reply to the letter directing the respondent to send all the evidence that he desired to rely upon and informing him that no oral evidence of witnesses will be received, the respondent being free to submit affidavits of witnesses. Referring to his request for personal hearing it was stated in the letter that the President will decide after considering the evidence produced by the respondent whether any personal hearing would be necessary, and that "should he decide that you should be heard in person, you will be informed in due course". On December 31, 1964 the originals of the horoscope and the almanac submitted by the respondent were sent to the Director of the Central Forensic Institute, Calcutta by the Ministry of Home Affairs with the request that the horoscope and the entry in ink in the margin of the almanac be examined "with a view to determine its genuineness with particular reference to the age of the paper on which the horoscope had been prepared; the age of the ink used; and the age of the writing "with a similar report as to the genuineness of the entry in ink in the almanac. On January 4, 1965 the respondent submitted four additional affidavits including his own affidavit affirming that the writing on the margin of the almanac against the date 12 Paus, 1311 B. S., was that of his maternal uncle, Jadunath Bose, who had died when he the respondent was a student of Oxford. By his letter dated February 3, 1965 addressed to the Secretary, Ministry of Home Affairs, the respondent protested against the reference of the documents to the expert, contending that the documents were obtained from him on the representation that they "were required to be placed before the President." The respondent demanded that he be supplied a copy of the order of the President by which such reference to the expert had been made and also copies of the correspondence between the Home Ministry and the forensic expert. He also requested that the originals of the documents be returned to him so that he might have them examined by an independent expert, who would, after his examination, give evidence as to his opinion, by affidavit or otherwise. In reply to that letter, the Secretary, Ministry of Home Affairs wrote that the procedure to be followed and the opportunities to be given to the respondent depended entirely upon the discretion of the President and the question of returning the documents produced by the respondent before determination of the matter, pending before the President, did not arise at that stage. The respondent was also informed that the question whether he should have an opportunity of filing expert evidence will be considered in due course. He was also informed that the respondent will be given an opportunity to put forward his case about the evidentiary value of the documents produced by him and any decision thereon would be arrived at by the President after affording him reasonable opportunities in that behalf.

9. There was some correspondence between the Director of the Central Forensic Institute, Calcutta and the Ministry of Home Affairs. The Commandant of the Institute opined that it was "extremely difficult to solve dating problems in a completely satisfactory manner". He initially sought instructions whether he was at liberty to deface or mutilate the documents, because the "test required could not be made without extracting parts of the documents, but later wrote that the mutilation of documents by the chemical test was not desirable and moreover that by such application it would not be possible to give an absolute date to the document. Thereafter the Director reported on a "limited examination" that could be carried out that it was not possible to give any opinion relating to the age of the ink writing on the almanac", but in his view the horoscope could not have been written earlier than 1909, because the paper on which it was written contained bamboo pulp which was not brought into the use by the Titaghur Mills in the manufacture of paper before 1912. The Director said nothing about the age of the ink in which the horoscope had been written.

10. After consultations between the Ministry of Home Affairs and the Ministry of Law, the Home Ministry sent certain old writings of the year 1904, 1949, 1950 and 1959, and requested the Director to determine the age of the writing of the disputed horoscope and marginal note in the almanac by comparison. The Director on April 17, 1965 wrote that it "was impossible to give any definite opinion by such comparisons particularly when the comparison writings were not made with the same ink on similar paper and not stored under the same conditions as the documents under examination", and that it "will not be possible for a document expert, however reputed he might be, anywhere in the world, to give any definite opinion on the probable date of the horoscope and the ink writing in the margin of the almanac".

11. After receiving the second report from the Director, the Ministry of Law raised the question about the opportunity to be given to the respondent before the President in the enquiry for determining the age of the respondent under Article 217 (3). It was then decided to refer the question to the Chief Justice of India for his advice. On July 24, 1965 the Chief Justice of India advised the President about the procedure to be adopted in the determination of the age of the respondent. Thereafter pursuant to a suggestion made by the Law Minister, the Ministry of Home Affairs wrote to the respondent on July 31, 1965 requiring him to state the date or year of the horoscope. The respondent by his letter dated August 4, 1965, stated that it was not possible for him to give definitely the date or year of the horoscope but he asserted that it was at least in existence in the year 1921 when it was consulted on the occasion of his marriage. On February 23, 1965 the respondent addressed a telegram to the President requesting that an early decision of the question of his age may be reached. On March 15, 1965 he addressed another telegram to the President requesting leave to produce other documentary evidence which he claimed may be available in East Pakistan, but sometime thereafter he informed the Secretary, Ministry of Home Affairs, that owing to lack of co-operation on the part of the people in East Pakistan it was not possible to get the evidence which was mentioned in his letter to the President and that he must content himself with the evidence he had already produced and which in his view was "overwhelming". He further stated:

"You can, therefore, take it that I have no further evidence to produce on the subject of my age, unless I am driven to call an expert or experts as indicated by me in my letter to you, dated 3rd February, 1965".

On August 13, 1965, copies of the reports of the Director of the Forensic Science Laboratory were forwarded by the Home Secretary to the respondent with a forwarding letter by which the respondent was informed that if he had any comments to make on the opinion expressed by the Director they may be submitted and that if the respondent desired he may also adduce evidence in rebuttal in the form of ex-per opinion supported by proper affidavit, and that the comments, evidence and affidavits, if any, may be sent within one month of the letter. On receipt of the letter of the Home Secretary the respondent sent a telegram addressed to the Home Secretary on September 1, 1965, praying that the President may call for all papers and documents, if not already sent for and grant him an audience, "if at all necessary". The respondent also wrote a letter on that day submitting that the evidence tendered by him was "conclusive" and there was no question of adducing any further evidence or any evidence in rebuttal. He also submitted that the entry in the Bihar and Orissa Gazette (declaring him successful at the matriculation examination) was erroneous and concluded the letter that all relevant documents be placed before the President, and that the President "may be graciously pleased to grant "him" an audience for the purpose of deciding the question of his age".

12. The file of the respondent's case was then submitted to the President. On September 16, 1965 the President referred the matter to the Chief Justice of India asking him for his advice. On September 28, 1965 the Chief Justice recommended that the age of the respondent be decided on the basis that the respondent was born on December 27, 1901. The Chief Justice set out in detail all the evidence including the reports of Dr. Iyengar, Director of the Central Forensic Science Laboratory, Calcutta bearing on the dispute as to the true date of birth of the respondent. The Chief Justice of India thereafter observed:

"..... the question which the President has to decide is whether the date of Mr. Mitter's birth mentioned on the occasions when he appeared for the Matriculation Examination as well as for the Indian Civil Service Examination, is incorrect; and that would naturally turn upon whether it is shown that the entry in ink on the margin of the almanac showing that Mr. Mitter was born on 27-12-1904, was contemporaneously made and is correct as alleged by him. The horoscope on which Mr. Mitter relies, refers to the date and time of his birth; but that does not help Mr. Mitter very much, because it is obviously based upon information given to Jyotish-Sastri Shri Jogesh Chandra Deba Sarma on the basis of the entry in the almanac. I have carefully considered the reports made by Dr. Iyengar, the comments on them made by Mr. Mitter, the affidavits on which Mr. Mitter relies, and the almanac and the horoscope on which he bases his case. I have also taken into account all the other relevant facts relating to the past history of this dispute, the conduct of Mr. Mitter, the grounds on which he challenged the earlier orders passed in this matter, and I have come to the conclusion that it is not shown satisfactorily that the entry in the ink on the margin of the almanac was made contemporaneously and is correct as alleged by Mr. Mitter. I am, therefore, unable to accept his case that the date of his birth which was shown at the time when he appeared for the Matriculation Examination as well as for the I. C. S. Examination "was exaggerated".

I would, therefore, advise the President to hold that Mr. Mitter has failed to show that he was born on 27-12-1904 and not on 27-12-1901; and that the question about his age should be decided on the basis that he was born on 27-12-1901".

The file containing the advice was then returned to the President. It appears however that after the file was received in the President's Secretariat, it was sent to the Secretary, Ministry of Home Affairs for putting it up before the Home Minister before submitting it to the President. The Home Secretary on September 29, 1965 put up the matter before the Home Minister with the following endorsement:

"A summary of the case will be found at slip 'Z'. The Chief Justice of India has offered his advice in his minute after going into the relevant material. H. M. (Home Minister) may recommend to the President that the age of Sri J. P. Mitter may be determined in accordance with the advice of the Chief Justice of India". The Home Minister and the Prime Minister countersigned that endorsement. The file was then placed before the President on the same day i.e., September 29, 1965. The President recorded his decision that he accepted "the advice tendered by the Chief Justice of India and "decided" that the age of Sri Jyoti Prakash Mitter should be determined on the basis that he was born on the twenty-seventh December nineteen hundred and one".

13. The Secretary, Ministry of Home Affairs communicated the decision of the President to the respondent. On October 15, 1965 the respondent addressed a letter to the President praying that the decision which had been made without affording him an audience should be reopened and that he should be granted an audience in the presence of the Chief Justice of India and a representative of the Home Ministry. The Home Secretary informed the respondent that the President's decision was final and could not be reopened. He also pointed out that though the respondent was offered the opportunity of commenting on the opinion of the Government expert, he — the respondent — had by his letter of September 1, 1965 declined that offer.

14. On August 3, 1966 the respondent moved the petition out of which this appeal arises claiming a writ in the nature of mandamus commanding the Union of India (i) to act and proceed in accordance with law, (ii) to rescind, recall and withdraw the purported decision of the President conveyed to him by the Secretary to the Government of India in his letter dated October 13, 1965 and (iii) to forbear from giving effect or further effect to the purported decision of the President.

15. The petition was heard by D. D. Basu, J. After an elaborate discussion of the history of the dispute and decisions of the Courts in India and abroad, under diverse heads, the learned Judge concluded:

that ".....the impugned order of the President, the purport of which was communicated to the petitioner (respondent) by the letter of the Home Secretary, dated 13-10-65 is not a 'decision' of the President in term of Article 217 (3), because—

A. Whether the function is quasi-judicial or administrative he acted as recommended by the Home Minister and the Prime Minister, who are extraneous to the function under Article 217 (3);

B. The function being quasi-judicial
(i) the President was not given sufficient time and opportunity to exercise his independent judgment on the question before him;

(ii) the petitioner was not given a personal hearing before the President, as called for by the circumstances of the case.

C. The jurisdiction of this Court to interfere on the above grounds is not barred by the finality clause under Article 217 (3)."

He directed the Union of India not to give effect to the order of the President as communicated by the letter of the Home Secretary dated October 13, 1965. The learned Judge observed that the Union of India may, if so advised, place the matter before the President again, within two months from the date of the judgment, inviting him to decide the age of the respondent in accordance with Article 217 (3).

16. On behalf of the Union of India a prayer for a certificate under Article 132 (1) of the Constitution was made. Observing that the case involved a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of Article 217 (3) of the Constitution, D. D. Basu, J. granted the certificate prayed for under Article 132 (1) of the Constitution. This appeal is filed pursuant to that certificate.

17. Under Article 132 (1) of the Constitution an appeal lies to the Supreme Court from any judgment, decree or final order of a High Court, whether in a civil, criminal or other proceedings, if the High Court certifies that the case involves a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution. A single Judge of the High Court may in appropriate cases certify that the case involves a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution. But such a certificate is intended to be given in very exceptional cases where a direct appeal is necessary and in view of the grave importance of the case an early decision of the case must in the larger interest of the public or similar reasons be reached. This case was not one in which a certificate should have been asked for or granted. Against the decision of the Learned Judge, an appeal lay to a Division Bench of the High Court under the Letters Patent, and no reason was suggested for not moving the High Court. The order of the President was made in 1961. The respondent could not on the date of the order be reinstated because he was even on his case more than 62 years of age. Since, however, a certificate was asked for on behalf of the Union of India and has been given, we have not thought it necessary to vacate the certificate and to ask the Union to have resort to the normal remedy of an appeal to the High Court.

18. Article 217 (3) incorporated by the Fifteenth Amendment Act in the Constitution was given retrospective effect from January 26, 1950. On that account all questions arising as to the age of a Judge of the High Court had to be decided by the President after consultation with the Chief Justice of India. A dispute relating to the age of the respondent who was a Judge of a High Court in India was raised and the President of India after consultation with the Chief Justice of India decided that question. Normally judicial power must be exercised by the authority in whom that power is vested. But under Article 217 (3) power to decide the question as to the age of a Judge of the High Court has to be exercised after consultation with the Chief Justice of India.

19. There is no substance in the contention of the respondent, who argued his case personally that the decision was in truth rendered by the Chief Justice of India and not by the President. The President has expressly recorded that he accepted the advice tendered by the Chief Justice of India and that he decided that the age of the respondent be determined on the basis that the respondent was born on the twenty-seventh December nineteen hundred and one. The President acted on the advice of the Chief Justice; he did not surrender his judgment to the Chief Justice. The order of the President is not open to challenge on the ground that he did not reach his own conclusion.

20. It was then urged that in rendering his decision there was no consultation between the President and the Chief Justice as required by the Constitution; that the President was guided by the Minister of Home Affairs and by the Prime Minister; that the President did not apply his mind to the evidence in the case; that it was obligatory upon the President to grant to the respondent an oral hearing and since he did not do so the order was liable to be declared invalid; that in any case the respondent had requested on several occasions that an opportunity be given to him of an oral hearing before deciding the case and that the case was otherwise one in which an oral hearing should have been given; that the executive was closely associated with the President in making the order, since the notice to the respondent was issued through the Ministry of Home Affairs, and the papers were sent by the Chief Justice of India to the President but were diverted by the Secretary to the President to the Ministry of Home Affairs and after they were received with the advice of the Chief Justice of India they were considered by the Minister of Home Affairs and the Prime Minister and it was only after they assented to the advice of the Chief Justice of India that the papers were submitted to the President; and that the part played "by the Chief Justice of India was contrary to all principles of natural justice".

21. We do not propose to deal with those contentions in the sequence in which they were urged before us for many of those contentions overlap. It is true that the notice requiring the respondent to show cause was issued pursuant to the papers being submitted to the President and the notice was in fact sent by the Secretary to the Ministry of Home Affairs. But we do not think that because the President was assisted by the machinery of the Ministry of Home Affairs in serving notices, and receiving communications addressed by him it can be inferred that he was guided by that Ministry. Apparently no rules have been framed regarding the enquiry to be made by the President of India under Article 217 (3). This was the first case which arose in which the question of age of a Judge of the High Court had to be decided. The President has no secretarial facilities for serving notices and for taking other steps in regard to enquiries to be made under Article 217 (3).

22. After the Chief Justice of India sent the file of papers with his advice to the President, the papers were not immediately submitted to the President but were sent to the Ministry of Home Affairs. The Secretary recorded a note requesting the Minister of Home Affairs to recommend to the President that the age of the respondent may be determined in accordance with the advice of the Chief Justice of India. The Minister for Home Affairs and then the Prime Minister placed their initials below the note. There is nothing in the order that the Minister for Home Affairs acted upon the request made by the Secretary; he merely countersigned the papers and sent them to the Prime Minister who also countersigned the note. The argument that the Home Minister and the Prime Minister signified their assent and thereafter the President acted as if he was exercising the executive authority on the advice of his Ministers has no force. There is no reason to think that the Minister for Home Affairs or the Prime Minister acted in pursuance of the request made by the Secretary. There is again nothing in the order of the President which may suggest that he was swayed by anything which the Secretary to the Ministry of Home Affairs had noted or by the signatures of the Minister for Home Affairs or the Prime Minister. The terms of the order of the President are clear: they show that the President was acting on the advice of the Chief Justice of India and that he decided the age of the respondent on that basis. Any irregularity in the procedure followed by the Secretary to the President and the Secretary, Ministry of Home Affairs, in sending the papers through the Minister of Home Affairs and the Prime Minister as if the matter dealt with was executive in character, does not, in our judgment, affect the validity of the order made by the President or vitiate it on the ground that he was guided by the Minister for Home Affairs or by the Prime Minister.

23. The argument that there was no consultation between the Chief Justice of India and the President is also without substance. Consultation contemplated by the Constitution is not a dialogue. Under Article 217 (3) the President is required to consult the Chief Justice of India before determining the question as to the age of a Judge of the High Court. The President must before deciding the age of a Judge under Article 217 (3) obtain the advice of the Chief Justice of India. For obtaining that advice the President undoubtedly must make available all the evidence in his possession to the Chief Justice of India. The Chief Justice has to submit his advice to the President on that evidence. It is not a condition of the validity of the decision by the President that the President and the Chief Justice should meet and discuss across a table the pros and cons of the proposed action, or the value to be attached to any piece of evidence laid before the President and made available to the Chief Justice. The procedure followed in the present case of sending to the Chief Justice of India the file of papers relating to the evidence against the respondent and in his favour, and of obtaining his advice fully complied with the constitutional requirements as to consultation with the Chief Justice of India when he rendered his advice to the President.

24. The President had given ample opportunities at diverse stages to the respondent to make his representations. All evidence placed before the President when he considered the question as to the age of the respondent was disclosed to him and he — respondent — was given an opportunity to make his representation thereon. There is nothing in Clause (3) of Article 217 which requires that the Judge whose age is in dispute, should be given a personal hearing by the President. The President may in appropriate cases in the exercise of his discretion give to the Judge concerned an oral hearing, but he is not bound to do so. An order made by the President which is declared final by Clause (3) of Article 217 is not invalid merely because no oral hearing was given by the President to the Judge concerned. An opportunity to make representation to the Judge, after apprising him of the evidence which was likely to be used against him and consideration of the representation and the evidence comply with the requirements of Article 217 (3). The respondent it is true, did make requests that the President should give him an oral hearing. The respondent claims that his request was granted and he remained under an impression that he would be given an oral hearing, and the order made without granting him an opportunity of an oral representation was contrary to the rules of natural justice. By his representation dated December 7, 1964, the respondent had requested that he be given an oral hearing before the President and an opportunity to adduce his evidence and to produce in original the documents, viz., an almanac and a horoscope, and to make submissions in support of his case. He repeated that request in the letter addressed to the Secretary to the President also on the same day. In reply thereto by letter dated December 21, 1964, the Secretary to the Ministry of Home Affairs informed the respondent that no oral evidence of witnesses would be received but the respondent was free to submit the affidavits of witnesses as he relied upon. Regarding his request for the personal hearing the respondent was informed that the President will decide after considering the evidence whether any personal hearing was necessary. He was also informed that should the President decide that the respondent should be heard in person, he will be informed in due course. Again in reply to the letter written by the respondent on January 4, 1965, the Secretary to the Ministry of Home Affairs informed the respondent that the procedure to be followed and the opportunities to be given to the respondent were entirely to depend upon the direction of the President and the respondent will be given an opportunity to put forward his case about the evidentiary value of the documents produced by him and any decision thereon would be arrived at by the President after affording him reasonable opportunities in that behalf. By his letter dated April 28, 1965, to the Secretary, Ministry of Home Affairs, the respondent stated that he had no further evidence to produce on the subject of his age, beside the evidence he had already produced. By his telegram dated September 1, 1965, the respondent requested the President to send for the papers and documents, if not already sent for, and to grant him an audience "if at all necessary." But in his letter addressed to the Secretary of the Ministry of Home Affairs on the same day he stated that all the papers may be placed before the President and the President may be "pleased to grant an audience for the purpose of deciding the question of his age."

25. Article 217 (3) does not guarantee a right of personal hearing. In a proceeding of a judicial nature, the basic rules of natural justice must be followed. The respondent was on that account entitled to make a representation. But it is not necessarily an incident of the rules of natural justice that personal hearing must be given to a party likely to be affected by the order. Except in proceedings in Courts, a mere denial of opportunity of making an oral representation will not, without more, vitiate the proceeding. A party likely to be affected by a decision is entitled to know the evidence against him, and to have an opportunity of making a representation. He however cannot claim that an order made without affording him an opportunity of a personal hearing is invalid. The President is performing a judicial function when he determines a dispute as to the age of a Judge, but he is not constituted by the Constitution a Court. Whether in a given case the President should give a personal hearing is for him to decide. The question is left to the discretion of the President to decide whether an oral hearing should be given to the Judge concerned. The record amply supports the view that the President did not deem it necessary to give an oral hearing. There were no complicated questions to be decided by the President. On the one hand there was the evidence of the matriculation certificate and the representation made by the respondent before the Board of Commissioners in the United Kingdom when the respondent submitted himself for being admitted to the Indian Civil Service Examination. On the other hand there was the evidence of the assertion made by the respondent that he was born on December 27, 1904, which was sought to be supported by the almanac with an entry in the margin, a horoscope, an affidavit of Panchkari Banerjee, Secretary to the then Chief Justice Sir Arthur Trevor Harries, in which it was stated that the question about the age of the respondent was discussed with the Chief Justice. The truth of the statements made by the respondent had to be judged in the light of his conduct, that he gave no evidence of the date of his birth when he was appointed permanent Judge of the High Court, nor when in 1960, opportunity was given to him to furnish any material in support of his contention regarding his age. If upon this evidence the President was of the view that the disputed question may be decided without giving an opportunity of personal hearing, this Court cannot set aside the order on the ground that the order was made without following the rules of natural justice.

26. It was urged that the President left India in the afternoon of September 23, 1965 on a tour of East European countries and that he had not sufficient time to consider the advice tendered by the Chief Justice of India and of going through all the evidence which was placed before him and of giving any judicial consideration to the matter before him. Having regard to the "strict-time-table" which was required to be observed, it was urged that he — President treated the matter as formal, and guided by the advice of the Home Minister and the Prime Minister he mechanically accepted the advice of the Chief Justice of India and surrendered his own judgment to the judgment of the Chief Justice of India. But on this part of the case there is no reliable evidence. No such ground was raised in the High Court. In this Court in the affidavit in reply filed by the respondent on February 24, 1967 in answer to the additional affidavit of the Union of India, the respondent stated two new grounds (1) that the Chief Justice of India had privately advised the Ministry of Home Affairs as to the conduct of the enquiry or reference under Article 217 (3) of the Constitution and he was on that account disentitled to tender advice to, or to be consulted by, the President under Article 217 (3), and that the "part played by the Chief Justice of India relative to the reference was against all principles of natural justice and fair play and vitiated his own purported advice to the President as well as the purported decision of the President rendering the purported decision a nullity"; and (2) that "the President of India left New Delhi shortly after noon on September 24, 1965, on a tour of East European countries and Ethiopia and that shortly before his departure a relative to the said reference was placed before him for his signature in token of his purported decision as to 'the respondent's age with the recommendation of the Prime Minister and the Home Minister to determine the age of the respondent in accordance with the advice of the Chief Justice of India'. He annexed thereto a copy of the daily edition of the Statesman dated September 30, 1965, evidencing the departure of the President as aforesaid and his purported decision as to the question of the age of the respondent before his departure for Europe. But no attempt was made to have the matter investigated in the High Court as to when the papers were submitted to the President and what consideration he gave to the advice, whether he made only a mechanical approach believing that he was bound to accept the advice of his Ministers. These are matters which cannot be canvassed for the first time in this Court.

27. On the plea that the Chief Justice of India had improperly advised the Minister of Home Affairs as to the conduct of enquiry and the reference, and on that account he had disentitled himself to tender any advice to the President also no allegation was made in the petition and no argument was raised in the High Court. There is no evidence that beside tendering advice to the President in matters of procedure and the final decision, the Chief Justice of India had given any advice to the Ministry of Home Affairs privately or otherwise. The argument that the Chief Justice of India in tendering the advice was influenced by extraneous considerations is not founded upon any materials placed before this Court and must be rejected.

28. The respondent invited our attention to a judgment of the Judicial Committee in B. Surinder Singh Kanda v. Government of the Federation of Malaya, 1962 AC 322. In that case the Commissioner of Police, Malaya passed an order dismissing one Kanda, an Inspector of Police, on the ground that at an inquiry before an adjudicating officer Kanda was found guilty of failing to disclose evidence at a criminal trial. Kanda contended that after the coming into force of the Constitution of Malaya that power was only in the Police Service Commission, to which the Commissioner was a subordinate authority and that failure to supply him a copy of the report of the board of inquiry, which contained matters highly prejudicial to him and which had been sent to and read by the adjudicating officer before he set to inquire into the charge, amounted to a failure to afford the appellant Kanda "a reasonable opportunity of being heard", in answer to the charge within the meaning of Article 135 (2) of the Constitution of Malaya and to a denial of natural justice. Lord Denning who delivered the judgment of the Judicial Committee considered the question whether the hearing by the adjudicating officer was vitiated because that officer was furnished with the report without Inspector Kanda being given any opportunity of correcting or contradicting it. Before the High Court of Malaya the question posed was whether there was a real likelihood of bias, that is "an operative prejudice, whether conscious or unconscious" on the part of the adjudicating officer. The Court of Appeal held that there was no likelihood of bias. In the opinion of Lord Denning however the proper approach to the case was different. "The rule against bias is one thing. The right to be heard is another. Those two rules are the essential characteristics of what is often called natural justice. They are the twin pillars supporting it x x x But they are separate concepts and are governed by separate considerations. In the present case Inspector Kanda complained of a breach of the second. He said that his constitutional right had been infringed. He had been dismissed without being given a reasonable opportunity of being heard.

If the right to be heard is to be a real right which is worth anything, it must carry with it a right in the accused man to know the case which is made against him. He must know what evidence has been given and what statements have been made affecting him; and then he must be given a fair opportunity to correct or contradict them. x x x x. It follows, of course, that the Judge or whoever has to adjudicate must not hear evidence or receive representations from one side behind the back of the other. The Court will not inquire whether the evidence or representations did work to his prejudice. Sufficient that they might do so. The Court will not go into the likelihood of prejudice. The risk of it is enough. No one who has lost a case will believe he has been fairly treated if the other side has had access to the Judge without his knowing".

29-30. Relying upon the observation the respondent contended that a likelihood of prejudice is sufficient to vitiate the proceedings. But in this case we do not think that there was any likelihood of bias or of prejudice.

All evidence which the President had to consider had been placed before him at diverse stages. When the notice to show cause was issued, the President had prima facie material before him. Thereafter certain other evidence was collected and that was also placed before the President. It is not suggested that any evidence against the respondent was not disclosed to him. The principal argument raised by the respondent was that the President himself did not determine the question relating to the age of the respondent because he surrendered his judgment to the Chief Justice of India or that he was persuaded to reach his conclusion only because the Home Minister and the Prime Minister had countersigned the notation made by the Secretary of the Ministry of Home Affairs. We do not think that the President had heard any evidence or received any representation from one side behind the back of the other. If he had done so the question whether any representation was made which worked to the prejudice of the respondent would arise. The Court will not then consider the question whether the representation had in fact worked to his prejudice. A reasonable possibility may be sufficient. In the present case no evidence was placed before the President or considered by him which was not disclosed to the respondent. The principle in B. Surinder Singh Kanda's case, (1962) AC 322 has therefore no application.

31. It is necessary to observe that the President in whose name all executive functions of the Union are performed is by Article 217 (3) invested with judicial power of great significance which has bearing on the independence of the Judges of the higher Courts. The President is by Article 74 of the Constitution the constitutional head who acts on the advice of the Council of Ministers in the exercise of his functions. Having regard to the very grave consequences resulting from even the initiation of an enquiry relating to the age of a Judge, our Constitution makers have thought it necessary to invest the power in the President. In the exercise of this power if democratic institutions are to take root in our country, even the slightest suspicion or appearance of misuse of that power should be avoided. Otherwise independence of the judiciary is likely to be gravely imperilled. We recommend that even in the matter of serving notice and asking for representation from a Judge of the High Court where a question as to his age is raised, the President's Secretariat should ordinarily be the channel, that the President should have consultation with the Chief Justice of India as required by the Constitution and that there must be no interposition of any other body or authority, in the consultation between the President and the Chief Justice of India. Again we are of the view that normally an opportunity for an oral hearing should be given to the Judge whose age is in question, and the question should be decided by the President on consideration of such materials as may be placed by the Judge concerned and the evidence against him after the same is disclosed to him. The President acting under Article 217 (3) performs a judicial function of grave importance under the scheme of our Constitution. He cannot act on the advice of his Ministers. Notwithstanding the declared finality of the order of the President the Court has jurisdiction in appropriate cases to set aside the order, if it appears that it was passed on collateral considerations or the rules of natural justice were not observed, or that the President's judgment was coloured by the advice or representation made by the executive or it was founded on no evidence. But this Court will not sit in appeal over the judgment of the President, nor will the Courts determine the weight which should be attached to the evidence. Appreciation of evidence is entirely left to the President and it is not for the Courts to hold that on the evidence placed before the President on which the conclusion is founded, if they were called upon to decide the case they would have reached some other conclusion.

32. The appeal is allowed. Having regard however to the circumstances of the case, we direct that there will be no order as to costs.

Civil Appeal No. 23 of 1967, D/- 2-3-1971.

(A) Civil Services — Bihar and Orissa Police Manual (1930), Rule 861 (b) — Appeal to Government against order of Inspector General of Police — In appeal by delinquent servant against order of his reversion, Government cannot pass an order of dismissal — It can only uphold or set aside order of reversion — (X-Ref: Police Act (1861), Section 3).

(Paras 9 and 11)

In the absence of any provision of law or any rule conferring on the Government as an appellate authority the power to pass an order of dismissal in exercise of its revisional power under Rule 853 or power of general superintendence under Section 3 of Police Act, the general principle must prevail namely that an appellate authority in an appeal by an aggrieved party may either dismiss his appeal or allow it either wholly or partly and uphold or set aside or modify the order challenged in such appeal. It cannot certainly impose on such an appellant a higher penalty and condemn him to a position worse than the one he would be in if he had not hazarded to file an appeal.

(B) Civil Services — Bihar and Orissa Police Manual (1930), Rule 853 — Conferment of revisional power on appellate authority — Revisional power is meant to be used when appeal cannot for some reasons be filed and the authority thinks that order is so unjust or unreasonable that it should act under its revisional power.

Jha, Advocate, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

SHELAT, J.: — This appeal, by special leave, is against the judgment of the High Court of Patna dismissing in limine the writ petition filed by the appellant challenging the order of his dismissal from service passed by the Government of Bihar.

2. The appellant was first appointed as a stenographer, Sub-Inspector of Police in 1940 in the Police Service of the State. After the requisite training in the Police training College at Hazaribagh, he was posted as a Sub-Inspector in 1950 in Champaran District. In 1954, he was promoted to officiate as an Inspector of Police. In June 1955, he worked in Saharsa District as an Officiating Inspector of Police.

3. In July 1955, he received a notice to show cause why disciplinary proceedings should not be taken against him in a matter relating to certain cloth recovered at Katihar Police Station in a Police Case under Sections 379 and 414 of the Penal Code. The appellant submitted his reply denying any misappropriation by him. On September 26, 1955, he was served with a charge-sheet alleging misappropriation and connivance by him of misappropriation by two constables named therein. This was followed by an enquiry held by the Deputy Superintendent of Railway Police at Samastipur. The appellant alleged that the enquiry was held partially behind his back and was, therefore, bad. In April, 1956, the Deputy Superintendent of Police submitted his findings to the Superintendent of Railway Police, Samastipur holding that the charges against the appellant had been established. These findings were then submitted to the Inspector General of Police with a recommendation that the appellant should be awarded exemplary punishment. In September 1957, the Inspector-General served a second show cause notice on the appellant to show cause why he should not be dismissed. The appellant submitted his reply and also appeared in person.

4. By his order dated September 30, 1958, the Inspector-General exonerated the appellant from the said charges. But on the basis of certain adverse remarks in the confidential character roll of the appellant, he passed an order reverting the appellant to his substantive rank of Sub-Inspector of Police for a period of one year. This order clearly was one of penalty. Admittedly, there was no charge against the appellant founded on the said adverse remarks. The adverse remarks on the basis of which the order of reversion was passed were, as the said order itself pointed out, never notified to the appellant. Nor was any opportunity to explain those remarks ever afforded to the appellant before the order of reversion was passed.

5. Aggrieved by the said order the appellant filed an appeal before the Government. On November 7, 1959, the Government set aside the order of reversion passed by the Inspector-General. That was the relief prayed for by the appellant in his said appeal. The order was set aside on the ground that no opportunity had been given to the appellant to explain the said adverse remarks, and that therefore, it was legally unsustainable. But the Government passed instead an order of dismissal disagreeing with the findings of the Inspector-General and agreeing with the findings given by the enquiry officer, by whom the appellant had been found guilty.

6. On a further appeal to the Governor having been dismissed by the Government, the appellant filed a writ petition in the High Court. On January 18, 1962, the High Court allowed the writ petition setting aside the Government's order of dismissal, but directed that the appellant's appeal should go back to the Government for disposal according to law. The Government thereupon served a notice on the appellant to show cause why he should not be dismissed from service. That notice was issued on the strength of Rr. 851 (b) and 853-A of the Bihar and Orissa Police Manual, 1930. The appellant thereupon gave his reply and requested for a personal hearing. The request for personal hearing was rejected. About a year after the High Court's order quashing the Government's order of dismissal, the Government issued an order dated March 5, 1963 reinstating the appellant, but at the same time suspending him from service. On June 15, 1963, the Government passed the order dismissing the appellant from service. Hence, the appellant filed once more the present petition which the High Court dismissed in limine.

7. The question is whether it was competent for the Government, in an appeal filed by the appellant against the said order of reversion passed by the Inspector-General of Police, to set aside the findings of that officer by which he exonerated the appellant from the said charges against him, which findings were not appealed against by the department, and then pass an order of dismissal accepting the findings of the enquiry officer.

8. The appellant was governed by the Police Act, 5 of 1861. Section 2 of the Act deals with the constitution of the police force and provides that the entire police establishment under a State Government shall, for the purposes of the Act, be deemed to be one police force, and shall be constituted in such manner as shall from time to time be ordered by the State Government. Section 3 provides that "The superintendence of the police throughout a general police district shall vest in and, shall be exercised by the State Government to which such district is subordinate". Under Section 4, the administration of the police throughout a general police district is vested in the Inspector-General of Police, and in such Deputy Inspectors-General of Police and Assistant Inspectors-General as the State Government shall deem fit. Section 7 runs as follows:

"Subject to the provisions of Article 311 of the Constitution, and to such rules as the State Government may from time to time make under this Act, the Inspector-General, Deputy Inspectors-General, Assistant Inspectors-General and District Superintendents of Police may at any time dismiss, suspend or reduce any police officer of the subordinate ranks whom they shall think remiss or negligent in the discharge of his duty, or unfit for the same, or may award any one or more of the following punishments to any police officer of the subordinate ranks who shall discharge his duty in a careless or negligent manner, or who by any act of his own shall render himself unfit for the discharge thereof, namely", pose, namely, fine, confinement to quarters, deprivation of good-conduct pay and removal from any office of distinction or special emolument.

9. It is clear that the Act itself confers on the Inspector-General power to impose in suitable cases the penalty of dismissal, suspension and reduction, subject, of course, to the provisions of Article 311 and the rules made under the Act. The power of superintendence conferred on the State Government by Section 3 must, therefore, be read in the light of the provisions of Section 7 under which the legislature has conferred specific powers to the officers mentioned therein. Therefore, the State Government cannot interfere, under the purported exercise of the general power of superintendence under Section 3, with an order passed by any one of the officers mentioned in Section 7 in exercise of the power conferred on them by that section, unless there is some provision which authorises or envisages such interference. Under Section 46 (2), the State Government has been given the power to make rules from time to time by notification in the official gazette consistent with the Act, inter alia:

"(a) to regulate the procedure to be followed by Magistrates and police-officers in the discharge of any duty imposed upon them by or under this Act;

(c) generally, for giving effect to the provisions of this Act".

It would seem that in pursuance of the rule making power under Section 46 (2) rules have been made which are to be found in the Bihar and Orissa Police Manual, 1930. The Manual has not been produced before us. But we find Rule 851 set out by the High Court in its judgment in the first writ petition filed by the appellant, reported in Makeshwar Nath v. State of Bihar, AIR 1962 Pat 276. The rule so set out reads as follows:

"General rules as to appeals:

(b) Against an order of dismissal removal, reduction, withholding of promotion or periodical increment there shall be one appeal in each case as follows;

Against an order passed by a Superintendent, to the Deputy Inspector-General;

Against an original order passed by a Deputy Inspector-General, to the Inspector-General;

Against an original order passed by the Inspector-General, to the Local Government.

(c) The order of the appellate authority on any such appeal shall be final."

Under this rule an appeal would lie before the Government against the order of the Inspector-General re-verting the appellant to his substantive post of Sub-Inspector for one year. Such an appeal was in fact filed by the appellant. But no appeal was filed by the department against the order of the Inspector-General exonerating the appellant of the charges of misappropriation and connivance of misappropriation by the two constables. Under Rule 851 (b), therefore, the only question before the Government was whether the order of reversion should be sustained or not. There was no other matter by way of an appeal before the Government by the department or by any one else being aggrieved against the order of the Inspector-General by which he held that the charges against the appellant had not been established. That being so, the Government could pass in exercise of its appellate power under Rule 851 (b) such an order as it thought fit in the appeal filed by the appellant, i. e., either upholding the order of reversion or setting it aside. In the absence of any other appeal, the Government could not sit in judgment over the findings of the Inspector-General given by him under the power conferred upon him by Section 7 of the Act. An appeal before the Government having been provided for under Rule 851 (b), presumably both by the delinquent police officer, as also by the department, if aggrieved by an order passed by the Inspector-General, there would also be no question of the Government exercising its general power of superintendence under Section 3 of the Act. The exercise of such a power is ordinarily possible when there is no provision for an appeal unless there are other provisions providing for it. The order of dismissal passed by the Government in the appeal filed by the appellant, therefore, was not sustainable.

10. We are, however, informed by counsel that the Government of Bihar has framed two Rules, Rule 853 and Rule 853-A. Rule 853, a copy of which has been furnished to us, provides:

"Memorials and Revision: — No petition or memorial which is a representation against an order passed in a disciplinary case shall be submitted to any authority other than the authority which under the rule for the time being in force is empowered to entertain the appeal".

No memorial or revision was filed either by the appellant or any one else before the Government, which was the appellate authority which could entertain such a memorial or revision. Assuming that under Rule 853 the Government could suo motu revise the order of the Inspector-General, an appeal having been filed before it, it could not so act. The fact that the power of revision is conferred on the authority possessed of appellate power indicates that the power of revision is intended to be used when an appeal could not for some reason be filed and the appellate authority felt that the order was so unjust or unreasonable that it should act under its revisional power. That was not the case of the Government before us. Nor did the Government say so in the impugned order. Therefore, there was no occasion for the Government to revise the order passed by the Inspector-General exonerating the appellant of the charges preferred against him.

11. In its order, dated January 31, 1963, the Government, no doubt, has referred to Rules 851 (b) and 853-A as being the rules under which it purported to act for the purpose of making the impugned order of dismissal. Rule 851 (b), as already pointed out, however, confers no such power. As regards Rule 853-A, it is neither set out in the impugned order, nor in the statement of case of the respondent-State. We called for its production, or even its copy, but counsel for the State expressed his inability to produce the same. Further, counsel for the appellant told us that even if Rule 853-A had been framed, it cannot operate because so far it has not been published in the official gazette as required by Section 46 (2). Counsel for the State was not in a position to throw any light whether the said rule has been framed or not and if framed whether it was notified in the Gazette. In these circumstances, he could not rely upon that rule to sustain the order of dismissal passed by the Government. We have, therefore, to go upon Rule 851 (b), which clearly does not empower the Government to pass an order such as the one impugned by the appellant on the ground of its revisional power or any such similar power under Section 3 of the Act. In the absence of any other provision of law or any rule conferring on the State Government the power to pass an order of dismissal in exercise of its revisional power or power of general superintendence, the general principle must prevail, namely, that an appellate authority in an appeal by an aggrieved party may either dismiss his appeal or allow it either wholly or partly and uphold or set aside or modify the order challenged in such appeal. It cannot surely impose on such appellant a higher penalty and condemn him to a position worse than the one he would be in if he had not hazarded to file an appeal. Since under Rule 851 (b) an appeal to the Government has been provided for and the Government had under that rule the appellate authority to dispose of appeals filed before it against the original order passed by the Inspector-General, it could not resort to any general power of superintendence except in cases where there is a provision conferring such a power in addition to its appellate authority and in the manner envisaged by such a provision.

12. In our view, the High Court was not right in dismissing the appellant's writ petition. The appeal has, therefore, to be allowed and the order of the State Government quashed as being without jurisdiction. The consequence is as if the appellant was never dismissed and continued to remain in the police force to which he was attached. The respondent-State will pay to the appellant the costs both of this appeal and also of the writ petition filed by him in the High Court.

Appeal allowed.

Constitution of India, Article 311 — Where a person in Assam Judicial Service is appointed temporarily as Judge of United Khasi-Jaintia Hills District Council Court without the sanction of the Governor and is continued in service as such even after the expiry of the age of his superannuation, without the sanction of the Government, the termination of the services of such a person without the sanction of the Governor is not illegal — (X-Ref: Civil Services — Assam Fundamental Rules, Rule 56).

Mr. M. C. Chagla, Sr. Advocate, (Mr. D. N. Mukherjee, Advocate, with him), for Appellants; Mr. Sarjoo Prasad, Sr. Advocate, (M/s. R. B. Datar and S. N. Prasad, Advocates, with him), for Respondent.

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

P. JAGANMOHAN REDDY, J.: — The short question in this Appeal which is against the Judgment of the High Court of Assam and Nagaland by special leave is whether the Respondent's services as Judge District Council Court of the Autonomous District of United Khasi-Jaintia Hills could be terminated by the District Council. The facts relevant for the appeal are that on the 26th January, 1950 the Autonomous District of United Khasi-Jaintia Hills by virtue of the provisions of clause (2) of Article 244 and the Sixth Schedule to the Constitution of India was constituted and the Governor of Assam was empowered to administer the said Autonomous District, pursuant thereto the Assam Autonomous Districts (Constitution of District Councils) Rules, 1951 were enforced as from the 15th October, 1951. On the 27th June 1952 a District Council and an Executive Committee was constituted for the said autonomous District. The District Council was empowered to constitute Courts and appoint suitable persons as Presiding Officers. On 7th June, 1954 United Khasi-Jaintia Hills Autonomous District (Administration of Justice) Rules 1953 were framed by the District Council with the approval of the Governor, Rule 9 of which reads as follows:—

"Constitution of District Council Court — (1) There shall be one District Council Court for the United Khasi-Jaintia Hills Autonomous District which shall be called the United Khasi Jaintia Hills, District Council Court. The Court shall consist of one or more Judicial Officers to be designated as Judge or Judges appointed by the Executive Committee with the approval of the Governor Provided that the Chief Executive Member or Member of the Executive Committee or any other members of the District Council shall not be entitled to hold office as Judicial Officer of the District Council Court".

2. It is admitted that no rules were made by the District Council under Rule 15 of the Constitution of District Councils Rules which empowered it to regulate conditions of service of Officers and staff appointed to the services and posts in connection with the affairs of the District Council. In the absence of these rules it is also admitted that the Assam Fundamental Rules subsidiary Rules and instructions were applicable to the Officers and staff of the District Council.

3. The Respondent who was an Additional District Judge in the senior grade of the Assam Judicial service was appointed with effect from 7-1-1954 temporarily as a Judge of the District Council without the approval of the Governor. The Governor however appointed him also as an Additional District Judge Lower Assam District for the purpose of disposal of Civil and Criminal matters under the respective Codes. On 16-2-1957 the Respondent attained the age of superannuation which was on his completion of 55 years. It would however appear that notwithstanding his having reached the age of superannuation the District Council continued him in service and by its order dated 22-4-1965 placed him in the Regular scale of Rs. 1200-60(EB)-60-1500 with effect from 1-4-1965. Thereafter on 30-7-1966 the Executive Committee of the District Council served notice upon him that his services along with the services of others mentioned in the order were terminated from 31st August, 1966. It is this impugned order that was challenged in a Writ Petition which the Respondents filed in the High Court. The High Court came to the conclusion that unless the contrary is shown that the Respondent was appointed by the District Council with the approval of the Governor while the termination was by the Council without the approval of the Governor, though we observe that even with respect to this nothing contrary was shown that the Governor had not given his approval.

4. In our view a perusal of the order of appointment would show that it was issued by the Chief Executive Member District Council and it specifically states that the appointment is temporary. Immediately after the Respondent had reached the age of superannuation the High Court wrote to the Chief Executive Member on 5-3-57 enquiring whether the Respondent has been given an extension. In reply it was informed on 25-3-57 that he was appointed on the 10th February 1954 as Judge of the District Council Courts on a temporary basis; "and he will as such continue to perform his duties till further orders made by the Council". The initial temporary appointment as will be seen from the order of 10th February 1954 was on the scale of pay of Rs. 750-30-960-1000 but later he was placed in a regular scale of pay of Rs. 1200 to Rs. 1500 as already adverted to. It is this order that is being urged as having given the Respondent a permanent post, because as the learned Advocate submits, a permanent employee is one who is appointed to a permanent post which is defined under Assam Fundamental Rule 9 (22) as a post "carrying a definite scale of pay sanctioned without limit of time". As we have already noticed the Respondent's appointment was temporary and was continuing as such. Merely placing him in a scale of pay which is different to the one in which he was temporarily appointed does not make him a permanent employee. To become permanent he must be confirmed, but that question can never arise because under those very Fundamental Rules which it is not denied apply to him in the absence of any rules made by the District Council, the date of his compulsory retirement according to Fundamental Rule 56 is the date on which he attains the age of 55 years, and if he is retained after this date it can only be done with the sanction of the Government which admittedly in his case has not been given. Even if the validity of his appointment by the District Council without the sanction of the Governor which was a necessary condition for valid appointment is overlooked he cannot complain that his termination by the very Council is without the Governor's sanction. We can find no justification for his continuance nor was any rule or regulation fundamental otherwise shown to us to continue him in service without the sanction and under some valid rule. The argument that the Governor had invested the Respondents with powers for the scheduled Districts and lower Assam is equally, unhelpful because this was also admittedly done in 1954 long prior to his attaining the age of superannuation when without a valid extension of the service he could not continue in service after that date. Viewed from any angle the Respondent's plea is untenable, as such the Appeal is allowed and the Writ Petition dismissed, but in the circumstances without costs.

5. Before we part with the case we were distressed to note certain personal remarks made by the learned Chief Justice against one of the Hon'ble Judges of that Court. To us these remarks do not appear to be either proper or just. By making these remarks the learned Chief Justice has let down his office as well as his Court. In the objective discharge of judicial functions there is little justification nay, none-at-all to assume any attitude other than of judicial restraint or to use a language while referring to one's colleagues other than that which has been hitherto adopted by long usage.

Order accordingly.

RAY, J.: — This is an appeal by special leave from the judgment dated 16 February, 1968 of the High Court of Bombay convicting the appellant under Section 302 read with Section 34 of the Indian Penal Code. The Sessions Judge tried the appellant

Indian Penal Code. The High Court convicted accused Nos. 1, 2 and 5 under Section 302 read with Section 34

ed each of them to imprisonment for life. The High Court convicted accused Nos. 2, 3 and 6 under Section

2. Accused No. 1 Habib Ahmed, accused No. 2 Maksood Ahmed and accused No. 6 Mohmood Ahmed are brothers. Accused No. 3 Darogasingh and accused No. 4 Chandra Shekhar are also brothers and their third brother was known in the locality as Phelwan. Phelwan was absconding since the date of the offence. Gaya Prasad alias Chakkiwala, accused No. 5 was the owner of a flour mill and was referred to by all the witnesses as Chakkiwala. Accused No. 5 is the only appellant.

3. Accused No. 1 lived in a house Masjid Chawl at Khar in Greater Bombay. Rashidkhan the deceased in the present appeal along with a few other persons of the locality passed a resolution that accused No. 1 should not be permitted to live in a part of the Masjid. This led to hostility between accused No. 1 and Rashidkhan. About two months before date of the incident 16 August, 1965 accused No. 2, the brother of accused No. 1, borrowed a silver bracelet from Hanisuddin Saifulla. The bracelet belonged to Hanisuddin's wife Wahidan. Accused No. 2 borrowed the bracelet on the pretext that he wanted to make a similar bracelet for his wife. On 15 August, 1965, accused No. 2 called on Hanisuddin. He asked for the return of the bracelet. Accused No. 2 refused to return it and instead brandished a knife. Hanisuddin went to the police station and lodged a complaint.

4. On 16 August, 1965 accused No. 2 again went to Hanisuddin's hut at about 9 p. m. Hanisuddin reminded accused No. 2 of the bracelet. Accused No. 2 started abusing him. Wahidan was frightened and escaped by a rear door. She went to the police station and reported the matter. Hanisuddin came out and saw accused No. 1, Rashidkhan and Phelwan on the road. Hanisuddin told Phelwan that accused No. 2 was threatening him with a knife. Phelwan said that it was not likely because accused No. 2 had not been seen in the locality for two years. Rashidkhan told Phelwan that he had seen accused No. 2 in the locality that very day. Phelwan asked Rashidkhan to point out where accused No. 2 was. Phelwan, Rashidkhan and accused No. 1 went into a lane and thereafter to the room of accused No. 1. Accused No. 2 could not be found in the house of accused No. 1. Thereupon Phelwan, Rashidkhan and accused No. 1 went round the colony and entered a lane to the west of Rashid Chawl. In front of Rashid Chawl was another Chawl called Mulla Panwala Chawl. The incident happened in a narrow open space between the two Chawls.

5. Accused No. 1 returned to the open place with a knife in his hand. He was followed by the appellant accused No. 5 and finding that Rashid was standing in the open space between the two Chawls accused No. 5 gave a shout 'maro, maro'. Accused No. 1 then gave two blows with a knife on the buttocks of Rashid. Rashid turned and caught hold of accused No. 1. Phelwan caught hold of Rashid and threw him on the ground. Accused No. 1 sat on Rashid and gave two knife blows on Rashid's face. Phelwan also assaulted Rashid with a knife. Phelwan kept on saying that it was a matter of no concern if he was sentenced to a term of twenty years. Mehmoodkhan who saw the assault on Rashid, tried to go to his help. Sunder Anna another absconding accused engaged Mehmoodkhan in a struggle. While the struggle was going on accused No. 2 attacked Rashid with a knife. Accused Nos. 3 and 6 came on the scene and were armed with stripped stick and iron pipe respectively. They assaulted Mehmoodkhan repeatedly. So did accused No. 4 who was armed with a stick with a knob on. Accused No. 3 pulled out a pipe from the roof of Rashid's house and gave a blow on the face of Rashid with that pipe and Phelwan gave a final blow on his back.

6. Hanisuddin, who had seen the entire incident went to the police station and on his way saw a police jeep coming from the opposite direction. Hanisuddin told the police Sub-Inspector that accused Nos. 1, 2, Phelwan and Sunder Anna the two absconders had killed Rashid.

7. Four eye-witnesses Mehmoodkhan, Hamidkhan, Nazeemkhan, Bashirkhan, Hanisuddin, Saifulla and Abdul Sattar Badesaheb were examined by the prosecution. Mehmoodkhan, Hamidkhan was the principal eye-witness with regard to the attack with the pipe which resulted in the death of Rashid. The evidence of the eye-witness was that the appellant accused No. 5 shouted 'maro, maro' and immediately thereupon accused No. 1 caused two knife injuries to Rashidkhan on the buttocks. Phelwan then caught hold of Rashidkhan and threw him on the ground. Accused No. 1 sat on the chest of Rashidkhan and gave him two knife injuries on the face. Phelwan and accused No. 2 stabbed Rashidkhan. Mehmoodkhan tried to go to the rescue of Rashidkhan. Sunder Anna grappled with Mehmoodkhan. Accused Nos. 3, 4 and 6 started beating Mehmoodkhan. Accused No. 3 gave a blow with a pipe to Rashid on the face and Phelwan gave a fatal blow on the back.

8. Counsel on behalf of the appellant contended that the evidence that the appellant shouted 'maro, maro' was not free from doubt. It was also emphasised that assuming that the appellant was present, he did not carry any weapon and arms and he had no motive and on the facts it could not be said that between accused No. 1 and accused No. 5 there was any prior meeting for a pre-conceived plan and therefore there was no common intention. Counsel for the appellant relied on the decision of this Court in Pandurang, Tukia and Bhillia v. The State of Hyderabad, (1955) 1 SCR 1083 = (AIR 1955 SC 216) in support of the proposition that care should be taken not to confuse same or similar intention with common intention and the common intention required a pre-arranged plan and therefore there must be a prior meeting of minds. That statement of law is indisputable. The evidence found by the High Court is that Rashidkhan and Mehmoodkhan were assaulted at a place which was a narrow open space surrounded by huts on all sides in the colony except for the two small openings in the east and the west. The attack on Rashidkhan was not unpremeditated. The suddenness is accentuated by the shout given by the appellant. The ghastly attack in the narrow space could not by combination of circumstances be preceded by any commotion.

9. As to the appellant there is the consistent testimony of each of the eye-witnesses that the incident commenced with the appellant shouting 'maro, maro'. There is evidence to show that accused No. 1 was armed with a knife and the lead which accused No. 5, the appellant gave establishes that accused No. 1 should commence the attack on Rashidkhan with a knife. The result is that accused No. 5, the appellant, shared in intention of accused Nos. 1 and 2 to commit the murder of Rashidkhan.

10. Accused Nos. 3 and 6 did not take any part in the assault on Rashidkhan and they in fact had gone to the scene of offence after the assault on Rashidkhan had commenced.

11. Accused No. 5 gave an alibi that he was treated as an out-door patient from 14 August, 1965 at Dr. K. C. Shah's Hospital. The trial Court rejected the evidence of Dr. Shah and found that the doctor's record was unworthy of credence.

12. The appellant, it is true, was not armed with any weapon. The witnesses spoke of the shout given by accused No. 5, the appellant. At the time the police Sub-Inspector went to the place of occurrence the names of accused Nos. 1 and 2 and of the two absconding accused were mentioned. The High Court acquitted accused No. 4 on the ground that three out of the four eye-witnesses did not refer either to the presence or participation of accused No. 4 and therefore accused No. 4 was given the benefit of doubt. As to accused Nos. 3 and 6 the High Court held that they were members of an unlawful assembly, because there was evidence to show that these two accused came on the scene after the attack on Rashid had commenced and therefore it could not be said that they were members of an unlawful assembly with the common intention to commit the murder of Rashidkhan. As to accused Nos. 1, 2 and 5 the High Court found that they were members of an unlawful assembly with the common intention to commit the murder of Rashidkhan. The shout of accused No. 5, the appellant established beyond any doubt that he shared the common intention to commit the murder of Rashidkhan. The judgment of the High Court is correct.

13. There is no merit in this appeal. The appeal fails and is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Dr. L. M. Singhvi, Sr. Advocate, (Mr. S. P. Nayar, Advocate, with him), for Appellant (In all the Appeals).

RAY, J.: — These appeals are by certificate from the judgment dated 13 August, 1968 of the High Court at Calcutta holding that the memorandum of appeals from an order of acquittal were barred by Article 114 of the Limitation Act, 1963.

2. The appeals were directed against orders of acquittal passed by the Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta on 4 April, 1968. The four petitions of appeal were presented in the High Court on 1 July, 1968 by the learned Advocate authorised by the Vakalatnama executed by the Assistant Registrar of Companies, West Bengal described as the appellant in all the petitions.

3. The Assistant Registrar of Companies, West Bengal filed petitions of complaint before the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta alleging that the certain officers/directors of the Standard Paint Works (P) Ltd. of 44 Beadon Row, Calcutta mentioned therein were guilty of offence for non-compliance with provisions contained in the Companies Act, 1956 by reason of default in filing Annual Return of the Company together with the Annual Accounts and Balance sheet. Section 210 of the Companies Act requires annual accounts and balance sheet of the Company to be filed within the time mentioned in the section. If any person being a director of the company fails to take all reasonable steps to comply with the provisions of Section 210, he shall, in respect of each offence, be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both. The complainant in filing the petitions of complaint prayed for exemption of personal appearance under proviso to Section 247 of the Code of Criminal Procedure read with Section 621 (1-A) of the Companies Act.

*(Cri. Appls. Nos. 425 to 428 of 1968, D/- 13-8-1968 — Cal.)

4. The Presidency Magistrate passed the orders of acquittal in all the cases.

5. Section 417 of the Code of Criminal Procedure speaks of appeal in case of acquittal. Sub-section (3) of that section is as follows:—

"If such an order of acquittal is passed in any case instituted upon complaint and the High Court, on an application made to it by the complainant in this behalf, grants special leave to appeal from the order of acquittal, the complainant may present such an appeal to the High Court".

6. Section 417 (4) of the Code of Criminal Procedure states that no application under sub-section (3) for grant of special leave to appeal from an order of acquittal shall be entertained by the High Court after the expiry of 60 days from the date of the order of acquittal. No application was made to the High Court in compliance with Section 417 (3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

7. On behalf of the appellant it was contended both in the High Court and in this Court that the appeals were preferred under Section 624-B of the Companies Act, 1956. Section 624-B is as follows:—

"Notwithstanding anything contained in the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, the Central Government may, in any case arising out of this Act, direct any company prosecutor or authorise any other person either by name or by virtue of his office, to present an appeal from an order of acquittal passed by any Court other than a High Court and an appeal presented by such prosecutor or other person shall be deemed to have been validly presented to the appellate Court".

8. The contention on behalf of the appellant that the right of appeal is conferred by Section 624-B of the Companies Act is unacceptable. Section 624-B only speaks of the Central Government directing or authorising any person to present an appeal from the order of acquittal.

9. Section 417 (1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure enacts that in case of acquittal the State Government may direct the Public Prosecutor to present an appeal to the High Court. Section 624-B of the Companies Act empowers the Central Government to present appeals through persons mentioned in that section. Presentation of appeal by the Central Government is a similar provision to Section 417 (1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

10. Chapter XXXI of the Code of Criminal Procedure relates to appeals. Appeal is a creature of statute. The right to appeal is governed by the Code of Criminal Procedure. Section 404 of the Code of Criminal Procedure states that no appeal shall lie from any judgment or order of a Criminal Court except as provided for by the Code of Criminal Procedure or by any other law for the time being in force. Section 624-B of the Companies Act does not confer any right of appeal from any order passed by a Criminal Court in respect of any offence under the provisions of the Companies Act. The right to appeal to the High Court in the present cases of acquittal is governed by section 417 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

11. Article 114 of the Limitation Act, 1963 requires appeal under subsection (3) of section 417 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to be filed within 30 days from the date of the grant of special leave. No application for the grant of special leave to appeal from an order of acquittal was made within 60 days from that order of acquittal. The orders of acquittal were passed on 4 April, 1968. The petitions of appeal were presented on 1 July, 1968. The appeals were rightly not entertained by the High Court because first there was no application for grant of special leave under section 417 (3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure; secondly, the appeals were incompetent without grant of special leave, and thirdly these were barred by limitation. An appeal under Section 417 (3) against acquittal is competent only when there is special leave granted by the High Court. On obtaining special leave the appeal is thereafter filed within 30 days of the grant of leave to escape the mischief of the period of limitation under Article 114 of the Limitation Act, 1963.

12. A provision in the Companies Act which confers right of appeal is Section 483. It speaks of appeals from orders made and the decisions given in the matter of winding up of the companies by the Court and it enacts that such appeals shall lie to the same Court to which, in the same manner in which, and subject to the same conditions under which, appeals lie from any order or decision of the Court in cases within its ordinary jurisdiction. Section 624-B is not such a section which can be said to be conferring a right of appeal. Section 624-B only mentions as to the person through whom appeal is presented.

13. The appeals therefore fail and are dismissed.

Appeals dismissed.

M/s. Naunit Lal and S. K. Handi, Advocates, for Appellant; Mr. K. B. Mehra, Advocate, for Respondent.

VAIDIALINGAM, J.: — This appeal by the accused, by special leave, is directed against the judgment and order of the Rajasthan High Court dated August 7, 1968 in D. B. Criminal Appeal No. 394 of 1964.

2. The appellant was tried in Sessions Case No. 4 of 1963 by the Addl. Sessions Judge, Ajmer for an offence under Section 302, I. P. C. for causing the death of his brother Bajrang Lal on July 15, 1962. The Sessions Judge acquitted the appellant by his judgment and order dated January 4, 1964. The State filed an appeal before the High Court against the decision of the Sessions Judge. The High Court has set aside the order of acquittal and in turn has convicted the appellant for the offence under Section 302, I. P. C. and has sentenced him to undergo imprisonment for life. The case of the prosecution was as follows:

3. The appellant and his three brothers Bhanwarlal, Uchhablal and Bajrang Lal owned jointly 14 bighas of land as joint family property. Bhanwarlal had died some 15 or 16 years before the occurrence. There was a dispute between the appellant and his two brothers Uchhablal and Bajranglal and the heirs of his deceased brother Bhanwarlal on the question of effecting partition of the land. About three or four years prior to the occurrence Uchhablal and his brother Bajranglal along with one Hiralal son of their brother Bhanwarlal had filed a suit against the appellant for partition of the land. About two or three days prior to the occurrence, deceased Bajranglal and Uchhablal had commenced putting up the Doli enclosing that portion of the land which, according to them, represented their shares. On the day of the occurrence i. e., July 15, 1962, at about 3 P. M. the deceased and Uchhablal as usual went to the field to complete the work of putting up the Doli. When they were at their work, the appellant came to the field at about 6 P. M. armed with a gun and after threatening them fired a shot against Bajranglal. The shot hit Bajranglal on his chest and he fell down dead. When Uchhablal tried to snatch the gun from the appellant, the latter gave him some blows on his knee and back with the barrel of the gun. During this scuffle the genti which Uchhablal had in his hand hit the head of the accused. Uchhablal, on the same evening at about 6.45 P. M., gave a complaint Ex. P. 1 before the police. The accused was arrested the next day and the gun Ex. 13 was recovered from him.

4. P. W. 15, Dr. Umed Singh Rathore, who performed the post-mortem on the body of the deceased found the following external and internal injuries, described in the post-mortem certificate:

(a) External injuries:

(1) A punched circular wound of the size of $\frac{1}{2}$ "x $\frac{1}{2}$ "x5" depth with inverted ecchymosed edges placed on the chest left side between 3 and 4 ribs 2" from the midsternal line directed towards back.

(2) An oval oblique wound of the size of $\frac{1}{2}$ "x2/3" with everted and irregular edges on back left side 3" from the middle at the level of the 7th spine.

(b) Internal injuries:

(1) 8th rib fractured on left side back with irregular rough and crushed fractured ends. A few pieces of bones weeded in the wound.

(3) A circular wound hole in the left lung upper lobe anterior aspect with direction behind. Diameter of the hole 1".

5. P. W. 15 has given evidence to the effect that the cause of death was syncope due to injury to the left lung by a fire arm. The appellant was also examined by P. W. 15 on the same evening. The appellant had a lacerated wound with irregular and contused borders and bleeding on touching placed vertically on the back of the hand on the occipital region, right side 3 inches from the right mastoid. The size of the injury was stated to be $1\frac{1}{2}$ "x1/5"x1/3". Uchhablal was also examined on the same day by P. W. 15. He had two contusions, three abrasions and a linear scratch. One abrasion and one contusion was on the back and one abrasion was on the left scapular region and one abrasion was on the left knee.

6. The prosecution mainly relied on the evidence of Uchhablal, P. W. 1 and Narain P. W. 2 regarding the incident. The appellant when he was examined under Section 342 Code of Criminal Procedure pleaded that the land had been given by his father as his share as he had taken over the liability to discharge the entire debts of his father. He further stated that he had gone to the jungle with his gun for hunting and was returning home on the evening of the day in question. His land was on his way to his house from the jungle. When he came near the land he found his two brothers, the deceased and P. W. 1, constructing the Doli on his field. He questioned them as to why they were doing an illegal act, when the matter was before the Court. But his two brothers protested against his interference and P. W. 1 caught hold of him, with the gun. The deceased then gave a blow with the genti on his head. The deceased also caught hold of the barrel of the gun which was in his hand and tried to snatch it away. During this attempt made by the deceased, the appellant pulled the gun towards him and the gun went off and hit the deceased on his chest and the latter fell down and died on the spot. The appellant admitted that the police recovered the gun Ex. 13 from him and also the shirt and bandi. He also examined two witnesses to prove that there was no enmity between him and the deceased. Therefore, it will be noted that the plea of the accused was that he did not shoot the deceased, but, on the other hand Bajranglal died receiving a gun shot injury by the gun going off accidentally. As the presence of the appellant near the field at the time of the incident, as also the fact that Bajranglal died as a result of the injuries sustained by him by the gun shot, are admitted by the appellant, it is not necessary to refer to the various items of evidence led by the prosecution in this regard.

7. The learned Sessions Judge did not believe the evidence of P. W. 2 and it is also seen that even before the High Court the State did not place any reliance on his evidence and it was conceded that P. W. 2 had not actually seen the occurrence. Therefore, the main evidence relating to the actual occurrence was that of P. W. 1. He was examined on April 8, 1963. In his examination-in-chief he supported the prosecution in full and also admitted that the facts mentioned in Ex. P. 1 were true. It may be stated at this stage that P. W. 1's evidence in examination-in-chief relating to the incident was in accordance with the facts mentioned in Ex. P. 1. On the same day he was cross-examined for some time. But when the cross-examination continued on the next day, that is, on April 9, 1963, he completely went back upon the evidence given in examination-in-chief. On the other hand, he gave a version to the effect that the appellant did not intentionally shoot Bajranglal and that the latter sustained the injury in consequence of the gun going off by accident. In fact he has also stated that when the accused protested against the Doli being constructed, Bajranglal began to beat the appellant with a genti and tried to snatch the gun from the appellant. It was when Bajranglal attempted to snatch the gun that it went off accidentally causing an injury to the deceased.

8. The learned Sessions Judge was of the opinion that as P. W. 1 in his cross-examination has totally supported the appellant and as there was no other independent evidence against the appellant, it was unsafe to act on the testimony of P. W. 1 and convict the appellant. The learned Sessions Judge was also of the view that the defence story cannot be ruled out as improbable in the circumstances. For these reasons, the learned Sessions Judge acquitted the appellant.

9. On appeal by the State, the High Court set aside the order of acquittal. The High Court in the main has acted on the facts contained in Ex. P. 1 evidence given by P. W. 1, before the committal Court Ex. P. 7, treating the same as substantive evidence under Section 288 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and the answers given in the chief examination by P. W. 1. The High Court is of the view that P. W. 1, has been won over by the appellant and the answers given in cross-examination with a view to support the appellant are false. In order to act on the answers given by P. W. 1 in his chief examination, it found corroboration in Ex. P. 1, Ex. P. 7 and Ex. P. 28, the report of the ballistic expert. As the report Ex. P. 28 was already before the Court, the High Court examined the ballistic expert as Court Witness No. 1, in to clarify the position whether the gun could have gone off accidentally as pleaded by the appellant and supported by P. W. 1 in his answers given in cross-examination. C. W. 1 was examined in the presence of the appellant and the latter was given a full opportunity to cross-examine him. From the evidence of C. W. 1 read with his report Ex. P. 28, the High Court is of the view that the plea of the accused that the deceased sustained the injury by the gun going off accidentally is improbable. Even in respect of treating Ex. P. 7 as substantive evidence, the High Court examined P. W. 1 and also provided the appellant an opportunity to cross-examine the said witness again.

10. On a review of the entire evidence on record, the High Court came to the conclusion that the deceased was shot at by the appellant with an intention to kill him and the injury sustained by the appellant was at the hands of P. W. 1 after the shooting incident. The plea of the appellant that the gun went off accidentally, in consequence of which Bajranglal sustained an injury and died was rejected by the High Court. In the end the High Court convicted the appellant of the offence under Section 302 and sentenced him to undergo imprisonment for life.

11. Mr. Naunit Lal, learned counsel for the appellant, has raised in the main three contentions: (1) the High Court was not justified in treating Ex. P. 7 as substantive evidence and by doing so the High Court has really filled up the lacuna in the case of the prosecution; (2) the High Court has erred in basing the conviction on the sole testimony of P. W. 1, who had given conflicting versions in his examination-in-chief and cross-examination, especially when there was no independent evidence to corroborate his evidence given in chief-examination; and (3) the plea of the appellant regarding the circumstances under which Bajranglal sustained the injury ought to have been accepted.

12. Mr. K. B. Mehta, learned counsel for the State, on the other hand, supported the reasons given by the High Court in reversing the order of acquittal.

13. All the contentions of Mr. Naunit Lal can be dealt with together. In our opinion, the High Court was justified in treating Ex. P. 7 as substantive evidence under Section 288, Criminal P. C. and in doing so there was no question of the Court trying to fill up any lacuna in the case of the prosecution, P. W. 1, in the complaint Ex. P. 1, given immediately after the incident, had categorically stated that on the day in question he and the deceased were putting up the Doli when the accused came armed with a gun and found fault with them and said "beware I am giving you the share of the land". So saying he fired the gun at Bajranglal from a distance of about 10 or 12 feet. Bajranglal on receiving the gun shot on his chest fell down dead. The witness ran to snatch the gun from the appellant when the latter gave him some blows with the barrel of the gun. The genti in the hand of the witness slipped at that time and fell on the head of the accused. From this it is clear that the deceased never grappled with the appellant and he was the victim of shooting by the appellant. The injury received on the head of the appellant was sustained by the genti of P. W. 1 falling on the head of the appellant and this happened after Bajranglal had been shot dead. The same version was spoken to by P. W. 1, before the committal Court, which had been marked as Ex. P. 7. P. W. 1 had admitted that Ex. P. 1 was given by him voluntarily and that he signed it after it was read over to him by the police and there was no compulsion exercised by the police at that stage. Regarding Ex. P. 7, in his chief examination he had stated that he had given such a statement before the committal Court, but in cross-examination he explained it by saying that he was compelled to give such a statement by the police. In the chief-examination before the Court, when he was examined on April 8, 1963, he gave the same version as that contained in Ex. P. 1 and Ex. P. 7, but when his cross-examination took place, on the next day, he began to give answers in favour of the appellant making it appear that the appellant was not aggressive and that in the scuffle that took place, between the deceased and the appellant, the gun went off accidentally. In fact he has also stated that when the appellant protested against the putting up of the Doli, the deceased hit the appellant on his head with the genti.

14. Ex. P. 7 was already in evidence before the Magistrate and normally that statement should have been treated even by that Court as substantive evidence under Section 288, Criminal P. C. In fact he has been examined and cross-examined about Ex. P. 7 even during the trial. Therefore, the High Court did not do anything to fill up any lacuna in the prosecution case. On the other hand, to complete the record and to enable it to act on Ex. P. 7 by treating it as substantive evidence, it passed orders to that effect and examined P. W. 1 and gave an opportunity to the appellant to cross-examine the said witness. Therefore, there is nothing illegal or irregular in the High Court taking action under Section 288, Criminal P. C. and treating Ex. P. 7 as substantive evidence.

15. The report of the ballistic expert Ex. 28 was already before the Court and the High Court was justified in examining the ballistic expert as Court witness No. 1. The object of examining him was to ascertain whether it was probable for the gun to have gone off accidentally as pleaded by the appellant. The ballistic expert was examined in the presence of the appellant and an opportunity was given to him to cross-examine the said witness. In fact if that evidence had in any manner supported the plea of the appellant, we dare say the High Court would have given due consideration regarding the plea raised by the appellant in that regard. On the other hand, the evidence of C. W. 1 was that the gun could not have gone off accidentally and he has given very good reasons for his opinion. It is also in evidence that there was no blackening and charring near the wound sustained by the deceased. From all these circumstances, C. W. 1 has stated that the gun should have been fired from a distance of more than 5 or 6 feet, which makes the plea of tussle between the appellant and the deceased, as highly improbable. In fact the evidence that the gun must have been fired more than four or five feet from the target is also supported by the statement of P. W. 1 in Ex. P. 1, Ex. P. 7 and in his chief examination that the appellant fired the gun at Bajranglal when he was about 10 feet away from him.

16. The injuries sustained by P. W. 1 and the nature of injury sustained by the appellant also corroborate the original version given by P. W. 1 in Ex. P. 1. That he had turned hostile to the prosecution with an attempt to support his brother is evident from the fact that he completely resiled from the statement made in Ex. P. 1 and Ex. P. 7 and in his chief examination. It is no doubt true that the evidence of such a witness like P. W. 1 has to be treated with caution, but it is not as if that the High Court has merely acted on the answers given by him in his chief examination. On the other hand, the High Court has taken care to see whether there is other independent corroboration to enable the Court to act on the answers given by P. W. 1 in his chief examination. Such corroboration, the High Court found in Ex. P. 1, Ex. P. 7 and Ex. P. 28, as well as the evidence of the ballistic expert, C. W. 1. If these items of evidence are accepted, it is clear that the shooting by the appellant was intentional and that he had no right of private defence as the injury in his head had been sustained by him not at the hands of the deceased but at the hands of his other brother P. W. 1, after the said incident was over. It follows that the plea of the appellant regarding the deceased having sustained the injury by the gun going off accidentally, is absolutely false. We do not see any error in the approach made by the High Court in setting aside the order of acquittal.

17. The appeal fails and is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Mr. S. V. Gupte, Sr. Advocate, (Mr. D. P. Singh, Advocate of M/s. Ramamurthi and Co. and M/s. R. K. Jain and V. J. Francis, Advocates, with him), for Appellants; Mr. Debabrata Mukherjee, Sr. Advocate, (Mr. R. N. Sachthey, Advocate, with him), for Respondent.

RAY, J.: — This is an appeal by special leave against the order and judgment dated 9, September, 1968 of the High Court of Rajasthan.

2. The question for consideration is whether the Additional Special Judge, Rajasthan, Jaipur could proceed with the trial of Criminal Case No. 2/68/Spl. Cr. as directed by the order of the High Court. That case was initiated under a sanction accorded by the Central Government under Section 197 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and Section 6 (1) (a) of the Prevention of Corruption Act and the appellants along with four civilians were charged with offences punishable under Sections 120-B, 161, 165-A, 420, 409 and 467-A of the Indian Penal Code and Section 5 (2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act read with Sections 5 (1) (a) and 5 (1) (d) of the Prevention of Corruption Act.

3. The Special Police Establishment, Jaipur Branch on 27 January, 1966 put up before the Special Judge, Jaipur a charge-sheet against the four appellants and four civilians. One of the civilians turned approver. The four appellants thereafter made an application on 13 September, 1966 before the Special Judge that they were Commissioned Officers of the Indian Army and without complying with the provisions of Section 549 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and the Rules thereunder called the "Criminal Courts and Court Martial (Adjustment of Jurisdiction) Rules", the Special Judge could not proceed against the appellants in the criminal Court which under the Army Act is described as a civil Court as opposed to Court-martial under the Army Acts. The Special Judge rejected that application on 10 October, 1966 and ordered that the case would be put up for further proceedings on 16 January, 1967. A revision application was thereafter moved in the Rajasthan High Court. The High Court of Rajasthan by order and judgment dated 20 December, 1966 said that the Special Judge would proceed in accordance with the provisions of Rules 3 and 4 of the Rules framed under Section 549 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

4. In compliance with the aforesaid order of the High Court, the Special Judge on 12 January, 1967 gave notice to the Commanding Officer, 123 Infantry Battalion (T. A.), Jaipur notifying under Rule 4 of the Criminal Courts and Court Martial (Adjustment of Jurisdiction) Rules, 1952 that the appellants along with three civilians were charged with the offences as indicated above and charges would be "framed against the accused after the expiry of a period of seven days from the date of the service of the notice". On 16 January, 1967 the Officer Commanding wrote to the Special Judge for Rajasthan that in exercise of the powers conferred upon him by Rule 5 of the Criminal Courts and Court Martial (Adjustment of Jurisdiction) Rules, 1952 the Officer Commanding gave notice that the four Officers meaning thereby the appellants belonged to his Unit and that the appellants would be tried by Court Martial under the Army Act, 1950 for the offences alleged to have been committed by them as set out in the notice of the Special Judge and that the Court of the Special Judge was requested to stay the proceedings against the four appellants with immediate effect. The letter concluded by stating that the four appellants might be delivered immediately to Major R. N. Kesar who was carrying the notice to be handed over to the Court by hand.

5. On 17 January, 1967 the State of Rajasthan made an application before the Special Judge that under Section 122 of the Army Act, 1950 a period of three years was provided after which no Court Martial proceedings could be commenced against the Army Officers and the period of limitation was to be computed from the date of such offence. The charges of conspiracy and corruption against the appellants were alleged to have been committed in the month of December, 1962 and the end of the year 1963 and as such, according to the State of Rajasthan, the limitation for the purpose of Court Martial expired with the close of the year, 1966. The State of Rajasthan submitted that the Special Judge took cognizance of the case on the basis of sanction granted by the Central Government and there were two orders one from the highest authority of the Government, namely, the President of India sanctioning the prosecution of the appellants by a competent criminal Court and the other by an Officer Commanding for holding a Court Martial and therefore the matter might be referred to the Central Government for clarification. The Special Judge on 17 January, 1967 held that along with the appellants three civilians were charged with the commission of offence and they could not be tried by Court Martial. The Special Judge requested the Commanding Officer to make a reference to the Central Government within seven days failing which the Special Judge would make a reference to the Central Government. The Special Judge did not deliver the four appellants to the Commanding Officer.

6. On 28 January, 1967 the Officer Commanding, 123 Infantry Battalion (T. A.), Jaipur wrote to the Special Judge that the notice under Rule 5 of the Criminal Courts and Court Martial (Adjustment of Jurisdiction) Rules, 1952 served by the Officer on the Special Judge by letter dated 16 January, 1967 might be treated as cancelled.

7. On 21 March, 1968 the appellants made an application before the Additional Special Judge, Jaipur that the Commanding Officer acted illegally and without jurisdiction in cancelling the earlier notice dated 16 January, 1967 and the Commanding Officer should have made a reference to the Chief of the Army Staff. The appellants prayed that they might be handed over to the Commanding Officer in terms of the letter dated 17 January, 1967 issued by the Commanding Officer asking the Special Judge to deliver the appellants to the Army authorities. On 5 April, 1968 the Additional Special Judge held that the Officer Commanding revised his discretion and intimated by letter dated 28 January, 1967 that the earlier notice dated 16 January, 1967 issued under Rule 5 requiring delivery of the appellants to the Army authorities for trial by Court Martial was cancelled and therefore the Special Judge would try the case and not deliver the appellants to the army authorities.

8. The appellants thereafter made an application to the High Court of Rajasthan under Section 435 read with Section 561-A of the Code of Criminal Procedure for quashing the proceedings before the Additional Special Judge and for directing the Special Judge to hand over the appellants to be tried by Court Martial. The High Court by order dated 9-9-1969* dismissed the revision application and directed the Special Judge, Rajasthan to conduct the trial expeditiously, because sufficient time had elapsed since the submission of the charge-sheet by the Special Police Establishment Branch, Jaipur.

9. Counsel on behalf of the appellants contended that the order of the High Court was wrong for 3 reasons: First, that the Special Judge having issued a notice on 12 January, 1967 under Rule 4 of the Criminal Courts and Court Martial (Adjustment of Jurisdiction) Rules, 1952 to the Officer Commanding and having received a reply dated 16 January, 1967 from the Officer, the Special Judge had no jurisdiction to deal with an application of the State made on 17 January, 1967 and pass an order on 17 January, 1967 on the stay application that the Commanding Officer should make a reference to the Central Government. The second contention was that the Commanding Officer had no power to cancel the intimation dated 16 January, 1967 by the subsequent letter dated 28 January, 1967.

Thirdly, it was said that the sanction for prosecution accorded by the Central Government had no relevance to Section 549 of the Code of Criminal Procedure read with the Rules.

10. Counsel on behalf of the respondent on the other hand contended that the Officer Commanding by letter dated 28 January, 1967 cancelled the earlier notice dated 16 January, 1967 with the result that no Court Martial proceeding was to be commenced against the appellants. It was said on behalf of the respondent that the competent military authority had power and jurisdiction to cancel the letter dated 16 January, 1967. Secondly, it was said that the Special Judge had jurisdiction and authority to try and dispose of the case which was pending on 30 June, 1966 in the Criminal Court by virtue of the provisions contained in the Criminal Law Amendment (Amending) Act, 1966. The third contention was that the Special Judge was justified in making an order on 17 January, 1967 requesting the competent military authority to make a reference to the Central Government failing which the Special Judge would make a reference to the Central Government.

11. In order to appreciate the rival contentions reference has to be made to Sections 125 and 126 of the Army Act and Rules 3 to 9 of the Criminal Courts and Court Martial (Adjustment of Jurisdiction) Rules, 1952 made by the Central Government in exercise of the powers under Section 549 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

12. Sections 125 and 126 of the Army Act are framed for the purpose of ensuring that there is no conflict between the criminal Court and the Court Martial. Section 125 confers discretion on the Officer Commanding of the army corps, division or brigade in which the accused is serving to decide before which Court the proceedings shall be instituted in respect of an offence alleged to be committed by the accused. If the decision will be for institution of proceedings before the Court Martial direction is given for detention of the accused in military custody. Section 126 provides that where a criminal Court having jurisdiction is of opinion that proceedings shall be instituted before it in respect of any alleged offence, the criminal Court, may require the Officer Commanding mentioned in Section 125 of the Army Act either to deliver the offender to the Magistrate or to postpone proceedings pending a reference to the Central Government. Section 126 (2) of the Army Act provides that the Officer Commanding shall either deliver the offender to the Magistrate or shall refer the question to the Central Government whose order upon such reference shall be final. These two sections of the Army Act do not leave any room for doubt that if after commencement of Court Martial proceedings the ordinary criminal Court intends to proceed against an accused who is subject to the control of the Army Act, the criminal Court will have to adopt either of the two courses mentioned. The order of the Central Government shall be final in cases of reference by the criminal Court to the Government.

13. In the present case, there was in the beginning suggestion by the Officer Commanding of institution of Court Martial proceedings. When the Special Judge found on the application made by the State on 17 January, 1967 that Section 122 of the Army Act raised the bar of limitation with regard to initiation of Court Martial proceedings and further found that there were civilians charged along with the appellants, it was not unjustified in asking the Officer Commanding to make a reference to the Government in order to prevent any competition or conflict between the Criminal Courts and Court Martial. On 17 January, 1967 as matters stood, the Special Judge had the intimation from the Officer Commanding that Court Martial proceedings would be instituted. Therefore on a reading of Section 126 of the Army Act the Special Judge requested the Officer Commanding to refer the question to the Central Government for determination as to the Court before which proceedings would be started.

14. Section 549 of the Code of Criminal Procedure empowers the Central Government to make Rules as to the case in which persons subject to military, naval or air-force law be tried by a Court to which the Code of Criminal Procedure applies or by Court Martial. When any such person is brought before the Magistrate and charged with an offence for which he is liable to be tried either by a Court or by Court Martial, the Magistrate shall have regard to such Rules and shall in appropriate cases deliver him together with the statement of the offence of which he is accused to the Commanding Officer for the purpose of being tried by Court Martial.

15. There are 9 Rules under Section 549 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. These Rules are called Criminal Courts and Court Martial (Adjustment of Jurisdiction) Rules, 1952. Broadly stated, Rules 3 to 9 are as follows. Under Rule 3, (a) a Magistrate may proceed against a person subject to military, naval or air-force laws without being moved by a competent military, naval or air-force authority, or (b) by being moved by such authority. Under R. 4 if the Magistrate is of opinion that he will proceed against such a person without being moved by the competent military, naval or air-force authority, he shall give written notice to the Commanding Officer of the accused and until the expiry of a period of seven days shall not (a) convict or acquit the accused, or (b) hear him in defence or (c) frame in writing a charge, or (d) make an order committing the accused for trial by the High Court or by the Court of Sessions under Section 213 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Under Rule 5 where within the period of seven days or at any time thereafter before the Magistrate has done any act or issued any order, the Commanding Officer gives notice to the Magistrate that the accused should be tried by Court Martial, the Magistrate shall stay the proceedings and if the accused is in his power or under his control the Magistrate shall deliver him to the relevant authority. Under Rule 6 where a Magistrate has been moved by the competent military, naval or air-force authority under Rule 3 (b) and the Commanding Officer subsequently gives notice to the Magistrate that the accused shall be tried by Court Martial, such Magistrate, if he has not before receiving such notice done any act or issued any order referred to in Rule 4, shall stay proceedings and, if the accused is in his power or under his control, shall deliver him to the relevant authority. Under Rule 7 where an accused person having been delivered by the Magistrate under Rule 5 or 6 is not tried by a Court-martial for the offence of which he is accused, or other effectual proceedings are not taken against him the Magistrate shall report the circumstance to the State Government which may, in consultation with the Central Government take appropriate steps to ensure that the accused person is dealt with in accordance with law. Under Rule 8, where it comes to the notice of the Magistrate that a person subject to military, naval or air-force law has committed an offence, proceedings in respect of which are instituted before him and that the presence of such a person cannot be procured unless through military, naval or air-force authorities the Magistrate may by a written notice require the Commanding Officer of such person either to deliver such a person to a Magistrate to be named in the said notice for being proceeded against according to law, or to stay the proceedings against such person before the Court-martial if since instituted, and to make a reference to the Central Government for determination as to the Court before which the proceedings should be instituted. Under Rule 9 where a person subject to military, naval or air-force law has committed an offence which in the opinion of the competent military, naval or air-force authority, as the case may be, ought to be tried by a Magistrate in accordance with the civil law in force or where the Central Government has on a reference mentioned in Rule 8, decided that proceedings against such person should be instituted before a Magistrate the Commanding Officer of such person shall after giving a written notice to the Magistrate concerned, deliver such person under proper escort to that Magistrate.

16. These Rules enjoin comity of criminal Courts and Court Martial. Before proceeding against the person subject to military law, the Magistrate is required to give notice to the Commanding Officer. If within the period of seven days or before the Magistrate has done any act or issued any order the Commanding Officer gives notice that the accused should be tried by a Court-martial the criminal Court shall stay proceedings. If thereafter the Court-martial proceeding is not taken the Magistrate may report to the State Government which may in consultation with the Central Government take appropriate steps to ensure that the accused is dealt with in accordance with law. Where it comes to the notice of the Magistrate that proceedings ought to be instituted before him he may by written notice require the Commanding Officer to deliver the accused to the Magistrate or require the Commanding Officer to stay the Court-Martial proceedings if instituted and to make a reference to the Central Government for determination as to the Court before which the proceedings shall be instituted. Rule 8 again supports the step taken by the Magistrate, in the present case, on 17 January, 1967 when he required the Commanding Officer to make a reference to the Central Government. Under Rule 9 if the relevant authority of the armed forces is of opinion that the Criminal Court ought to try the offender or if the Central Government on a reference to it is of similar opinion the offender is delivered to the Magistrate. Rule 9 is also attracted in the present case by reason of two features, viz., the Officer Commanding on 28 January, 1967 informed that no Court-Martial proceeding would be instituted, and, secondly, the military authorities never asked the criminal Court to deliver the appellants to the military authority. The facts and circumstances indicate that the competent military authority formed the opinion that the appellants should be tried by the Special Court.

17. This Court in the case of Ram Sarup v. Union of India, (1964) 5 SCR 931 = (AIR 1965 SC 247) considered the question whether S. 125 of the Army Act could be said to be discriminatory and violative of Article 14 of the Constitution. In that case Ram Sarup who was subject to the Army Act was tried by the General Court Martial found guilty and sentenced to death. He then filed a petition under Article 32 of the Constitution for a writ of habeas corpus and a writ of certiorari setting aside the order of the Court Martial and the order of the Central Government. It was contended there that Section 125 of the Army Act left to the unguided discretion of the Officer mentioned in that section to decide whether the accused should be tried by a Court-Martial or by a criminal Court. This Court repelled that contention and held "there is sufficient material in the Act which indicates policy which is to be a guide for exercising discretion and it is expected that the discretion is exercised in accordance with it. The Magistrate could question it and the Government in case of difference of opinion between the views of the Magistrate and the Army authorities decide the matter finally". In Ram Sarup's case, (1964) 5 SCR 931 = (AIR 1965 SC 247) (supra) this Court further examined the meaning of Sections 125 and 126 of the Army Act and Section 549 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and Rules 3 to 9 of the Criminal Courts and Court Martial (Adjustment of Jurisdiction) Rules, 1952 made under the Code of Criminal Procedure and laid down two propositions: First, if the Magistrate will find that the military authorities do not take effectual proceedings under the Army Act within a reasonable time the Magistrate can report the circumstance to the State Government which may in consultation with the Central Government take appropriate steps to ensure that the accused is dealt with in accordance with law. Secondly, whenever there will be difference of opinion between the criminal Court and the military authorities about the forum where an accused is to be tried for the particular offence committed by him, final choice about the forum of the trial of a person accused of a civil offence meaning thereby an offence triable by criminal Court rests with the Central Government.

18. This Court in the recent decision in Som Datt Datta v. Union of India, (1969) 2 SCR 177 = (AIR 1969 SC 414), considered the effect of Rule 3 of the Rules framed under Section 549 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The petitioner in that case made an application under Article 32 for a writ of certiorari for quashing the proceedings before the Court-Martial whereby he was found guilty of charges under Sections 304 and 149 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to 6 years' rigorous imprisonment. The contention in that case was that having regard to the provisions of Section 125 of the Army Act and having further regard to the fact that the Army Officer had in the first instance decided to hand over the matter for investigation to the Civil Police and by reason of absence of notice under Rule 5 of the Rules under Section 549 of the Code of Criminal Procedure that the petitioner should be tried by Court Martial, the criminal Court alone had jurisdiction under Rule 3 to try the petitioner. This Court held that the action of the Officer under Section 125 of the Army Act constituting a Court-Martial indicated that decision was taken under Section 125 of the Army Act for institution of Court-Martial proceedings. Rule 3 was said to be applicable to a case where the Police had completed the investigation and the accused was brought before the Magistrate after submission of the charge-sheet. Rule 3 could not be invoked where the Police merely started investigation. In Som Datt Datta's case, (1969) 2 SCR 177 = (AIR 1969 SC 414) (supra) this Court said about Sections 125 and 126 of the Army Act. "These two sections of the Army Act provide a satisfactory machinery to resolve the conflict of jurisdiction having regard to the exigencies of the situation in any particular case". In the present case, the Special Judge gave notice to the Officer Commanding. The Officer Commanding had first said that Court-Martial proceedings would be instituted. The Officer Commanding thereafter cancelled that intimation. There is no further aspect of conflict between the Criminal Court or the Court-Martial in the present case.

19. The appellants contended that they should be delivered to the Army authorities. The Army authorities did not want delivery of the appellants to them for any Court-Martial proceedings. On the contrary, the Army authorities indicated in no uncertain terms that the Special Judge should proceed with the case. When Special Judge asked the Army authorities to make a reference to the Government the Army authorities instead of making a reference to the Government cancelled their first intimation about the institution of Court-Martial proceedings with the result that the Officer Commanding expressed the opinion that the appellants ought to be tried by a Magistrate in accordance with law of the land.

20. This Court in the recent unreported decision in Joginder Singh v. State of Himachal Pradesh, Cri. Appl. No. 34 of 1969, D/- 30-11-1970 = (Since reported in AIR 1971 SC 500) considered the question as to whether the trial and conviction by the Assistant Sessions Judge in respect of an offence under Section 376 of the Indian Penal Code violated provisions of the Army Act read with Criminal Courts and Court Martial (Adjustment of Jurisdiction) Rules, 1952. The contention in that case was that the criminal Court did not follow the provisions contained in Section 126 of the Army Act read with Rules 3 and 4 of the Criminal Courts and Court Martial (Adjustment of Jurisdiction) Rules, 1952. It was particularly emphasised in that case that it was for the competent officer to decide in the first instance that the appellant should be tried by Court Martial. This Court referred to the earlier decision of this Court in Major K. G. Barsar v. State of Bombay, (1962) 2 SCR 195 = (AIR 1961 SC 1762) for the proposition that there was no exclusion of jurisdiction of the ordinary criminal Courts in respect of offences which are also triable by Court Martial. Sections 125 and 126 of the Army Act leave no doubt in that matter. Rule 3 (a) of the Criminal Courts and Court Martial (Adjustment of Jurisdiction) Rules also indicates that the criminal Court can of its own motion start proceeding against an accused who is subject to the Army Act. The several provisions of the Army Act and the Rules also indicate that the criminal Court is not powerless when it is of opinion that the case should be tried in a criminal Court and in case of conflict between the criminal Court and the Court-Martial the order of the Central Government is final decision as to the forum of trial of the offence. In Joginder Singh's case, Cri. Appl. No. 34 of 1969, D/- 30-11-1970 = (Since reported in AIR 1971 SC 500) (supra) this Court examined the Rules and said that the absence of a notice under Rule 4 was not fatal in the facts and circumstances of the case because the competent military authority knowing the nature of the offence released the accused from military custody and handed him over to the civil authorities, and the action amounted to a decision by the military authorities that the accused in that case was to be tried by an ordinary criminal Court and not by Court-Martial.

21. The provisions of the Army Act, the Rules under Section 549 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and the decisions of this Court all support the conclusion that the Special Judge in the present case was justified in asking the Officer Commanding to make a reference to the Central Government and that the Officer Commanding in the facts and circumstances of the case expressed the opinion that the appellants should be tried by criminal Courts because there would in fact be no Court-Martial proceedings.

22. The contention on behalf of the appellants that the Officer Commanding having once exercised the discretion under Rule 5 could not cancel the discretion is unacceptable. The Officer Commanding upon consideration of facts and circumstances and particularly in the context of the communication of the Special Judge on 17 January, 1968 intimated on 28 January, 1967 that the previous letter dated 16 January, 1967 was cancelled. There are no allegations of mala fide or abuse of power to challenge the propriety of the exercise of power and discretion.

23. The Officer Commanding did not lack authority or jurisdiction to communicate to the Special Judge that Court-Martial proceedings would not be instituted.

24. The Criminal Law Amending Act, 1966 being Act No. 22 of 1966 has an important bearing on the present appeal. Section 5 of Act 22 of 1966 is as follows:—

"(1) Notwithstanding anything contained in this Act or in the principal Act as amended by this Act,—

(a) cases pending immediately before the 30th day of June, 1966, before a Special Judge in which one or more persons subject to military, naval or air-force law is or are charged with and tried for an offence under the principal Act together with any other person or persons not so subject, and

(b) cases pending immediately before the said date before a Special Judge in which one or more persons subject to military, naval or air-force law is or are alone charged with and tried for an offence under the principal Act and charges have already been framed against such person or persons shall be tried and disposed of by the Special Judge.

(2) Where in any case pending immediately before the 30th day of June, 1966, before a Special Judge, one or more persons subject to military, naval or air-force law is or are alone charged with and tried for an offence under the principal Act and charges have not been framed against such person or persons before the said date, or where, on appeal or on revision against any sentence passed by a Special Judge in any case in which one or more persons so subject was or were alone tried, the appellate Court has directed that such person or persons be retried and on such retrial charges have not been framed against such person or persons before the said date, then, in either case, the Special Judge shall follow the procedure laid down in Section 549 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, as if Special Judge were a Magistrate".

The question is whether the present appeal relates to a case pending immediately before 30 June, 1966 before a Special Judge within the meaning of Section 5 (1) (a). Sanction was accorded on 29 October, 1965 under Section 197 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. A charge-sheet was submitted before the Special Judge on 27 January, 1966. On 5 March, 1966 the case was adjourned to 4 July, 1966 at the request of the Public Prosecutor for enabling the Public Prosecutor to supply the copies of documents envisaged by Section 173 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The case was numbered 4/66/Spl. Cr.

25. The word 'pending' came up for consideration before this Court in Asgarali Nazarali Singaporewalla v. The State of Bombay, 1957 SCR 678 = (AIR 1957 SC 503). Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1952 provided for the trial of all offences under Sections 161, 165 or 165-A of the Indian Penal Code or sub-sec. (2) of Section 5 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 exclusively by Special Judges, and directed the transfer of all such trial pending on the date of the coming into force of the Act to Special Judges. The Presidency Magistrate continued the trial and acquitted the appellant. Upon appeal by the State Government the High Court held that from the date of the commencement of the Act the Presidency Magistrate lost all jurisdiction to continue the trial and ordered retrial by the Special Judge. It was contended that on the date of the coming into force of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1952, viz., 28 July, 1952, the case was not pending because no Special Judge was appointed until 26 September, 1952 and the trial also came to an end on 26 September, 1952. This Court did not accept that contention because the accused was not called upon his defence on 28 July, 1952 and the examination of the accused under Section 342 of the Code of Criminal Procedure took place after that date and the accused filed his written statement on 14 August, 1952 and the addresses by the prosecution as well as the defence continued right up to 26 September, 1952. The word 'pending' will ordinarily mean that the matter is not concluded and the Court which has cognizance of it can make an order on the matter in issue. The test is whether any proceedings can be taken in the cause before the Court or tribunal where it is said to be pending. The answer is that until the case is concluded it is pending. Judged by these tests it will appear that this present appeal relates to a case pending before 30 June, 1966.

26. The next question is as to what meaning should be given to the words "charged with and tried for an offence under the principal Act", occurring in Section 5 (1) (a). Counsel for the appellants contended that the words "charged with and tried for an offence" would mean that charges had been actually framed and trial commenced. There is a distinction between Clauses (a) and (b) of sub-section (1) of Section 5 of Act 22 of 1966. Clause (a) deals with persons who are subject to the military, naval or air-force law being charged with and tried for an offence together with a person or persons not so subject whereas Clause (b) deals only with persons who are subject to military, naval or air-force law. In the present case, the appellants are persons who were subject to military law and they were charged along with civilians. Therefore, Clause (a) is attracted. It is in connection with a case which concerns only persons subject to military, naval or air-force law that under Section 5 (1) (b) it is enacted that a case is not only to be pending before 30 June, 1966 before a Special Judge but that charges should also have been framed against such persons. The absence of framing of charges in Clause (a) and requirement of framing charges in Clause (b) repels the construction suggested by counsel for the appellants that charges should have been framed in the present case in order to make it a case pending within the meaning of Section 5 (1) (a) of the 1966 Act. The words "charged with and tried for an offence" mean that there are accusations and allegations against the person. The words "charged with" are used in Section 5 (1) (a) in contradistinction to the words "charges have already been framed" in Section 5 (1) (b) of the Act. Therefore, the use of separate words in the two separate Clauses (a) and (b) is significant to indicate that the statute speaks of the words "charged with" in Clause (a) not in the sense of "charges have been framed" in Clause (b). The legislative intent is abundantly clear from the use of separate words.

27. Sections 251, 251-A, 252, 253 and 254 of the Code of Criminal Procedure throw some light as to the meaning to be given to the words "charged with and tried for an offence". In the trial of warrant cases instituted on a police report the Magistrate is to follow the procedure specified in Section 251-A and the present is one such. Section 251-A contemplates that the Magistrate on the commencement of the trial shall satisfy himself that the documents referred to in Section 173 have been furnished to the accused and if he finds that the accused has not been furnished with such documents or any of them he shall cause them to be so furnished. In the present case, it will appear that in the month of March, 1966 the Public Prosecutor made an application to the Special Judge for adjournment of the case till the month of July, 1966 to enable copies of papers to be given to the accused under Section 173 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Under Section 251-A (2) if, upon consideration of all the documents referred to in Section 173 and making such examination, if any, of the accused as the Magistrate thinks necessary and after giving the prosecution and the accused an opportunity of being heard, the Magistrate considers the charge against the accused to be groundless, he shall discharge him. This provision that the Magistrate may discharge the accused where the charge against the accused appears to be groundless indicates that the words "charged with" cannot be said to mean framing of a charge. It is because the charge or the allegation or accusation against the accused is groundless that he is discharged.

28. Again, in Section 252 it will appear that the Magistrate in any case instituted otherwise than on a police report shall proceed to hear the complainant and take evidence in support of the prosecution. Under Section 253, if, upon taking the evidence referred to in Section 252, and making such examination of the accused as the Magistrate thinks necessary, he finds that no case against the accused has been made out, the Magistrate shall discharge him. The provisions contained in Sections 252 and 253 are cases where the Magistrate deals with warrant case instituted not on a police report but upon a complaint.

29. These three Sections i.e., Sections 251-A, 252 and 253 indicate that an accused can be discharged by the Magistrate if the charge appears to be groundless. Charge is framed under Section 254 of the Code of Criminal Procedure when the Magistrate upon evidence and examination is of opinion that there is ground for presuming that the accused has committed an offence which the Magistrate is competent to try and which could be ordinarily punished by them that he shall frame in writing a charge against the accused. The charge under Section 255 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is read and explained to the accused and he shall be asked whether he is guilty or has any defence to make.

30. The Special Judge therefore has jurisdiction to try and dispose of the case. It is a case pending before 30 June, 1966 and under Act 22 of 1966 it is to be tried and disposed of by the Magistrate. The letter dated 28 January, 1966 is an additional reason to indicate that the appellants are not required to be delivered to the competent military authorities. It is also in evidence that no Court Martial proceeding is pending and the appellants are to be tried by the Special Judge. The judgment of the High Court is upheld.

31. The appeal therefore fails and is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

(B) Tariff Act (1934), Section 5 — Notification issued in 1950 declaring Goa to be a foreign territory for purposes of exports from that country to India had no legal effect after Goa became part of India — There was no liability to pay customs duty on transmission of goods by any person from Goa to Bombay after integration of Goa — ILR (1969) Bom 484, Reversed.

Mr. A. S. R. Chari, Sr. Advocate, (M/s M. J. Mirchandani, K. K. Jain, H. K. Puri and R. Nagratnam Advocates, with him), for Appellant; M/s. P. K. Chatterjee, B. D. Sharma and S. P. Nayar, Advocates, for Respondent.

HEGDE, J.: — The appellant and one R. B. Mathur were tried before the learned Special Judge for Greater Bombay under various charges including a charge of conspiracy. Mathur was acquitted and the appeal against his acquittal was unsuccessful. The appellant was also acquitted of all charges excepting a charge under Section 5 (2) read with Section 5 (1) (d) of the Prevention of Corruption Act. For that offence he was sentenced to suffer rigorous imprisonment for two years and pay a fine of Rs. 5,000/-, in default to suffer further rigorous imprisonment for four months. The substance of the charge under which he was convicted is that he by utilising his position as a Government servant sent various articles such as Radios, Transistors, Clothes, etc., from Goa to Bombay without paying customs duty. He was also held guilty of sending his personal articles in the vehicles engaged by the postal department without paying any charge. The trial Court supported its conclusion on a further ground namely that the assets of the appellant were more than that he could have acquired by his known sources of income.

2. The charges framed against the appellant made no reference to the fact that his assets were more than that he could have acquired by his known sources of income. In appeal the learned Judges of the High Court did not go into that aspect of the case. Nor was that aspect of the case pressed before us at the hearing. Therefore it is not necessary to go into that aspect. Even otherwise that accusation appears to be without any solid basis. The learned Judges of the High Court also did not go into the allegation that the appellant utilised his official position in sending his personal goods in the vehicles engaged by the postal department. The accusation is that the appellant sent some of his goods in the vehicles engaged by the postal department from Panjim in Goa to Margoa or Sawanthwadi or Belgaum. These places are not very far from Panjim. The High Court held that the offence committed by the appellant in that regard if true, is of a technical nature and therefore it thought it unnecessary to examine the evidence relating to the same. Evidently in its view the accusation regarding the sending of some articles in the vehicles engaged by the postal department was of a trifling nature and therefore not worth examining. But the High Court agreed with the trial Court that the appellant was guilty of evading payment of customs duty and he did so by utilising his official position. In order to examine the correctness of this finding, it is necessary to set out the material facts.

3. In 1961, the appellant was working as a Senior Superintendent of Post Offices at Jaipur. On December 20, 1961 Goa was liberated by the Indian Army. Thereafter the appellant was deputed as a Special Duty

Officer to Goa. He took charge in Goa on December 25, 1961. He assumed additional charge as Director of Posts and Telegraphs on May 11, 1962 and he held that office till August 11, 1962. Thereafter he went back to Jaipur. It is alleged that during the period of appellant's stay in Goa, he made large purchases of certain luxury articles. Utilising his official position in the Posts and Telegraphs department he transmitted those articles to Bombay where he sold the same at profits. The prosecution relied in support of that charge on four different instances. Voluminous evidence was led in support of the prosecution case. But it is not necessary to go into that evidence as in our opinion the charge under which the appellant was convicted is without any legal basis. The learned Counsel for the appellant, Mr. A. S. R. Chari has assailed the judgments of the High Court and the trial Court on various grounds. He contended that the evidence adduced in support of the prosecution case is unreliable and insufficient to support the conviction of the appellant. He also raised various legal pleas in support of the appeal. He contended that as the Prevention of Corruption Act was not in force in Goa at the relevant time, the appellant could not have been held guilty of an offence under that Act. According to him, the investigation of his case was illegal as the required sanction had not been obtained. But the most important plea taken by him is that no custom duty was leviable on the articles said to have been sent by the appellant from Goa to Bombay and as such the entire fabric of the prosecution case must fall to the ground. There is force in this contention. Hence it is not necessary to examine the other contentions.

4. As mentioned earlier Goa was liberated on December 20, 1961. Twelfth amendment to our Constitution which received the assent of the President on 27th March, 1962 made Goa a part of India. It became a Union Territory. The amendment in question is deemed to have come into force on December 20, 1961. Hence Goa must be considered as a part of India from December 20, 1961 and indisputably at any rate from March 27, 1962. Article 1 of our Constitution says:

"1. India, that is Bharat, shall be a Union of States.

2. The States and the territories thereof shall be as specified in the First Schedule.

3. The territory of India shall comprise—

(a) the territories of the States;

(b) the Union territories specified in the First Schedule; and

(c) such other territories as may be acquired".

5. All the territories that this country may acquire in whatever manner become part of India in view of Article 1 (3) (c). Further in the case of Goa by means of 12th amendment to the Constitution, the same is included in the 1st Schedule. Therefore there is no room for the contention that Goa was not a part of India during the relevant time. It may be noted that according to the prosecution the goods complained of were all sent from Goa to Bombay after March 27, 1962.

6. This takes us to the question whether there is any liability to pay customs duty when someone sent goods from Goa to Bombay in 1962. No statute or statutory rule was placed before the Court to show that any customs duty had been imposed on the goods transmitted from Goa to other parts of India after December 20, 1961. The only witness who spoke about the liability to pay customs duties on the goods in question is P. W. 56 Shaikh, the Dy. Superintendent of Central Excise. According to him customs duty on those articles was leviable because of certain administrative instructions. But he refused to place those administrative instructions before the Court. He claimed privilege on the ground that they are confidential documents — a strange claim. Stranger still is that the trial Court appears to have accepted that plea. No tax or duty can be levied or collected except by authority of law. Hence no customs duty was leviable on the basis of any administrative instruction. Every levy of customs duty or any other tax must be sanctioned by law. It is surprising that both the trial Court as well as the High Court were of the opinion that certain customs duties were leviable because of some administrative instructions. It appears that there was a notification issued in the year 1950 declaring Goa to be a foreign territory and thus bringing the exports from that country to India within the purview of Land

Customs Act. But that notification cannot continue to have a legal effect after Goa became a part of India. On becoming a part of India Goa ceased to be a foreign territory. The notification in question must have been issued under Section 5 of the Indian Tariff Act, 1934 as it stood in 1950 (that section has been repealed now). That section read:

"Where a customs duty at any rate prescribed by or under this Act or any other law for the time being in force is leviable on any articles when imported into, or any article when exported from, a port in India the Central Government may, by notification in the official gazette, direct that a duty of customs at the like rate shall be leviable on any such article when imported or exported, as the case may be, by land from or to any territory outside India which it may, by a like notification, declare to be foreign territory for the purposes of this section".

7. The notification under this section could have been issued only in respect of any territory outside India and not in respect of any part of India. That provision empowered the Government to declare any territory outside India as a foreign territory for the purposes of that provision. That provision did not empower the Government to declare any part of India as a foreign territory. But it gave power to the Central Government not to treat any territory outside India as a foreign territory for the purposes of that provision. To illustrate the position, the Central Government could not have declared either Delhi or Bombay as a foreign territory but it could have treated Nepal or Bhutan as not a foreign territory for the purposes of that provision. Once Goa became part of India, the Government was incompetent to declare that territory as a foreign territory. Nor does it appear that any such declaration was made after December 20, 1961.

8. Unfortunately the High Court allowed itself to be influenced by what it says the practical considerations. It is likely that there were considerable foreign goods in Goa which had been imported into that territory before it was liberated, may be even without paying customs duty and those goods were available for being transmitted to other parts of India. But this circumstance does not change the position in law. It is not necessary for us to consider whether after integration of Goa, the Government could have imposed any duty on the goods that were sent from Goa to other parts of India. Suffice it to say that our attention was not invited to any law imposing such duties. That being so, the conclusion that the appellant had utilised his official position to evade customs duty must fail.

9. In the result this appeal is allowed and the conviction and sentence imposed on the appellant are set aside. He is on bail. His bail bond do stand cancelled and fine if paid refunded.

Appeal allowed.

(K) Constitution of India, Art. 129 — Advocates of the Supreme Court including the President of the Court's Bar Association are entitled to file petition under Article 129. (Paras 92, 94)

- Petitioners in person; Respondent
No. 1 in person; Mr. Jagadish Swarup, Solicitor-General of India and Dr.
V. A. Seyid Muhammad, Sr. Advocate, (Mr. S. P. Nayar, Advocate, with them), for the Attorney-General for India; Mr. Mela Ram, one of the partners of Respondent No. 2 was also present in person.

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

SIKRI, C. J.: — This is a petition under Article 129 of the Constitution of India by Shri C. K. Daphtary and three other Advocates bringing to our notice the alleged contempt of this Court committed by the respondents
(1) O. P. Gupta, (2) Rising Sun Press, Delhi, through its proprietor, and (3)
M/s. Kanak Book Depot. Respondent
No. 3 — Kanak Book Depot — has not been traced. Respondent No. 1, O. P.
Gupta, appeared in person, and the proprietor of the Rising Sun Press, Mela Ram, also appeared in person.

2. In the petition it is stated that Civil Appeal No. 1731 of 1967 was filed in this Court by the State of U. P. against the judgment of the High Court of Allahabad whereby the High Court had held that the order of dismissal from service passed against respondent No. 1, O. P. Gupta, was invalid. This appeal came up for hearing before this Court on various occasions and was ultimately heard by a Bench consisting of Shah, J., as he then was, and Hegde, J., on October 15, 1969 and October 16, 1969 (and, according to respondent No. 1, also on October 17, 1969). It appears that the appeal was first heard on February 22, 1969 by Hidayatullah, C. J., and another Hon'ble Judge, but later on it was heard, as already stated, by Shah and Hegde, JJ., and the judgment was delivered on October 28, 1969 by Hegde, J.

3. It is further stated in the petition that respondent No. 1 "with the deliberate design of bringing into disrepute and scandalising this Hon'ble Court, wrote and got printed and published, by and through Respondent
No. 2, a pamphlet which though ostensibly meant for the convenient use of members of Parliament was actually widely circulated and was made available for sale at M/s Kanak Book Depot, P. O. Ramsanehi Ghat, Distt.
Barabanki, U. P., Respondent No. 3".
It is also stated that "the said pamphlet was, as the petitioners believe, sold or offered for sale to the public by Respondent No. 3".

4. It is further stated in the petition that the pamphlet "disparages and brings into contempt the authority of this Hon'ble Court and tends to weaken the confidence of the people in it and in any event has the tendency and object of so doing". It is submitted that the pamphlet "by attacking Hon'ble Mr. Justice J. C. Shah and Hon'ble Mr. Justice Hegde, while acting in their judicial capacity, scandalises and brings into disrepute this Hon'ble Court and is clearly contempt of this Hon'ble Court".

5. In para 7 of the petition certain passages from the pamphlet were extracted. It is necessary to reproduce these paras in order to show the nature and content of the scandalous remarks made against Mr. Justice Shah and Mr. Justice Hegde.

"Moreover, having wrongly persisted in hearing the case, he delivered a demonstrably dishonest judgment which cannot fail to show to any discerning person that he did so only to feed fat his prejudice and bias. He has gone to the extent of writing total falsehoods in the judgment in the defiant belief that there is none to look into and scrutinise his judgments. His action is highly condemnable and derogatory of a man in his position".

"As this enquiry proceeds, hundreds of similar other instances of his misbehaviour are bound to come to light, as he appears to be in the habit of being influenced by extrajudicial considerations and of victimising the disliked party through dishonest means".

"In view of the clear admission by the U. P. Government that the file had never gone to the Governor at all, there was nothing on merits for that Government to file an appeal but still the U. P. Government filed an appeal in the Supreme Court in the hope that they may be able to influence the judgment and get a wrong decision in their favour. They thought of Shri J. C. Shah, Judge of the Supreme Court, in this connection".

"So even while the matter remained pending in the High Court they moved for ex parte ad interim stay in the Supreme Court. This was managed to be heard by Shri J. C. Shah and another. Shri J. C. Shah at once ordered stay not only of the balance decretal amount, but even of the Rs. 50,000/- which had been received by Shri O. P. Gupta after furnishing full security".

"The Respondent's counsel, Shri S. P. Sinha, argued on 25th April, 1966 from 11 a. m. to 11.40 a. m. Throughout on these arguments Shri J. C. Shah made such extremely unreasonable, biased and illegal observations that the counsel Shri S. P. Sinha had to give up the arguments in disgust".

"Shri O. P. Gupta went back to Allahabad greatly perturbed and upset at such open dishonesty of a Senior Judge of the highest Court of Justice in the land."

"Whereas in the Lok Sabha every word that is spoken is written down, in the Supreme Court none of the arguments by the parties or observations by the Judge are noted. This is the reason why Shri J. C. Shah makes such illegal and dishonest observations orally in the Court in the belief that these observations will not find place on the record and nobody will be able to catch him."

"Note: Although both the Judges who delivered this judgment are responsible for it, the responsibility of Shri J. C. Shah is much more serious as he was the Senior Judge and had been specifically charged with bias. The other Judge merely toed his line. His cleverness in getting the judgment delivered by his junior colleague will deceive no one".

"It is not as if the Judge has missed those contentions through carelessness. He has done so deliberately and dishonestly, because the High Court had emphasised this contention very strongly and had given clear findings on it".

"It was only the height of dishonesty on the part of Shri J. C. Shah to ignore and go against all law in this matter".

"In view of all these binding rulings, Shri J. C. Shah has not only conducted himself dishonestly in the above observation but has flouted the Constitution most directly and wantonly to feed fat his bias".

"Further, in AIR 1961 SC 1070, the Supreme Court has emphatically laid down that admissions have to be taken as a whole. It is not possible for a Judge to take a few sentences here and there from a statement and treat them as admission and ignore other sentences which explain those so-called admissions. Only a dishonest and prejudiced Judge could have done this".

"In para 9, Shri J. C. Shah himself says that one of the essential requirements of reasonable opportunity is that 'he must be given reasonable opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses produced against him'. He has belied his own standard and shown not only utter dishonesty but also a feeling that being a Judge of the Supreme Court there is none who can scrutinise his actions".

6. In para 8 of the petition it is stated that petitioner No. 3, Shri S. N. Prasad, Advocate, while in Patna and Gauhati during the summer vacation, was asked by several people including some Judges of the High Court about the said pamphlet and was also shown the pamphlet for the first time in Patna. It is further stated that petitioner No. 3 was also informed by one of the Chief Justices that the said pamphlet had been sent to him. It is submitted that "this makes it obvious that the pamphlet had been very widely circulated".

7. Para 9 of the petition may be set out in full:

"That soon after reopening of the Court after summer vacation, Respondent No. 1 was found in the Bar Association room of the Supreme Court and was seen talking to some members. Shri B. P. Singh, Advocate, on spotting the Respondent No. 1, went to the table at which he was sitting with the intention of asking him to leave the Bar Association room as he was not a member. On reaching the table, Shri B. P. Singh found the Respondent No. 1 discussing the aforesaid Pamphlet. Shri B. P. Singh asked the Assistant Librarian of the Bar Association to ask Respondent No. 1 to leave the Bar Association room immediately. However, before the Respondent No. 1 actually left the Bar Association room, he sold a copy of the said Pamphlet to Shri O. N. Mahindroo, Advocate".

8. In para 10 it is submitted that "from the above mentioned facts it is clear that the Respondent No. 1 has personally distributed and published the aforesaid pamphlet". It is further stated in para 11 that the pamphlet as a whole is ex facie contempt of Court and has the tendency and object of bringing into disrepute the authority of the Court and to weaken the confidence of the public in its justice and fair play.

9. It is prayed in the petition that this Court be pleased to issue notice to the Respondents to show cause why they should not be committed for contempt of Court and upon hearing the Respondents (a) order attachment and committal, (b) impose such other penalty as may be deemed fit, and (c) pass such order or orders as this Court may think proper.

10. Shri S. N. Prasad, petitioner No. 3, has filed an affidavit with the petition. Shri B. P. Singh, Advocate, Supreme Court, has also filed an affidavit. In this affidavit it is stated: "Sometimes after the re-opening of the Court after the summer vacations in July 1970, I saw Mr. O. P. Gupta moving about in the Supreme Court Bar Association. I recognise Mr. O. P. Gupta, as I remember having seen him arguing his own case in the Supreme Court. On that day Mr. O. P. Gupta was carrying a bag with him and was aimlessly moving about within the Association's premises".

11. It is further stated in the affidavit:

"That Shri O. P. Gupta ultimately sat down to talk to some of the members of the Bar Association and was discussing certain matters with them. Having noticed his presence and having known that he had printed some pamphlet which contains scurrilous remarks against some of the Judges of this Hon'ble Court, I became suspicious as to the purpose of his visit to the Supreme Court Bar Association. I, therefore, went to the table where he was sitting and found that he was discussing the contents of his pamphlet which he chose to describe as a "booklet". Among other members present at the table I distinctly remember the presence of Shri O. N. Mahindroo. I protested against the presence of Shri O. P. Gupta within the Supreme Court Bar Association premises as he was not a member of the Association. In spite of my protest I found that Mr. Gupta had no intention of leaving the Bar Association, and I therefore, called Shri Gopi, Assistant Librarian and asked him to see to it that Mr. Gupta left the Bar Association premises immediately. Thereafter Mr. Gupta agreed to leave the Association premises".

It is further stated that "while he was leaving he collected a few copies of the 'booklet' which he had circulated amongst the members present there. I distinctly remember that Shri O. N. Mahindroo asked for a copy of the booklet and paid a sum of Re. 1/- to Mr. O. P. Gupta which was the price demanded by Mr. Gupta for the booklet. Thereafter Mr. Gupta was made to leave the association premises".

12. An affidavit was also filed by Shri O. N. Mahindroo. It is stated in the affidavit:

"I have read the Affidavit of Mr. B. P. Singh, Advocate, and I confirm what has been stated in paras 2 and 3 of his affidavit about Mr. O. P. Gupta and me. I did pay him a Rupee as desired by Mr. Gupta for a copy of the booklet as stated in para 3 of the said affidavit."

13. This petition was called for hearing on November 23, 1970, and upon hearing Mr. C. K. Daphtary, one of the petitioners, the Court directed issue of notice of this petition to the respondents returnable 10 days hence, peremptorily. The office reported on December 3, 1970, that "neither the Registered Cover nor the A. D. Card in respect of notice issued directly to Respondent No. 1, viz., Shri O. P. Gupta has been received back so far. Similarly no report in respect of Respondent No. 1 has been received from the District Judge, Allahabad". On December 4, 1970, this Court directed that another notice be sent to respondents Nos. 1 and 3 returnable on December 9, 1970. It was further directed that notice be sent to respondent No. 1 at his Delhi address also, returnable on December 9, 1970. The notices were also directed to be served through the District Magistrate. It may be mentioned that respondent No. 2 was present in Court and had filed an affidavit to which we shall later refer.

14. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Delhi, returned the notice in respect of O. P. Gupta, unserved, with the following report:

"The wife of the addressee, viz., Mrs. Mithles Kumari, who was present at the address given in the notice, has stated that her husband had gone out to Poona. She had no knowledge about the return of her husband. She did not inform us about his address at Poona.

On enquiries being made from Shri Baij Nath Kureel, resident of 69, South Avenue (M. P. flats) he stated that he (Mr. Gupta) comes and stays with him as a guest, off and on, and he goes back.

Mr. O. P. Gupta is deliberately concealing himself and is avoiding service of the notice. Therefore, the notice is being returned unserved. The writing of Mr. O. P. Gupta's wife is enclosed."

15. As regards the notice sent to O. P. Gupta, through the District Magistrate, Allahabad, the Additional District Magistrate who was contacted on Trunk telephone by the Office on December 8, 1970, reported that Gupta was stated to be in Delhi and was staying at 69, South Avenue. The District Judges of Allahabad and Barabanki reported that notices could not be served on O. P. Gupta as he was reported to be in Delhi in connection with some case.

16. On being satisfied on materials before it that respondent No. 1 was deliberately avoiding service, the Court on December 9, 1970, directed issue of non-bailable warrant for the arrest of respondent No. 1 (wherever he may be in India) and his production in this Court on Monday, the 14th December, 1970. The Additional District Magistrate, Delhi, thereupon submitted the following report.

"The local police has informed us that despite best of their efforts they have not been able to arrest Shri O. P. Gupta whose whereabouts in Delhi are not known. However we are making further efforts to find out his whereabouts and will be able to send you a final report on Sunday evening. You may kindly inform their Lordships accordingly."

17. On December 10, 1970, O. P. Gupta sent a letter to the Registrar, giving his address "C/o Station Master, Jagannath Puri (Orissa)", stating that he had heard a rumour that "the Hon'ble Court requires my presence in connection with contempt of Court." He further stated that he was trying to reach Delhi as soon as possible in about ten days. He requested that the matter may be listed for his appearance any day in January, 1971. He gave a firm undertaking that he would present himself before the Court on the day the Court reopened after Winter vacation. On December 14, 1970 this Court ordered that the "warrant will remain outstanding returnable a day after the reopening of the Court in January 1971, i. e., 5-1-1971". On December 15, 1970, referring to the letter of the respondent, mentioned above, this Court observed that "the address given on the letter is c/o the Station Master, Jagannath Puri, Orissa. This clearly shows that he does not want to disclose his whereabouts so that proper processes may be issued to him... In view of this letter, we are further fortified in our view that he is avoiding service and concealing himself. Warrants will be executed as ordered by us".

18. The office reported again on January 4, 1971 that the authorities had informed that despite their best efforts they had not been able to arrest O. P. Gupta nor his whereabouts could be found.

19. Respondent No. 1 wrote another letter on December 24, 1970, objecting to the issue of non-bailable warrants. He stated:

"As written in my previous letter I had planned to reach Delhi by about the 20th instant and to present myself in Court when it reopens on 4th January, 1971... But the shocking news of a non-bailable warrant has upset all my plans."

He further stated that he had thus no alternative but to go back; he wanted to reach the Court as a free man and before appearing in Court he wished to get about two or three weeks time for medical aid. He, therefore, prayed that the warrant be withdrawn and the case fixed for Monday, the 1st February, 1971.

20. On January 5, 1971, this Court ordered that "warrants be executed as already directed by this Court. District Magistrates of Allahabad, Delhi and Barabanki should take immediate action with the assistance of the Police, to execute the warrants".

21. On January 25, 1971, at last, O. P. Gupta appeared before the Court, and this Court ordered that the "warrant which was ordered to be issued against respondent No. 1 will not be executed on condition that he shall furnish a personal bond in the sum of Rs. 5,000/- with a surety in the like amount to the satisfaction of the Registrar of this Court. Respondent No. 1 will file affidavit in reply within a week from today. Liberty to the petitioners to file a rejoinder, if any. The petition will come up for hearing on the 12th February, 1971".

22. On January 23, 1971, respondent No. 1 filed an application alleging that the petition for contempt was not maintainable and deserved to be dismissed without the applicant being called upon to answer it on merits. He stated various grounds regarding the non-maintainability of the petition. On February 12, 1971, the Court adjourned the matter to February 18, 1971, and respondent No. 1 was directed to file an affidavit on merits by February 16, 1971, which, however, he failed to do.

23. On February 22, 1971, respondent moved another application praying that the hearing of the case may be postponed because he wanted to engage a counsel and counsel whom he wished to engage (M/s R. D. Bhandare, Mohan Kumaramangalam, K. K. Nayar, D. L. Sen, etc.), were parliamentarians and they were extremely busy in their elections and could not come to Delhi before the middle of March, 1971.

24. We have given these facts in order to show that respondent No. 1 was deliberately avoiding service for a long time. We could not at first understand his object in doing so, but during the course of arguments the object became quite clear. Chief Justice Shah was due to retire on January 21, 1971 and if the respondent had made the affidavit, to which we will presently refer to, before that date, it would have amounted to contempt. When it was pointed out to him during the course of hearing that he had abused Mr. Justice Shah in his affidavit he replied that it was not contempt because it was the law that there could not be any contempt in respect of a Judge who has retired. It seems to us clear that in order to hurl fresh abuses on Mr. Justice Shah, he deliberately avoided service of the notice so that he would not have to file his affidavit before the date of retirement of Mr. Justice Shah.

25. We are also surprised at the inability of the Executive to have O. P. Gupta traced and warrants served on him. Article 144 of the Constitution provided that "all authorities, civil and judicial, in the territory of India, shall act in aid of the Supreme Court". We have noticed with regret that in this case the Executive has not shown due diligence in complying with this constitutional provision.

26. Respondent No. 1 filed another application on February 18, 1971, praying that the arguments on maintainability of the petition be heard first and that question decided. It was further requested that the petitioners be asked to produce all their evidence because he would like to cross-examine them. It was further stated that after the petitioners had closed their evidence, he "will summon documentary and oral evidence on his behalf, after which arguments may be heard". He requested that the petitioners be asked to produce the "book" or the "pamphlet" from which they had copied annexure 1 to their petition. It was suggested that it would throw great light on their allegations.

27. We may mention that the pamphlet or the booklet was annexed to the petition in original and we could not understand this prayer. This Court directed that the petition would be heard on the affidavits already filed by the parties. This Court also informed respondent No. 1 that the petitioners had no other evidence to lead.

28. Respondent No. 1 filed a lengthy counter-affidavit on February 18, 1971. He started with tendering unreserved, unqualified and unconditional apology to this Court. He however, went on to state that in borderline cases it was permissible to make alternative and additional defence of no contempt also and he therefore proceeded to submit his defence.

29. In para 3 of the counter-affidavit he maintained that because of the many laches, illegalities and infirmities the petition should be dismissed. In paras 3.2 he stated that "I am not at this stage making any attempt to contradict evidence given or to give any evidence on my side. This will be done if and when the occasion arises or the Hon'ble Court so orders. I will have to summon some documents also for that purpose". This statement was made in spite of the direction of this Court that he should file his affidavit on the merits. Until now we have not been told what documents or evidence he would have called, especially in view of the admissions made by him, which we will presently refer to.

30. In para 4 he complained that he could not find the specific charge. We had informed him that, in brief, the charge against him was that he had committed contempt of Court by the publication and distribution of the pamphlet or the booklet outside Parliament.

31. In para 5 he proceeded to assert that the petition was not bona fide at all. He cast aspersions on Mr. C. K. Daphtary, who is a senior advocate of this Court, and the President of the Supreme Court Bar Association. We need not refer to these because this is really an abuse of the process of this Court.

32. In paras 8, 8.1, 8.2 and 8.3 the respondent complained against the language of the petition as not being quite respectful to the Members of Parliament. In para 8.4 he stated that "as to facts I must frankly admit that the grievous wrong that Shri J. C. Shah had done to me had created such deep anguish, frustration and desperation in me that had God almighty not intervened Shri J. C. Shah would not have seen the end of 1969." We wondered what exactly he meant by this passage, but he admitted that it meant that he had at one time decided to murder Mr. Justice Shah. He explained that it was some Member of Parliament who saved him from this act by suggesting that he might instead try to convince the Members of Parliament of the genuineness of his case and prepare them to file an impeachment motion.

33. In para 8.5 it was stated that he had a right to approach and convince the Hon'ble Members and he exercised that right. Nobody has said before us that he had no right to approach and convince the Hon'ble Members.

34. In paras 8.6 and 8.7 he mentioned about the filing of the impeachment motion in the Lok Sabha on May 15, 1970 and its rejection by the Hon'ble Speaker.

35. In para 9 he said that "a large number of Hon'ble Members of Parliament made that draft, in the making of which I too took an active part and made my contribution". He submitted that the "drafting" of the motion could not be a charge. We may mention that he has not been charged with the drafting of the motion.

36. Regarding the printing of the pamphlet, he stated in para 9.2:

"The Impeachment Motion was printed by respondent No. 2 and I went to him to get it printed. The printing was done under orders and at the instance of the signatories of the Motion. There were 200 of them and they were anxious to have several copies each. They had a right to have the copies. It was impossible for them to have the copies without printing the motion. I still possess a letter from Hon'ble Shri George Fernandes asking for six copies which I sent to him by registered post".

He submitted that the printing of the motion could not be a charge against him and that "neither the Hon'ble Members who ordered the printing, nor I who got the work actually done, nor respondent 2, who actually printed the motion are in any way guilty of contempt for that action". We need not go into this submission as he was not being charged for printing or assisting in the printing of the motion.

37. In para 9.3 he contended that the word "pamphlet" for the printed Impeachment Motion was highly condemnable. In para 9.4 he stated that he never offered the book for sale nor did he widely circulate it. Further in para 9.5 he stated that the "book given to Shri O. N. Mahindroo, from which this annexure must have been copied, was not a new copy, but was a used one inasmuch as it contained several red pencil marks and pen writing in its body. This shows and proves that it was not given to him by way of sale and it was not being offered for sale in general."

38. In para 9.6 it was stated that annexure 1 to the petition was nothing but the Impeachment Motion filed in the Lok Sabha reproduced in a printed book.

39. In para 10 he submitted that para 6 of the petition "has needlessly dragged in the fair name of Hon'ble Mr. Justice Hegde in the petitioner's wholesale onslaught". He submitted: "Read the entire Impeachment Motion. The name of Hon'ble Mr. Justice Hegde does not occur even once anywhere either disparagingly or otherwise. I have the greatest regard and respect for His Lordship, just as I have for every other Judge in India". He gave reasons why Mr. Justice Hegde's name was not mentioned in the Impeachment Motion, although he had actually delivered the judgment.

40. In para 10.1 he submitted that "the very same judgment can lead to the Impeachment of one Judge who signs it knowing that its conclusions are wrong while leaving out completely the other Judge who signs it genuinely believing that the conclusions are right".

41. In para 10.2 he referred to the petition dated 27-10-69 under Article 32 of the Constitution to demonstrate his great regard and respect for Mr. Justice Hegde.

42. In para 10.3 he stated thus: "It is entirely wrong to say that the Impeachment Motion "disparages and brings into contempt the authority of this Hon'ble Court and tends to weaken the confidence of the people in it and in any event has the tendency and object of so doing". The Motion was solely aimed against a "decayed fish" and its laudable object was to save the "entire tank" from contamination, as explained above in para 9.1. Therefore, the object of the motion clearly was to save the prestige and honour of the Hon'ble Court and to enhance public confidence in it, and not the reverse".

43. In para 10.4 he submitted that the judgment in question did not excite respect for Mr. Justice Shah.

44. In para 10.5 he stated that the Impeachment Motion did not attribute any corruption like bribery, liquor, sex, influence, favouritism, etc., to Mr. Justice Shah. He further added:

"what, however, was a fatal weakness in him, was that he made up his mind on the result of a case either when he read the file at home in a few minutes or within the first few minutes of the opening arguments, and once he made up his mind, he dogmatically refused to listen even to the most reasonable arguments of the party disfavoured by him. In order to shut down the arguments of that party, he would go to the length of talking absurdly and like a mad man in open Court. Such behaviour made all his virtues useless and made him a man thoroughly unfit to be a Judge".

45. We need not refer to instances he gave of some other Judges and their behaviour in Court.

46. In para 10.8 he submitted: "The Impeachment Motion ought to be read in this light. Wherever it says "prejudice", "bias", "grudge", "vengeance", etc., everywhere it means the same — that he had formed his opinion and was seeking to stick to it whatever came his way, and the more I tried to make him see reason, the more offended and revengeful he became. "Extra-judicial considerations" also means the same, because becoming prejudiced by one sided argument is certainly not judicial. In this light the entire Impeachment Motion is nothing but extremely fair and just comment on a man who richly deserved it. The two illustrations given on the back of the title cover, which are the gist of the entire impeachment motion, also point to this trait of Shri J. C. Shah's character. There is no hint of any other weakness. Even my letter to Shri C. K. Daphtary, annexure A, clearly points only to this weakness of Shri J. C. Shah. Fair comment is not contempt".

47. In para 11 he asserted that the excerpts given in para 7 of the petition, reproduced above, were all correct excerpts from the Impeachment Motion and not from any pamphlet. He further submitted that "they are all true, correct and fair criticism of Shri J. C. Shah as clarified above".

48. Before dealing with the question of maintainability of the petition and other points raised in his application dated January 28, 1971, we propose to dispose of the point regarding the validity of the existing law relating to contempt of Court. The first respondent has urged that the existing law relating to contempt of Court by writings in respect of proceedings which have finished is repugnant to Article 19 (1) (a), read with Article 19 (2). He contends that the existing law imposes unreasonable restrictions on a citizen's right to freedom of speech guaranteed under Article 19 (1) (a). He urges that we should follow the law existing in the United States of America. Mr. C. K. Daphtary, on the other hand, contends, first, that Article 19 (1) (a) and Article 19 (2) do not apply to the law relating to contempt of this Court because of Article 129 of the Constitution, which reads:

"The Supreme Court shall be a Court of Record and shall have all the powers of such a Court including the power to punish for contempt of itself".

Secondly, Mr. Daphtary urges that the existing law relating to contempt of Court is not a "law" covered by the definition of the word "law" in Article 13 (3) (a). Thirdly, Mr. Daphtary contends that the existing law only imposes reasonable restrictions within the meaning of Article 19 (2) of the Constitution.

49. In M. S. M. Sharma v. Sri Krishna Sinha, (1959) Supp 1 SCR 806 = (AIR 1959 SC 395) this Court held:

"It would not be correct to contend that Article 19 (1) (a) of the Constitution controlled the latter half of Article 194 (3) or of Article 105 (3) of the Constitution and that the powers, privileges and immunities conferred by them must yield to the fundamental right of the citizen under Article 19 (1) (a). As Articles 194 (3) and 105 (3) stood in the same supreme position as the provisions of Part III of the Constitution and could not be affected by Article 13, the principle of harmonious construction must be adopted".

"So construed, the provisions of Article 19 (1) (a), which were general, must yield to Article 194 (1) and the latter part of its Clause (3), which are special, and Article 19 (1) (a) could be of no avail to the petitioner".

50. In Special Reference No. 1 of 1964, (1965) 1 SCR 413 = (AIR 1965 SC 745) the same view was confirmed.

51. Relying on these authorities Mr. Daphtary urges that at the time when the Constitution was enacted it was well known what the powers of a superior Court of Record were in England and what was the law of contempt which the Courts of Record were administering, and therefore, there could be no question of testing that law on the anvil of Article 19 (1) (a), read with Article 19 (2).

52. It is not necessary to decide this point or the point whether the existing law relating to contempt of Court is a 'law' or not within the definition of the word 'law' in Art. 13 (3) (a), as we have come to the conclusion that in any event the existing law imposes reasonable restrictions within the meaning of Article 19 (2). Apart from this, the Constitution makes this Court the guardian of fundamental rights conferred by the Constitution and it would not desire to enforce any law which imposes unreasonable restrictions on the precious right of freedom of speech and expression guaranteed by the Constitution.

53. In this case it is claimed that respondent 1 has committed contempt of Court by circulating a pamphlet or booklet containing criticism of the judgment of this Court, delivered by Mr. Justice Hegde, on behalf of himself and Mr. Justice Shah, as he then was, and also containing scurrilous criticism of the conduct of both the Judges. Then, what is the existing law on this particular point? We are relieved from reviewing earlier authorities because this Court has recently in two cases examined the law. In Perspective Publications Ltd. v. State of Maharashtra, (1969) 2 SCR 779 at pp. 791 and 792 = (AIR 1971 SC 222 at p. 230). Grover, J., speaking on behalf of the Court, reviewed the entire case law and stated the result of the discussion of the cases on contempt as follows:

"(1) It will not be right to say that committals for contempt for scandalizing the Court have become obsolete.

(2) The summary jurisdiction by way of contempt must be exercised with great care and caution and only when its exercise is necessary for the proper administration of law and justice.

(3) It is open to anyone to express fair, reasonable and legitimate criticism of any act or conduct of a judge in his judicial capacity or even to make a proper and fair comment on any decision given by him because "justice is not a cloistered virtue and she must be allowed to suffer the scrutiny and respectful, even though outspoken, comments of ordinary men".

(4) A distinction must be made between a mere libel or defamation of a Judge and what amounts to a contempt of the Court.

The test in each case would be whether the impugned publication is a mere defamatory attack on the judge or whether it is calculated to interfere with the due course of justice or the proper administration of law by this Court. It is only in the latter case that it will be punishable as contempt.

(5) Alternatively the test will be whether the wrong is done to the judge personally or it is done to the public. To borrow from the language of Mukherjee, J. (as he then was) (Brahma Prakash Sharma's case, 1953 SCR 1169 = (AIR 1964 SC 10)) the publication of a disparaging statement will be an injury to the public if it tends to create an apprehension in the minds of the people regarding the integrity, ability or fairness of the Judge or to deter actual and prospective litigants from placing complete reliance upon the Court's administration of justice or if it is likely to cause embarrassment in the mind of the Judge himself in the discharge of his judicial duties".

54. Later, Hidayatullah, C. J., in R. C. Cooper v. Union of India, (1970) 2 SCC 298 at p. 301 = (AIR 1970 SC 1318 at pp. 1320, 1321) observed:

"There is no doubt that the Court like any other institution does not enjoy immunity from fair criticism. This Court does not claim to be always right although it does not spare any effort to be right according to the best of the ability, knowledge and judgment of the Judges. They do not think themselves in possession of all truth or hold that wherever others differ from them, it is so far error. No one is more conscious of his limitations and fallibility than a Judge but because of his training and the assistance he gets from learned counsel he is apt to avoid mistakes more than others ... We are constrained to say also that while fair and temperate criticism of this Court or any other Court even if strong, may not be actionable, attributing improper motives, or tending to bring Judges or Courts into hatred and contempt or obstructing directly or indirectly with the functioning of Courts is serious contempt of which notice must and will be taken. Respect is expected not only from those to whom the judgment of the Court is acceptable but also from those to whom it is repugnant. Those who err in their criticism by indulging in vilification of the institution of Courts, administration of justice and the instruments through which the administration acts, should take heed for they will act at their own peril. We think this will be enough caution to persons embarking on the path of criticism".

55. We are unable to appreciate how the law, as summarised in the two cases places unreasonable restriction on the freedom of speech. But the argument of the first respondent was that we have now a written Constitution, like the United States of America, and if in the United States, in order to give effect to the liberty of speech and freedom of expression the common law has been departed from, we should also follow in their footsteps. But the American Constitution and the conditions in the United States are different from those in India. In the American Constitution there is no provision like Article 19 (2) of our Constitution.

56. The relevant part of the First Amendment to the U. S. Constitution is as follows:—

"Congress shall make no law abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press".

The difference between the First Amendment and Article 19 (1) (a) was noted by Douglas J., in Kingslay Corporation v. Regents of the University of New York, (1959) 3 L Ed 2d 1512 at p. 1522 where he observed:

"If we had a provision in our Constitution for "reasonable" regulation of the press such as India has included in hers there would be room for argument that censorship in the interest of morality would be permissible". (In a foot-note he set out Article 19 (2)).

57. Even in the United States, as far as we have been able to ascertain, in some States the law is the same as in England (see Re Peter Breen — Annotation at page 572) 17 LRA (NC) 572. We may here quote some passages from the decision of the Nevada Supreme Court in that case. An Attorney had made a statement about a reversal by the Supreme Court of a decision of the Trial Court. In proceedings for disbarment the Court observed:

"In fact, the question is presented whether or not the language and order could, in any event, be deemed contemptuous or warrant any action upon the part of this Court, upon the theory that they are but criticisms of an opinion of a Court which it is the province of anyone to indulge in, irrespective of whether such criticisms are just or unjust, or whether or not they are couched in respectful language. The right to criticize an opinion of a Court, to take issue with it upon its conclusions as to a legal proposition, or question its conception of the facts, so long as such criticisms are made in good faith, and are in ordinarily decent and respectful language, and are not designed to wilfully or maliciously misrepresent the position of the Court, or tend to bring it into disrepute, or lessen the respect due to the authority to which a Court of last resort is entitled, cannot be questioned. To attempt to declare any fixed rule marking the boundaries where free speech in reference to Court proceedings shall end would be as dangerous as it would be difficult. The right of free speech is one of the greatest guarantees to liberty in a free country like this, even though that right is frequently and in many instances outrageously abused. Of scarcely less, if not of equal, importance, is the maintenance of respect for the judicial tribunals, which are the arbiters of questions involving the lives, liberties, and property of the people. The duty and power is imposed upon the Courts to protect their good name against ill-founded and unwarranted attack, the effect of which would be to bring the Court unjustly into public contempt and ridicule, and thus impair the respect due to its authority. While it is the duty of all to protect the Courts against unwarranted attack, that duty and obligation rests especially upon the members of the Bar and other officers of the Court. It would be foolish, as well as useless, for anyone to contend that the very highest Courts do not make mistakes. Courts themselves prove this by overruling previous decisions".

"If any considerable portion of a community is led to believe that, either because of gross ignorance of the law, or because of a worse reason, it cannot rely upon the Courts to administer justice to a person charged with crime, that portion of the community, upon some occasion, is very likely to come to the conclusion that it is better not to take any chances on the Courts failing to do their duty. Then may come mob violence with all its detestable features. To say that respondent meant no disrespect for this Court is contrary to the plain meaning of the language used, and the order directing that it be spread upon the minutes of the district Court".

58. The question whether the existing law of contempt is unreasonable within Article 19 (2) of the Constitution has been the subject of decisions in some of the High Courts. They have all come to the conclusion that the restrictions imposed by this law are reasonable. S. K. Das, J., then a Judge of the Patna High Court, in Legal Remembrancer v. B. B. Das Gupta, (1953) ILR 32 Pat 1069 at p. 1091 = (AIR 1954 Pat 203 at p. 210)

after referring to the arguments of Mr. Ghosh, observed as follows:

"I think that the answer to the arguments of Mr. Ghosh is to be found in the words of Lord Atkin — "Justice is not a cloistered virtue". Any and every criticism is not contempt. One of the tests is, to use the words of Mukherjea, J., in Brahama Prakash Sharma v. The State of Uttar Pradesh, (1953) SCR 1169 = (AIR 1954 SC 10) whether the criticism is calculated to interfere with the due course of justice or proper administration of law; whether it tends to create distrust in the popular mind and impair confidence of people in the Courts of law. These tests have been part of the meaning of the expression contempt of Court from before the Constitution and are still a part of its meaning — a meaning which the framers of the Constitution must have known when they used the expression. We are giving no wider connotation to it, and it is idle to contend that such a connotation imports any unreasonable restriction on freedom of speech and expression".

We agree with the observations of the learned Judge.

59. In Lakhan Singh v. Balbir Singh, (1953) ILR 1 All 796 = (AIR 1953 All 342) it was held that "the law of contempt as laid down by British and Indian Courts imposes reasonable restrictions on the exercise of the right of freedom of speech and expression and the previous law continues in force even after the amended Article 19 (2) of the Constitution." It was further stated that "conditions in India are different from those prevailing in America. The language of our Constitution after the amendment of Article 19 requires us to see whether the restrictions are "reasonable". It is true that this case was dealing with a publication which prejudiced mankind against a party before the case was heard, but the general observations are relevant for the purpose of this case.

60. In the State v. Vikar Ahmed, ILR (1954) Hyd 270 at p. 272 = (AIR 1954 Hyd 175 at p. 178) the High Court of Hyderabad was considering the question of scandalising the Court or the Judge. In this connection they said:

"We may observe that the freedom of press under our Constitution is not higher than that of citizen, and that there is no privilege attaching to the profession of the press as distinguished from the members of the public. To whatever height the subject in general may go, so also may the journalist, and if an ordinary citizen may not transgress the law so must not the press. That the exercise of expression is subject to the reasonable restriction of the law of contempt, is borne out by Clause (2) of Article 19 of the Constitution. It should be well to remember that the Judges by reason of their office are precluded from entering into any controversy in the columns of the public press, nor can enter the arena and do battle upon equal terms in newspapers, as can be done by ordinary citizens."

61. Respondent No. 1 contends that the present law places unreasonable restrictions because it serves no useful purpose, and even a scurrilous attack on a Judge does not affect the administration of justice. He further says that after a case has been decided, if a judgment severely and even unfairly criticised, and assuming that this has an adverse effect on the administration of justice, it must be balanced against the harm which would ensue if such criticism is stopped. We are unable to agree with him that a scurrilous attack on a Judge in respect of a judgment or past conduct has no adverse effect on the due administration of justice. This sort of attack in a country like ours has the inevitable effect of undermining the confidence of the public in the Judiciary. If confidence in the Judiciary goes, the due administration of justice definitely suffers.

62. The first respondent referred to Article 73, Article 246, List I, Entry 77, and Article 142 (2). These do not throw any light on the question whether the existing law of contempt imposes unreasonable restrictions. Article 73 deals with the extent of the executive power of the Union. Article 246 inter alia deals with legislative power of Parliament. Entry 77 in List I reads:

"Constitution, organisation, jurisdiction and powers of the Supreme Court (including Contempt of such Court), and the

We are not concerned here with the extent of the powers conferred by Article 246 read with Entry 77 of List I.

63. Article 142 (2) reads:

"(2) Subject to the provisions of any law made in this behalf by Parliament, the Supreme Court shall, as respects the whole of the territory of India, have all and every power to make any order for the purpose of securing the attendance of any person, the discovery or production of any document, or the investigation or punishment of any contempt of itself".

64. We are here also not concerned with any law made by Parliament. Article 129 shows that the Supreme Court has all the powers of a Court of Record, including the power to punish for contempt of itself, and Article 142 (2) goes further and enables us to investigate any contempt of this Court.

65. We are accordingly of the opinion that assuming that Article 19 (2) applies, the restrictions imposed by the existing law of contempt are reasonable, and are in public interest.

66. Respondent No. 1 sought to justify the extracts which we have reproduced above from para 7 of the petition. His justification was, in brief, that he could show that in the judgment there were numerous errors. He proceeded to point out a number of so-called errors to us but we told him that we were not sitting as a Court of appeal and we were willing to assume in his favour, without deciding the point, that there were errors in the judgment. But even so, there is no excuse whatsoever for using the language which he employed in these passages. It must be remembered in this connection that it was Mr. Justice Hegde who drafted and delivered the judgment. He does not impute dishonesty to Mr. Justice Hegde but to Mr. Justice Shah. He explains this by saying that it was Mr. Justice Shah who controlled the hearing and he would not even allow Mr. Justice Hegde to listen to his arguments. We are unable to believe this.

67. According to Respondent No. 1, the words "dishonest judgment" and "dishonesty" have to be understood in a special sense. He says that these words were used in order to show the manner in which the appeal was heard and the manner in which Mr. Justice Shah, made up his mind quickly and then refused to budge from that position. It is well settled that we have to give the plain meaning to the words used in the pamphlet or the booklet. Giving the ordinary and plain meaning it appears to us that "dishonesty" means dishonesty, i. e., that he has ascribed to the Judge a conduct which would be most reprehensible. In other words he says that although Mr. Justice Shah was convinced that the appeal of the State of U. P. should be dismissed he cleverly asked Mr. Justice Hegde to deliver the judgment and allow the appeal, and that Mr. Justice Hegde wrote down what Mr. Justice Shah dictated or told him to write.

68. We have already set out paras 10.5 and 10.8 of the affidavit filed by the first respondent. We are unable to give any other meaning to the words "dishonest judgment", "open-dishonesty", "deliberately and dishonestly", "utter dishonesty", i. e. the meaning which he now seeks to ascribe to these words. It seems to us that whoever drafted the Impeachment Motion drafted it with a view to bring the facts within the meaning of the expression "misbehaviour" in Article 124 (4) for he must have realised that to say that a Judge has committed errors, even gross errors, cannot amount to "misbehaviour".

69. It seems to us that in view of the decisions of the various High Courts in India and this Court the passages we have extracted, read as a whole, constitute gross contempt of this Court and the two Judges. In this connection we may refer to some of the earlier cases decided by various High Courts. In Moti Lal Ghosh in re, (1918) ILR 45 Cal 169 at p. 182 = (AIR 1918 Cal 988 at p. 994) a newspaper published articles scandalising the High Court and the Chief Justice in his administration thereof, by allegations implying that the Chief Justice had constituted a packed Bench. It was held that the articles constituted contempt of Court. One of the reasons given for holding contempt was that "the mere suggestion that such a thing is within the bounds of possibility is a grave reflection upon the Court and the persons responsible for its administration." One passage of this judgment, which may be referred to, is at page 182: (of ILR Cal) = (at page 994 of AIR).

"The other matter to which I refer is the passage at the end of the article in which the author expresses perfect faith in the Chief Justice.

This, to my mind, is so inconsistent with the insinuations previously made in the articles, that it is impossible to conceive that it was genuinely intended. It is much in the same style as the conclusion of the previous article, and I do not think there can be any doubt as to the object of the author in using these words, viz., to try and provide a means of escape for himself if he is taken to task for the previous matter contained in his article."

Similar remarks can be applied to the protestations of the respondent No. 1 that he has respect for this Court and the Judges, including Mr. Justice Hegde.

70. In Emperor v. Marmadule Pickhall, AIR 1923 Bom 8 at page 10 the High Court of Bombay observed:

"The article as a whole would leave on the mind of an ordinary reader the clear impression that injustice had been deliberately done on political grounds to some of the accused who were apparently innocent. In other words it attributes judicial dishonesty to the Judges. I am unable to accept the contention that such an article does not constitute a contempt of Court. We have to consider the natural and probable effect of the article and not only the avowed intention of the editor as indicated in his affidavit. I think that the publication of the article in question constitutes a contempt of Court."

Mr. Justice Shah, Acting Chief Justice, further observed:

"I am slow to hold that any unfair criticism of Courts of Judges constitutes such an interference with the administration of justice as should be punished. I am willing to act upon the view that the confidence of the public in Courts rests mainly upon the purity and correctness of their pronouncements and that such confidence is not lightly shaken by a mistake or unfair criticism of this kind. At the same time it is clear that the tendency of such criticism is to undermine the dignity of the Court and in the end to embarrass the administration of justice. The faith of the public in the fairness and incorruptibility of Judges is a matter of great importance."

71. In Murli Manohar Prasad In re, (1929) ILR 8 Pat 323 at page 340 = (AIR 1929 Pat 72 at page 78). a Full Bench decision of five Judges, it was observed:

"It is for this Court as a matter of law to construe words and phrases which have no technical significance and to decide what is their meaning and what is the effect which they are calculated to produce, and I have no hesitation in deciding that the words used by the author mean, and are calculated to mean, and intended to mean that the conduct of cases before the Chief Justice is such that arguments and authorities are ignored and that for that reason the life and liberty of the subject brought before the Chief Justice is in peril. Such a statement made about a Judge in the execution of his office is a contempt of Court, of the gravest character."

72. In the matter of K. L. Gauba, (1942) ILR 23 Lah 411 at pp. 423, 424 = (AIR 1942 Lah 105 at p. 108 (FB)) where a book published by an advocate of the Lahore High Court was concerned, the Full Bench observed:

"This book contains most scandalous allegations of improper and even corrupt motives against Judges of this Court. It is, therefore, deliberately calculated to interfere with and bring into contempt the administration of justice in this Province and to lower the prestige of this Court".

We may also mention that following Ram Mohan Lal in the matter of, AIR 1935 All 38, Coats v. Chadwick LR (1894) 1 Ch D 347 and Tushar Kanti Ghosh, Editor, In re, AIR 1935 Cal 419 the Full Bench disallowed the advocate's application to examine witnesses in defence. It observed:

"There is not a single case on record, except one to which reference will presently be made, where a person guilty of scandalising the Court pleaded or attempted to prove that the libel was true. In AIR 1935 All 38 an attempt was made by the contemner to call evidence to prove his allegations but the Court refused to call the witnesses and held that there can be no justification of contempt of Court. Even assuming that the writer of a manifesto believes all he states therein to be true, if anything in the manifesto amounts to contempt of Court, the writer is not permitted to lead evidence to establish the truth of his allegation."

73. In Coats v. Chadwick, 1894-1 Ch D 347, Chitty, J., observed in a contempt case as follows:

"The Plaintiffs' counsel not only admitted, but boldly asserted, and made it part of their argument, that the circular was libellous, and that they could justify the libel, and they referred to some of the evidence which apparently had been adduced for the purpose of sustaining justification. But the evidence and the argument founded on it are irrelevant on this motion".

In AIR 1935 Cal 410, Mukerji, J., at page 432, describing the characteristic of proceedings to punish brevi manu contempt of Court observed that in such proceedings the contemner is precluded from taking a plea or a defence".

74. The first respondent has argued his case at great length but we are unable to hold that he did not commit contempt of Court. Further, he did so deliberately. He admits that he took part in the drafting of the Impeachment Motion, and it seems to us that whoever is responsible for the final draft deliberately used words in order to bring the allegations within the word "misbehaviour" in Article 124 (4). He said that by assisting in the drafting he did not commit any contempt of Court. That may or may not be so. But so far as the present case is concerned we need not go into that wider question as he has admitted that he gave the booklet or the pamphlet to Mr. Mahindroo though according to him it was not given to him by way of sale and was not being offered for sale in general. He further said that it was admitted that the booklet was widely circulated but that this must have been done by some members of Parliament. He complained that those members had not been arraigned as co-respondents. If some members of Parliament circulated the booklet or the pamphlet, as alleged by Respondent No. 1, to persons who were not members of Parliament they equally committed contempt of this Court. But as no body has chosen to file a petition against them, nor are we aware as to which member or members of Parliament have circulated the booklet or the pamphlet they could not be proceeded against. The fact that these members of Parliament had not been made co-respondents does not exonerate the first respondent or make it any the less contempt of Court.

75. We must now refer to another defence which he relied on. He said that Article 105 (2) of the Constitution and the Parliamentary Proceedings (Protection of Publication) Act, 1956 (XXIV of 1956) protect him. He submitted in his affidavit that "firstly, Parliament's authority can be taken to be implied to this publication as it has taken no exception to or action on it; secondly, the article implies that when the publication is without such authority, only the Parliament shall take action for it". He further submitted that Sections 3 and 4 of the Parliamentary Proceedings (Protection of Publication) Act, 24 of 1956, also protect substantially true reports of Parliamentary proceedings unless made with malice. Article 105 (2) reads as follows:

"No member of Parliament shall be liable to any proceedings in any Court in respect of anything said or any vote given by him in Parliament or any committee thereof, and no person shall be so liable in respect of the publication by or under the authority of either House of Parliament of any report, paper, votes or proceedings".

We are unable to appreciate how on the facts proved in this case Article 105 (2) applies. He has not relied on any express authority of the Lok Sabha, and Article 105 (2) does not say anything of any implied authority resulting from non-action of Parliament. Nothing, in fact was shown to us as to establish the publication of the pamphlet or the booklet as a publication "by or under the authority of either House of Parliament of any report, paper, votes or proceedings".

76. Section 2 of the Parliamentary Proceedings (Protection of Publication) Act, 1956, defines "newspaper" thus:

"In this Act, "newspaper" means any printed periodical work containing public news or comments on public news, and includes a news agency supplying material for publication in a newspaper".

Sections 3 and 4 of this Act read thus.

"3. (1) Save as otherwise provided in sub-section (2), no person shall be liable to any proceedings, civil or criminal, in any Court in respect of the publication in a newspaper of a substantially true report of any proceedings of either House of Parliament, unless the publication is proved to have been made with malice.

(2) Nothing in sub-section (1) shall be construed as protecting the publication of any matter, the publication of which is not for the public good.

4. This Act shall apply in relation to reports or matters broadcast by means of wireless telegraphy as part of any programme or service provided by means of a broadcasting station situate within the territories to which this Act extends as it applies in relation to reports or matters published in a newspaper".

77. Various questions of interpretation would have arisen if the pamphlet or the booklet had been published in a newspaper, as defined in Section 2. One of them would be whether a contempt proceeding is a criminal or a civil proceeding or not; a question would also arise whether a notice of impeachment under Article 124 (4), if not admitted by the Speaker under Section 3 (1) of the Judges (Inquiry) Act, 1968 (Act LI of 1968), is a proceeding of Parliament within the meaning of Section 3 of the Parliamentary Proceedings (Protection of Publication) Act, 1956. But as here we are not concerned with the publication of the pamphlet or the booklet in a newspaper we need not decide these questions. It seems to us that the protection under Section 3 is only given to newspapers or broadcasting agencies. The protection is available provided that the publication has not been made with malice and is for public good.

78. Even so Respondent No. 1 contends that Sections 3 and 4 of the Parliamentary Proceedings (Protection of Publication) Act, 1956, show that Parliament considers it important that proceedings of the Houses of Parliament should be made known to the public, and therefore, if a private person does what is permitted by Section 3, it cannot be said to be contempt of Court because by permitting publication under Section 3 Parliament must be deemed to have said that publication even of a proceeding which would ordinarily amount to contempt of Court does not affect the due administration of justice. We are unable to deduce such an inference from Sections 3 and 4 on the statute book. This is a limited protection given to newspapers and even then it will require serious consideration whether a contempt proceeding is a proceeding, civil or criminal, within the meaning of Section 3.

79. In the result we hold that neither Article 105 (2) nor the Parliamentary Proceedings (Protection of Publication) Act, 1956 protect the first respondent in respect of the contempt of Court committed by him.

80. The first respondent said, and he has also stated so in para 10 of his affidavit, that the petitioners had "needlessly dragged in the fair name of Hon'ble Mr. Justice Hegde". According to him, the name of Mr. Justice Hegde did not occur even once anywhere either disparagingly or otherwise, and he had the greatest regard and respect for him, just as he had for every other Judge in India. He said that he took great care to keep out the fair name of Mr. Justice Hegde although he did so at the risk of the impeachment motion not being admitted. It seems to us, however, that at least to persons who knew that the appeal had been heard by Mr. Justice Shah and Mr. Justice Hegde and that the judgment was drafted and delivered by Mr. Justice Hegde, and to persons who are familiar with the practice of this Court the statement that "the other Judge merely toed his line" must appear as gross contempt of Mr. Justice Hegde and this Court. The expression "toed the line" used in reference to Mr. Justice Hegde, by clear implication, means that the learned Judge, contrary to his own views, followed what was imposed upon him by Mr. Justice Shah. There can be no more flagrant contempt of a Judge than to say that he surrendered his own judgment in deference to or dictation by another Judge sitting with him.

81. In para 3.2 of his affidavit Respondent No. 1 submitted:

"But I am not at this stage making any attempt to contradict evidence given or to give any evidence on my side. This will be done if and when the occasion arises or the Hon'ble Court so orders. I will have to summon some documents also for that purpose".

We indicated to him during the course of the hearing that he should file his affidavit or affidavits dealing with the merits of the case but that he would not be permitted to lead any other evidence to justify contempt. We have already referred to cases which show that he cannot justify contempt. If a judgment is criticised as containing errors, and coupled with such criticism, dishonesty is alleged, the Court hearing the contempt petition would first have to act as an appellate Court and decide whether there are errors or not. This is not and cannot be the function of a Court trying a petition for contempt. If evidence was to be allowed to justify allegations amounting to contempt of Court it would tend to encourage disappointed litigants—and one party or the other to a case is always disappointed—to avenge their defeat by abusing the Judge.

82. This takes us to some of the points regarding maintainability of the petition and the defects in procedure, as alleged in his application dated January 28, 1971 (Criminal Misc. Petition No. 172 of 1971).

83. In Sukhdev Singh Sodhi v. Chief Justice and Judges of the Pepsu High Court, 1954 SCR 454 at p. 463 = (AIR 1954 SC 186 at p. 190) this Court observed:

"We hold therefore that the Code of Criminal Procedure does not apply in matters of contempt triable by the High Court. The High Court can deal with it summarily and adopt its own procedure. All that is necessary is that the procedure is fair and that the contemner is made aware of the charge against him and given a fair and reasonable opportunity to defend himself. This rule was laid down by the Privy Council in re Pollard, (1868) LR 2 PC 106 at p. 120 and was followed in India and in Burma in re Vallabhdas, (1903) ILR 27 Bom 394 and Ebrahim Mamoojee Parekh v. King Emperor, (1926) ILR 4 Rang 257 at pp. 259, 261 = (AIR 1926 Rang 188 at pp. 189, 190)."

84. In our view that is still the law. It is in accordance with the practice of this Court that a notice was issued to the respondents and opportunity given to them to file affidavits stating facts and their contentions. At one stage, after arguments had begun Respondent 1 asked for postponement of the case to engage some lawyers who were engaged in fighting elections. We refused adjournment because we were of the view that the request was not reasonable and was made with a view to delay matters. We may mention that the first respondent fully argued his case for a number of days. The procedure adopted by us is the usual procedure followed in all cases.

85. The first respondent contended that the affidavit of Mr. S. N. Prasad was defective because the verification was not in accordance with the provisions of law relating to affidavits. In para 2 of the affidavit Mr. S. N. Prasad stated:

"that I state that the facts stated in paragraphs 1 and 8 of the petition are true to my personal knowledge and the facts stated in paragraphs 2 to 7 are believed to be true by me on the basis of the information received".

The first respondent said that the source of information had not been disclosed. Para 2 of the petition refers to proceedings in this Court and it was not necessary to have disclosed any further source of information. As far as paras 3 and 4 are concerned, the first respondent admits that he approached members of Parliament to file a motion of Impeachment against Mr. Justice Shah. Calling this a "campaign" is only to describe in a word his activities. Whether it should be strictly called a campaign is beside the point. The essential facts mentioned in para 5 are admitted by the first respondent. Therefore the fact that the source of information was not disclosed does not debar us from taking the facts into consideration. The last sentence of para 5, viz., "The said pamphlet was as the petitioners believe, sold or offered for sale to the public by Respondent No. 3" is a matter of belief. Para 6 contains inferences and submissions in respect of which there was no question of disclosing the source of information. Para 7 contains extracts from the booklet or the pamphlet which was attached as an annexure. In view of the document having been attached it was not necessary that the source of information regarding para 7 should have been disclosed. The allegations in para 9 of the petition are supported by an affidavit of Mr. B. P. Singh, Advocate, who has verified that the contents in his affidavit are true to his knowledge. Para 10 of the petition contains submissions and it was not necessary to state the source of information. We are unable to see any defect in the affidavit filed on behalf of the petitioners.

86. In para 5 of his petition dated January 28, 1971, the first respondent stated that "the complainant must disclose all his evidence with the initial petition and cannot be allowed to supplement any evidence later". He submitted that "in the present petition, no evidence against the respondents has been disclosed except in regard to paragraph 9 of the petition, although there are very wide and sweeping allegations in other paragraphs". There is no basis for this complaint because all the affidavits were filed along with the petition.

87. In para 6 of the petition dated January 28, 1971, he stated that "the charges against the alleged contemptners must be specifically written. It is not sufficient to leave the respondents searching for the charges from the entire petition". He submitted that the petition did not clarify specifically as to what the distinct charges against each respondent were. In the course of his arguments he referred to a number of authorities in support of this para. It is unnecessary to refer to them except one, because it is clear that on the facts the charge against the first respondent is quite clear and simple and it is not necessary that a formal charge should be drawn up by the petitioners or the Court.

88. In Nagar Mahapalika of the City of Kanpur v. Mohan Singh, Cr. App. No. 27 of 1964, D/- 31-1-1966 this Court was concerned with the contempt of Allahabad High Court by the Nagar Mahapalika of the City of Kanpur by committing a breach of an injunction issued by the High Court. In this connection Sarkar, J., as he then was, speaking on behalf of the Court, observed:

"We will deal first with the case of the Municipality. It will have been noticed that it was not the respondent's case that the Municipality had issued any new licence after the order of July 14, 1961. In fact, it was conceded that it did not do so. What was said was that the Municipality adopted a practice of realising rickshaw taxes from the owners and printing the fact of the receipt of the tax on the rickshaws and permitting them to ply without licences. The way the case seems to have been put before the High Court was that this was a subterfuge adopted by the Municipality to get round the order of the High Court the object of which was to stop new rickshaws plying for hire, by permitting rickshaws to ply without a licence on payment of the tax. This contention was accepted by the High Court. It seems to us somewhat unfortunate that the matter proceeded in this way. An allegation of contempt of court is a serious one and is considered by Courts with a certain amount of strictness. A person against whom such an allegation is made is entitled to be told the precise nature of it. In this case the respondent did not state that any subterfuge had been adopted by the Municipality or that the Municipality had sought to defeat the order of the Court; that was only insinuated. This is not a fair or permissible way of charging a person with contempt of Court. The contempt alleged cannot be left to be spelt out from the allegations made nor can the person charged be left to guess what contempt is alleged against him. Further, paragraph 8 of the petition for committal for contempt stated that there was a direct contravention of the order which of course, there was not as no licences had been issued. Neither were any particulars given as to how the alleged practice that was adopted was intended to get round the order, nor of how the Municipality permitted rickshaws to ply without licences. We think the learned Attorney-General was perfectly justified in drawing our attention to these defects in the petition and characterising them as serious".

The facts in this case are quite different and it seems to us that the petition is as clear as it can be. By setting out the extracts from the pamphlet or the booklet pointed attention has been drawn to the offending passages, although the whole booklet or the pamphlet was annexed as an annexure.

89. In para 7 of the application dated January 28, 1971 the first respondent submitted that the petition should not have contained anything which was not a charge against him. He complained that the petition contained several wild allegations based entirely on surmises. He further added that "being without evidence they cannot be, and have not been put down specifically as charges against the respondents, and therefore ought not to find place in the petition". He developed this point by referring to paras 3, 4 and 5 of the petition. These paras seem to be introductory to the main charge and there is no law that anything introductory should not be put in the petition. He admits that he patiently approached each Hon'ble Member and narrated the deep wrong done to him and he was able to satisfy quite a number. Nobody denies that he has a right to approach and convince the Hon'ble Members and that he exercised that right. But if the petitioners have called it a "campaign" in paras 3 and 4 of the petition, no serious objection can be taken to these paras.

90. In para 3 of this application Respondent No. 1 submitted that there was delay of more than 120 days in filing the petition for contempt. He says that delay is always fatal to contempt action unless it is fully explained and condoned in proper cases and on proper application. We are unable to see any delay in this case. After the first respondent gave a copy of the pamphlet or the booklet to Mr. Mahindroo, the petitioners had to ascertain facts regarding its publication, printing, etc. As the Attorney-General did not move in the matter, the President of the Supreme Court Bar and the other petitioners chose to bring this contempt to our notice. It is no doubt desirable, as stated by Oswald*, that "an application for attachment should be made promptly, or the Court may refuse to attach". But whether there has been delay or not depends on the facts of a particular case. In this connection Respondent No. 1 referred to page 231 of Ramchandra's book on 'Contempt of Court under the Indian Constitution' where the author gives the American Law on this point as follows:

"While delay in contempt proceedings is to be deprecated the power of Court to take such action is not however lost by delay. The summary power is not in any way jeopardised on that account except where delay extends substantially beyond the end of trial, in which event it has been held fatal to the power of summary punishment".

But even the American law is quite clear that delay is not fatal.

91. Similarly, in State Government, Madhya Pradesh v. Vinaya

*Oswald — Contempt of Court: third edition: p. 196.

Kumar, AIR 1952 Nag 34 it was observed as follows:

"We do not say that delay will always be fatal. There may be cases in which it is not. Examples of both kinds of cases will be found in 7 Halsbury's Laws of England, Hailsham Edition, page 37, Note (p)".

92. In this connection we may also deal with his objection in para 10 of the application that the petitioners have no locus standi. This Court can issue a notice suo motu. Further, the advocates of this Court, including the President of the Supreme Court Bar Association, are perfectly entitled to bring to our notice any contempt of this Court.

93. The first respondent referred to Lord Shawcross Committee's recommendation that "proceedings should be instituted only if the Attorney-General in his discretion considers them necessary". This is only a recommendation made in the light of circumstances prevailing in England. But it is not law. We may mention that the Attorney-General in England has quite a different position than the Attorney-General of India or the Advocates-General of the States. The Attorney-General in England is a member of the Cabinet, and as far as we are aware, unlike the Attorney-General in India, he does not have to receive instructions from Government whether to move a contempt petition or not.

94. Be that as it may, there is nothing in law which prevents this Court from entertaining a petition at the instance of the President of the Supreme Court Bar Association and three other advocates of the Court. The Bar is vitally concerned in the maintenance of the dignity of Courts and the proper administration of justice.

95. The next point mentioned in the petition dated January 28, 1971, is regarding non-joinder of the 200 or so signatories of the motion of impeachment. We are unable to see why the petition is bad for non-inclusion of the said signatories. There is no allegation or proof that any of the said signatories circulated this booklet or pamphlet outside the Parliament, to persons other than members of Parliament.

96. We may now deal with the other legal submissions contained in his affidavit. He submitted, in brief, that the substance of the impeachment motion had already been put in the writ petition which he filed against Mr. Justice Shah on October 27, 1969. According to him, a reproduction of proceedings of Court is not contempt unless the Court has prohibited the publication. We are unable to appreciate this line of argument. Even if he had filed a writ petition containing the substance of the impeachment motion, we are unable to see how it affords a defence to the commission of contempt of this Court by circulating the booklet or the pamphlet.

97. In para 21 of his affidavit his defence seems to be that he had told Mr. Justice Shah during the course of the hearing that he was only telling the truth and if in telling the truth it was necessary for him to go to jail for contempt he was ready for the same. He seems to suggest that if Mr. Justice Shah did not choose to take any action for contempt it is improper and not open to the petitioners to initiate these proceedings. We are unable to see any force in this submission.

98. In para 23 of his affidavit his defence is that the filing of the petition is itself contempt because "the real object of the petitioners, which is very obvious and writ large on their faces, is to take revenge upon me for having dared to approach the Parliament against their friend, junior and erstwhile boss Shri J. C. Shah. The cloak of "publication and distribution outside Parliament" is too thin to hide their real motive". We are unable to see how the petition is itself contempt. This para shows the real attitude of the respondent. He seems to think that people act only to take revenge as he seems to have done.

99. We have already dealt with his submissions in paras 24 and 24.1.

100. The contention of the respondent in para 25 is that even if it is a contempt it is a technical and trivial contempt which is not actionable. We are unable to hold that on the facts of the case it is a technical and trivial contempt. It constitutes gross contempt of two Judges of this Court and the Court itself. He was well aware of the contents of the pamphlet or the booklet. The affidavit of Mr. B. P. Singh establishes that Respondent No. 1 was showing copies of the pamphlet or the booklet which he was carrying with him to several members of the Bar in the Bar Association room. His affidavit and Mr. Mahindroo's affidavit further establish that he gave one copy of it to Mr. Mahindroo openly in the Bar room. Being a lawyer he must have known that it would be discussed there.

101. The cases referred to in para 25 and in the course of the arguments are quite distinguishable and are not applicable.

102. Now to come to the case of Respondent No. 2. Mela Ram, one of the partners of Rising Sun Press, stated in his affidavit that in the month of April, 1970, the first respondent went to him for entrusting printing work and said that he had been sent by Shri Tulsi Ram, Proprietor Youngmen & Co., Egerton Road, Delhi, whose printing work was being done by him for the last about 16 years and who used to send customers to him from time to time for printing work. He told the first respondent to see the contractor, Ram Vir, who did composing work for him. He says that he did not look into the material which the first respondent brought for printing and he left the composition work to the contractor above-named. He further says that as at about that time his mother-in-law expired he had to go to District Gurdaspur where he stayed about a week and in his absence the first respondent sat day-to-day with the contractor and compositors for having the composition completed quickly and he also got the printing done in his press before he returned from Gurdaspur. After getting the material printed the first respondent collected the same from the press before his return from Gurdaspur. He further says that the printing forms had already been taken away by the first respondent before he returned and it was not possible for him to know the contents. He further says that the title cover of the printed booklet was not printed by him nor was the binding done by him. He further alleges that the first respondent had not even paid his charges. He expressed his unconditional and unqualified apology to this Court. In view of the unconditional apology tendered by him, we do not think any further action need be taken against him.

103. The third respondent has not been served or traced. We need not say anything about him for the present.

104. It seems to us that on the facts of this case a heavy sentence is called for. Not only did the first respondent commit gross contempt of this Court but he took advantage of the retirement of Mr. Justice Shah and hurled fresh abuses on him in Court. It is true that he has offered an apology, but an apology coupled with fresh abuses can hardly be taken note of. However, we have decided to be lenient and imposed only a sentence of simple imprisonment for two months. We have decided to be lenient because such gross contempts of this Court are happily rare but any future gross contempt of this Court of this nature will be dealt with not so leniently. In the result it is held that O. P. Gupta, respondent No. 1, is guilty of contempt of this Court and sentenced to simple imprisonment for two months. We direct that he be arrested and committed to civil prison for two months. We further authorise the Registrar to take all necessary steps in this behalf.

Order accordingly.

Jain, Advocates, for Appellant.

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

VAIDIALINGAM, J.: — In this appeal by special leave, the appellant challenges the judgment and order of the Calcutta High Court dated January 19, 1968 in Criminal Appeal No. 393 of 1966.

2. The appellant filed a complaint dated April 11, 1963 against the respondent, her husband, in the Court of the Magistrate, 1st Class, Alipur-duar, alleging that he has committed an offence under Section 494 of the Indian Penal Code. Briefly her case was as follows:

3. The respondent had married the appellant in or about 1948 according to Hindu rites and both of them had lived as husband and wife together. But sometime before the date of the complaint the respondent began to ill treat her, with the result that she had to reside with her mother and brother. The respondent illegally married one Sandhya Rani as his second wife on May 31, 1962 and they have been living together as husband and wife. As the second marriage has taken place during the subsistence of the appellant's marriage with the respondent, the second marriage is invalid in law and the respondent is guilty of an offence under Section 494 of the Indian Penal Code.

4. The respondent pleaded not guilty of the offence alleged against him. He further pleaded that he has never married the appellant and that the entire prosecution case is false.

5. The trial Magistrate, after considering the evidence adduced both regarding the marriage between the appellant and the respondent as well as the alleged second marriage between the respondent and Sandhya Rani, held that the marriage of the appellant with the respondent was established. Notwithstanding the scantiness of the evidence regarding the second marriage, the Trial Magistrate, however, found that the respondent had admitted the second marriage in his objections filed to a claim made by the appellant for maintenance under Section 488 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In this view the Magistrate held that there cannot be any doubt that the respondent has married Sandhya Rani while his first wife, the appellant, was still alive. The Magistrate further held that as the marriage with the appellant was subsisting, the second marriage is void under Section 17 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 (Act 25 of 1955), (hereinafter to be referred as the Act) and, therefore, the respondent was guilty of the offence under Section 494 of the Indian Penal Code. The respondent was sentenced for the said offence to undergo rigorous imprisonment for one year and also to pay a fine of Rs. 500/- and in default to suffer rigorous imprisonment for a further period of three months. A further direction was given that half the fine, if realised, was to be paid to the complainant, the appellant.

6. On appeal by the respondent, the learned Sessions Judge, Jalpaiguri, by his judgment dated April 30, 1966 held that the evidence does not establish that the essential ceremonies to constitute a valid marriage have been performed either in the case of the marriage claimed to have taken place between the appellant and the respondent or in respect of the alleged second marriage with Sandhya Rani. In this view the learned Sessions Judge set aside the order of the Magistrate convicting the respondent and sentencing him as mentioned above. The respondent was acquitted of the offence under Section 494, I. P. C.

7. On appeal by the appellant, the Calcutta High Court, however, differed from the finding of the learned Sessions Judge regarding the invalidity of the marriage between the appellant and the respondent. On the other hand, the High Court held that the evidence establishes that a valid marriage, according to Hindu Law, by which the parties were governed, has taken place between the appellant and the respondent. But regarding the second marriage, the High Court agreed with the finding of the learned Sessions Judge that the essential ceremonies to constitute a valid marriage have not been proved to have taken place. In this view the High Court confirmed the order of acquittal passed in favour of the respondent and dismissed the appellant's appeal.

8. Mr. S. C. Majumdar, learned counsel for the appellant, has raised two contentions before us: (1) that the view of the High Court that the essential ceremonies to constitute a valid marriage have not been proved to have taken place regarding the second marriage of the respondent with Sandhya Rani, is erroneous and contrary to the evidence adduced in the case; and (2) In any event in view of the specific admission made by the respondent in Ex. 2 about the second marriage and having due regard to the other surrounding circumstances, it must be held that the respondent is guilty of the offence under Section 494, I. P. C. The respondent has not appeared before us and we have to proceed on the basis of the finding of the learned Sessions Judge, accepted by the High Court, that the appellant was married to the respondent and that the marriage was subsisting on the date of the alleged second marriage.

9. Both the contentions of the learned counsel for the appellant can be dealt with together. It has been pointed out by the learned Sessions Judge that both sides agreed that according to the law prevalent amongst the parties Homa and Saptapadi were essential rites to be performed to constitute a valid marriage. Both sides also agreed before the Court that there was no specific evidence as to the performance of Saptapadi and Homa in the case of the alleged marriage of the respondent with Sandhya Rani. Therefore, the main question that has to be considered is whether the performance of the above ceremonies and rites have to be established by evidence specifically before the respondent could be convicted under Section 494, I. P. C. The findings of the High Court are that the Priest, P. W. 6, who claims to have officiated at the marriage of the respondent and Sandhya Rani has given evidence to the effect that the marriage was solemnized according to Hindu rites. He has not said anything more than this. The other evidence adduced has not been considered to be of any use in this regard. The further finding of the High Court is that no evidence was adduced that the Homa and Saptapadi were performed in the case of the marriage between Sandhya Rani and the respondent and that it has also not been proved that there was any custom prevalent amongst the parties that those essential ceremonies are not necessary for the purpose of solemnization of the marriage.

10. According to Mr. Majumdar, when once the priest has given evidence to the effect that the marriage between the respondent and Sandhya Rani has been performed, it follows that all the essential ceremonies that are necessary to constitute a valid marriage must be presumed to have been performed. In any event, when there is evidence to show that the marriage as a fact has taken place, the presumption is that it has taken place according to law. In this connection Mr. Majumdar referred us to various English decisions where on the basis of certain evidence regarding the taking place of marriage between the parties a presumption has been drawn that the marriage must have been solemnized according to law. In our opinion, it is unnecessary to refer to those cases cited by the learned counsel as the position is concluded against the appellant by the decisions of this Court on both points. Section 5 of the Act lays down conditions for a Hindu marriage. It will be seen that one of the conditions is that referred to in Clause (i), namely, that neither of the parties has a spouse living at the time of the marriage. Section 7 dealing with the ceremonies for Hindu marriage is as follows:

"Section 7 — Ceremonies for a Hindu marriage.

(1) A Hindu marriage may be solemnized in accordance with the customary rites and ceremonies of either party thereto.

(2) Where such rites and ceremonies include the Saptapadi (that is, the taking of seven steps by the bridegroom and the bride jointly before the sacred fire), the marriage becomes complete and binding when the seventh step is taken".

We have pointed out that in the case before us both sides were agreed that according to the law prevalent amongst them Homa and Saptapadi were essential rites to be performed for solemnization of the marriage and there is no specific evidence regarding the performance of these essential rites. The parties have also not proved that they are governed by any custom under which these essential ceremonies need not be performed.

11. Section 11 of the Act deals with void marriages. One of the conditions, if contravened, which makes a marriage solemnized after the commencement of the Act, null and void, is if any party thereto has a spouse living at the time of the marriage.

12. Section 17 relating to punishment of bigamy is as follows:

"Section 17 punishment of bigamy:

Any marriage between two Hindus solemnized after the commencement of this Act is void if at the date of such marriage either party had a husband or wife living; and the provisions of Sections 494 and 495 of the Indian Penal Code shall apply accordingly".

13. Again in the case before us there is no controversy that the second marriage is stated to have taken place after the commencement of the Act during the subsistence of the first marriage. If the second marriage has taken place, it will be void under the circumstances and Section 494 of the Indian Penal Code will be attracted. Section 494 of the Indian Penal Code is as follows:

"Section 494 — Marrying again during lifetime of husband or wife —

Whoever, having a husband or wife living marries in any case in which such marriage is void by reason of its taking place during the life of such husband or wife, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine".

14. In Bhaurao Shankar Lokhande v. State of Maharashtra, (1965) 2 SCR 837 = (AIR 1965 SC 1564), the question arose whether in a prosecution for bigamy under Section 494, I. P. C. it was necessary to establish that the second marriage had been duly performed in accordance with the essential religious rites applicable to the form of marriage gone through. The first appellant therein had been convicted for an offence under Section 494, I. P. C. for going through a marriage which was void by reason of its taking place during the lifetime of the previous wife. The said appellant contended that it was necessary for the prosecution to establish that the alleged second marriage had been duly performed in accordance with the essential religious rites. The State, on the other hand, contended that for the commission of the offence under Section 494, I. P. C. it was not necessary that the second marriage should be a valid one and a person going through any form of marriage during the lifetime of the first wife would be guilty of the offence. This Court rejected the contention of the State and observed as follows:

"Prima facie the expression 'whoever marries' must mean 'whoever marries validly' or whoever marries and whose marriage is a valid one'. If the marriage is not a valid one, according to the law applicable to the parties, no question of its being void by reason of its taking place during the lifetime of the husband or wife of the person marrying arises. If the marriage is not a valid marriage, it is no marriage in the eye of law".

15. Again in interpreting the word "solemnize" in Section 17 of the Act, it was stated:

"The word 'solemnize' means in connection with a marriage, 'to celebrate the marriage with proper ceremonies and in due form', according to the Shorter Oxford Dictionary. It follows, therefore, that unless the marriage is 'celebrated or performed with proper ceremonies and due form' it cannot be said to be 'solemnized'. It is therefore essential for the purpose of Section 17 of the Act, that the marriage to which Section 494, I. P. C. applies on account of the provisions of the Act, should have been celebrated with proper ceremonies and in due form. Merely going through certain ceremonies with the intention that the parties be taken to be married, will not make them ceremonies prescribed by law or approved by any established custom".

From the above quotations it is clear that if the alleged second marriage is not a valid one according to law applicable to the parties, it will not be void by reason of its taking place during the life of the husband or the wife of the person marrying so as to attract Section 494, I. P. C. Again in order to hold that the second marriage has been solemnized so as to attract Section 17 of the Act, it is essential that the second marriage should have been celebrated with proper ceremonies and in due form.

16. In the said decision this Court further considered the question whether it has been established that with respect to the alleged second marriage the essential ceremonies for a valid marriage have been performed. After referring to the passage in Mulla's Hindu Law, 12th Edn. at page 615 dealing with the essential ceremonies which have to be performed for a valid marriage, this Court, on the evidence, held that the prosecution had neither established that the essential ceremonies had been performed nor that the performance of the essential ceremonies had been abrogated by the custom governing the community to which the parties belonged. In this view it was held that the prosecution in that case had failed to establish that the alleged second marriage had been performed in accordance with the requirement of Section 7 of the Act. The effect of the decision, in our opinion, is that the prosecution has to prove that the alleged second marriage had been duly performed in accordance with the essential religious rites applicable to the form of marriage gone through by the parties and that the said marriage must be a valid one according to law applicable to the parties.

17. In Kanwal Ram v. The Himachal Pradesh Admr., (1966) 1 SCR 539 = (AIR 1966 SC 314) this Court again reiterated the principles laid down in the earlier decision referred to above that in a prosecution for bigamy the second marriage has to be proved as a fact and it must also be proved that the necessary ceremonies had been performed. Another proposition laid down by this decision, which answers the second contention of the learned counsel for the appellant, is that admission of marriage by an accused is no evidence of marriage for the purpose of proving an offence of bigamy or adultery. On the evidence it was held in the said decision that the witnesses have not proved that the essential ceremonies had been performed.

18. It was contended that an admission made by the accused regarding the second marriage is conclusive of the fact of a second marriage having taken place and that without any other evidence a conviction could be based on such admission. This Court rejected the said contention stating:

"...it is clear that in law such admission is not evidence of the fact of the second marriage having taken place. In a bigamy case, the second marriage as a fact, that is to say, the ceremonies constituting it must be proved; Empress v. Pitambur Singh, (1880) ILR 5 Cal 566 (FB), Empress v. Kallu, (1882) ILR 5 All 233, Archbold Criminal Pleading Evidence and Practice, (35th ed.) Article 3796. In Kallu's case, (1882) ILR 5 All 233 and in Morris v. Miller, (1737) 4 Burr 2057 = 98 ER 73, it has been held that admission of marriage by the accused is not evidence of it for the purpose of proving marriage in an adultery or bigamy case

19. The decision in R. v. Robinson, (1938) 1 All ER 301, was relied on in the above decision on behalf of the prosecution in support of the proposition that it was not necessary to prove that all the ceremonies required for the particular form of marriage had been observed. After a consideration of the facts in the English decision, quoted above, this Court has expressed the view that the said decision does not support the proposition enunciated on behalf of the prosecution. We are only adverting to this fact, because the English decision was again referred to us by Mr. Majumdar; and it is not necessary for us to refer to the same over again excepting to say that the said decision does not advance the case of the appellant.

20. As pointed out earlier, this Court in Kanwal Ram's case, (1966) 1 SCR 539 = (AIR 1966 SC 314) has laid down that an admission is not evidence of the fact that the second marriage has taken place after the ceremonies constituting the same have been gone through. As the High Court has dealt with the question regarding the admissibility of admission contained in Ex. 2, we will briefly refer to the nature of the admission that was sought to be relied on against the respondent by the complainant. But we make it clear that the discussion regarding this aspect is only to deal with the contention advanced on behalf of the appellant and to reject the same. The trial Magistrate, whose decision was in favour of the appellant has himself expressed the view that the evidence on the side of the appellant regarding the alleged second marriage is very scanty. But that Court held that the respondent has admitted the second marriage in Ex. 4, which was an objection filed by the respondent in an application filed by the appellant for maintenance under Section 488, Criminal P. C. We have gone through the said objection petition. The respondent has alleged various acts of misconduct against the appellant and he has merely stated that he was compelled to marry again. But no other particulars have been given in the said objection petition. We are of the view that no admission of the second marriage by the respondent with Sandhya Rani can be culled out from Ex. 4. In fact the trial Court has based its finding regarding the second marriage almost exclusively on what it considered to be an admission contained in Ex. 4. As there is no such admission, the finding of the Magistrate was clearly erroneous.

21. Before the High Court, however, we find that the appellant did not place any reliance on Ex. 4. On the other hand she relied on an admission stated to have been contained in Ex. 2. The appellant filed a complaint under Section 494, I. P. C. against the respondent on an earlier occasion on the ground that the latter had contracted a second marriage with Sandhya Rani. That complaint was, however, withdrawn as the particular Court had no jurisdiction. In that proceeding the appellant wanted the said Sandhya Rani to be summoned as a witness. To that application, the respondent filed an objection Ex. 2 wherein no doubt, he has admitted that Sandhya Rani is his wife and that he married her because of the misconduct of the appellant. The High Court considered the question whether this statement of the respondent in Ex. 2 that he has married Sandhya Rani can be treated as an admission of the fact of the second marriage. The High Court was of the view that the statement contained in Ex. 2 would really be a confession statement and declined to act on the same for two reasons: firstly, that the statement in Ex. 2 had not been put to the respondent when he was examined under Section 342, Criminal P. C. so as to give him an opportunity to explain the statements contained therein; secondly, that even if the statement contained in Ex. 2 can be taken into account by themselves they will not be proof of the fact that all the essential ceremonies necessary for a marriage have been performed. In our view the reasons given by the High Court are substantially correct. Though strictly the statements contained in Ex. 2 may not be a confession, nevertheless, those statements, if acted upon, tend to incriminate the respondent. The respondent being in the position of an accused was entitled to be given an opportunity of offering his explanation, if any, in respect of the incriminating statement contained in Ex. 2. Such an opportunity has not been admittedly given to the respondent. His statement in Ex. 2 has not been put to him when he was examined under Section 342, Criminal P. C.

22. Further as pointed out by this Court in Kanwal Ram's case the admission in Ex. 2 cannot in law be treated as evidence of the second marriage having taken place, in an adultery or bigamy case; and that in such cases it must be proved by the prosecution that the second marriage as a fact has taken place after the performance of the essential ceremonies.

23. Mr. Majumdar relied on the decision of this Court in Bharat Singh v. Bhagirathi, (1966) 1 SCR 606 = (AIR 1966 SC 405) to the effect that the admissions made by a party are substantive evidence by themselves in view of Sections 17 and 21 of the Indian Evidence Act, and that if those admissions have been duly proved they can be relied on irrespective of the fact whether the party making them appear in the witness box or not or irrespective of the fact whether such a party had or had not been confronted with those admissions. We do not think that the said decision in any way supports the appellant with regard to prosecution for bigamy under Section 494, I. P. C.

24. To conclude, we have already referred to the fact that both the learned Sessions Judge and the High Court have categorically found that the Homa and Saptapadi are the essential rites for a marriage according to the law governing the parties and that there is no evidence that these two essential ceremonies have been performed when the respondent is stated to have married Sandhya Rani. No reliance can be placed on the admissions stated to be contained in Ex. 2. For all the above reasons the contentions of Mr. Majumdar have to be rejected.

25. The appeal fails and is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

AIR 1971 SUPREME COURT 1158 (V 58 C 233)

(From Punjab: (1968) 70 Pun LR 253)

I. D. DUA AND V. BHARGAVA, JJ.

Sukhnandan Singh and others, Appellants v. Jamiat Singh and others, Respondents.

Civil Appeal No. 1729 of 1967, D/- 18-2-1971.

(A) Evidence Act (1872), Sec. 115 — Suit for pre-emption — Plaintiff is not estopped from exercising his right of pre-emption on ground of collusion merely because the vendor who is the father of plaintiff-pre-emptor helped him to exercise that right — (1968) 70 Pun LR 253, Affirmed. (Para 7)

It is true that the right of pre-emption is a personal right and is not capable of being transferred. And the right of pre-emption being a right of substitution, the vendor also cannot in the garb of a benamidar pre-empt his own sale. But merely because the vendor who is the father of the plaintiff-pre-emptor is helping his son to exercise the statutory right conferred on the son cannot, without more, deprive him of the right to be substituted for the vendees in exercise of his right of pre-emption. Even in the wider sense of the word "collusion" which suggests a deceitful agreement or compact between two or more persons to do some act in order to prejudice a third person or for some improper purpose, would not apply to such case so as to operate as estoppel against the plaintiffs. (Para 7)

(B) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 10 — Suit for pre-emption — Where even part of land sold was in possession of a tenant, the property sold does not admit of physical possession and therefore Article 10 of the Act will apply and not Section 30 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act — (X-Ref.: — Punjab Pre-emption Act (1 of 1913), Sec. 30) — (1968) 70 Pun LR 253, Affirmed; (1902) ILR 24 All 17 (PC) and 1908 PR 49 (FB), Rel. on. (Para 8)

The starting point of limitation under Article 10 will therefore be the date of registration of sale deed. In such case Section 30 of Punjab Act (1 of 1913) will not be applicable under which the starting point of limitation will be date on which vendees took physical possession of any part of such land. Section 30 of Punjab Act (1 of 1913) applies only when the case does not fall within Article 10 of Limitation Act. The second part of Art. 10 covers cases where the subject of the sale which means the whole of the property sold does not admit of physical possession and that would be so when a part of the land is in possession of the tenants. The properties in possession of tenants will be incapable of physical possession which means personal and immediate possession. (1902) ILR 24 All 17 (PC); 1908 PR 49 (FB), Rel. on.

Mr. K. L. Gosain, Sr. Advocate, (Mr. Naunit Lal, Advocate, with him), for Appellants; Mr. Purushottam Chatterjee, Sr. Advocate, (Mr. D. D. Sharma, Advocate, with him), for Respondents.

DUA, J.: — In this appeal by special leave from the judgment and decree of a learned single Judge of the Punjab and Haryana High Court arising out of a pre-emption suit only two questions were raised by the learned counsel for the appellants who were vendees-defendants in the trial Court. The suit was instituted by the three sons of the three vendors who were real brothers, and the two points canvassed in this court challenge the decisions of the High Court and of the court of the District Judge on issues 6 and 7. Those issues are:

"6. Is the suit collusive? If so, its effect.

7. Is the suit within time?"

Both these issues were decided by the trial Court against the plaintiffs but the District Judge on appeal reversed the decision of the trial court on both the issues and the High Court on second appeal affirmed the decision of the first appellate court.

2. The relevant facts may now be stated in brief. Kartar Singh, Bachan Singh and Sardara Singh, sons of Soheli Singh, claiming to be co-sharers, agreed on September 19, 1961, to sell 193 Kanals and 15 marlas of land to Sukhnandan Singh, Sukhmininder Singh and Balkar Singh sons of Gurdev Singh in equal shares, 1/3rd share, Gurminder Singh and Gurbakh Singh sons of Teja Singh in equal shares, 1/3rd share, Gurdas Singh son of Angrez Singh, 1/3rd share at the rate of Rs. 840/- per bigha. A sum of Rs. 7,000/- was received in cash as earnest money. On December 6, 1961 a formal sale deed was executed with some variations in shares and also with the addition of Smt. Chand Kaur, wife of Sardar Inder Singh as one more co-vendee. The sale price was stated to be Rs. 32,550/-. Possession of the land sold was stated to have been delivered and it was also recited that consolidation proceedings under Section 21 (1) of the Consolidation Act had been completed but further proceedings in favour of the vendees would be taken after the proceedings which might be taken under Sec. 21 (2). This sale deed was duly registered on March 9, 1962.

3. The suit for pre-emption by the three sons of the three vendors was instituted on March 6, 1963. It was contested by the vendees. The pleadings of the parties gave rise to several issues but we are only concerned with the issues relating to the pleas of collusive nature of the suit and limitation. The trial Court disposed of the issues Nos. 5 and 6, relating respectively to waiver of the right of pre-emption by the plaintiffs and to the collusive nature of the suit by dealing with them together. Photographs showing the plaintiffs and the vendors being together along with the plaintiffs' counsel in the Court compound during the course of this litigation were produced as evidence in the case. Exhibit P-2 a certified copy of the Register of Consolidation Proceedings, produced by the plaintiffs in evidence showed that this copy had been prepared at the instance of Kartar Singh, one of the vendors and father of Jamiat Singh, plaintiff. According to the trial Court there was also evidence that the plaintiffs and the vendors resided and messed together. On consideration of this material the trial Court held that the vendors and the pre-emptors resided and messed together and the expenses of the litigation were paid by the vendors. From this it concluded that the suit had been filed by the plaintiffs at the instance of and in collusion with the vendors. The right of pre-emption being a piratical right, according to the trial Court, to quote its own words "it is necessary that the pre-emptors must not act in collusion with vendors or act in bad faith". The plaintiffs were on this reasoning held to be estopped from exercising their right of pre-emption. On the question of limitation the trial Court held that the vendors and not their tenants were in possession of the land sold, which had been allotted to them in the consolidation proceedings and the possession of that land was delivered to the vendees on the date of the sale. The suit was accordingly held to be barred by time. The suit was dismissed for all these reasons.

4. On appeal by the plaintiffs the District Judge reversed the conclusions of the trial Court both on the point of estoppel or collusion and of limitation. According to that Court in order to prove collusion the defendant has to prove that the suit was being fought for the vendors' benefit, the normal presumption being that the plaintiff sues for his own benefit. In support of this view several decisions were relied upon by the District Judge. In the present case, according to the learned District Judge, the plaintiff Jamiat Singh had clearly stated that he was pre-empting the present sale with his own earnings and the learned District Judge found no rebuttal to this assertion. Neither the fact that Ex. P-2 had been obtained by one of the vendors nor the fact that the vendors were present in the Court compound with the plaintiffs and their counsel during the course of litigation indicated that the present suit had necessarily been instituted for the benefit of the vendors. On this reasoning the decision on the collusive nature of the suit which must result in its dismissal was reversed. In regard to the limitation also the learned District Judge concluded, in disagreement with the trial Court, that a part of the land sold was in possession of tenants and, therefore, it did not admit of physical possession, which means immediate personal possession. In that view of the matter under Article 10 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908 the terminus a quo was the date of registration of the sale deed. The suit was thus held to have been instituted within one year from the date of registration and, therefore, within limitation under Article 10. The judgment and decree of the trial Court was reversed and the suit decreed.

5. On second appeal a learned single Judge of the Punjab and Haryana High Court held that there was no clear and reliable evidence that the vendors and their sons were united in mess and estate. The other two circumstances, namely, that the vendors and the plaintiffs along with their counsel were seen together in Court compound and that Ex. P-2 had been obtained by one of the vendors one day before the institution of the suit, were not considered sufficient to establish the collusive nature of the suit. In regard to the statement of Jamiat Singh the High Court undoubtedly felt unimpressed by his statement but we do not think it was open to that Court on second appeal to appraise the credibility of the testimony which was believed by the final Court of fact when there was no illegality in the appraisal of the testimony by the District Judge and it was open to him to take the view he did. Jamiat Singh had stated that he was separated from his father since about three years and that he was spending on the litigation from what little amount he earned. The matter was not pursued in cross-examination as to what was the source of his earnings. Even after feeling unimpressed by the statement of Jamiat Singh, the High Court came to the conclusion that it was for the vendees to establish the collusive nature of the plaintiffs' suit. On the evidence produced the District Judge having come to the conclusion that they had failed to discharge this onus this conclusion was one of fact and not being vitiated by any error of law it was held binding on second appeal.

6. The contention that the District Judge was wrong in holding that a part of the land sold was in possession of the tenant at the time of the sale was also repelled. The conclusion of the District Judge that field No. 24/21 out of the suit land was under the cultivation of Bahadur Singh, a tenant at will, as was clear from Ex. X-4, a copy of Ehasra Girdwari relating to Rabi 1962 and Kharif 1962 was also held to be a finding of fact binding on second appeal. This document was not shown to have been misread by the first appellate Court. On this finding Article 10 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, and not Section 30 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act, was held applicable and the suit was thus considered to be within limitation. For this view reliance was placed on two decisions of the Punjab Chief Court and a Bench decision of the Nagpur High Court. The appeal was, however, partly accepted by raising the pre-emption money by an additional sum of Rs. 4,133.50.

7. In this Court again the learned counsel for the appellant-vendees pressed the points of collusion and limitation. We are, however, unable to find merit in either of them. So far as the question of collusion is concerned it was not clarified by the learned counsel how the plaintiffs could be held to have lost their right of pre-emption merely because their fathers either came to the court with them, which they did openly, or allowed their sons as plaintiff to use in court, copy of a public document procured by the father of one of the plaintiffs. Collusion in judicial proceedings is normally associated with secret arrangement between two persons that the one should institute a suit against the other in order to obtain the decision of a judicial tribunal for some sinister purpose. In such a proceeding the claim put forward is fictitious, the contest feigned or unreal and the final adjudication a mask, designed to give false appearance of a genuine judicial determination, and this is generally done with the object of confounding third parties. In such a proceeding the contest is a mere sham. In the case of pre-emption it is open to the plaintiff to find financial aid and from any source he likes. He has a statutory right to pre-empt the sale and it is no concern of the vendees whether he borrows money from someone or otherwise arranges for finances for pre-empting the sale. It is true that it is a personal right and is not capable of being transferred. And the right of pre-emption being a right of substitution, the vendor also cannot in the garb of a benamidar pre-empt his own sale. But merely because the vendors who are the fathers of the plaintiff-pre-emptors are helping their sons to exercise the statutory right conferred on the sons cannot, without more, deprive them of the right to be substituted for the vendees in exercise of their right of pre-emption. The property pre-empted, if they are successful, will belong to them and not to their fathers who were the vendors. Even in the wider sense of the word "collusion" which suggests a deceitful agreement or compact between two or more persons to do some act in order to prejudice a third person or for some improper purpose, would not apply to the present case so as to operate as estoppel against the plaintiffs. Whether or not a pre-emptor-plaintiff who is a benamidar for the vendor or some other party loses his right because of being a benamidar is a question which does not concern us in this case and we express no opinion thereon. On the facts of the present case there is absolutely no material on which the plaintiffs can be held to have lost their right of pre-emption on the ground of collusion.

8. The next point relates to the plea of limitation. Article 10 of the Second Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act provides a period of one year to enforce a right of pre-emption whether founded on law or general usage or on special contract, the terminus a quo being the date when the purchaser takes under the sale, sought to be pre-empted, physical possession of the whole of the property sold or where the subject of the sale does not admit of physical possession, the date when the instrument of sale is registered. Section 30 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act applies only when the case does not fall within Article 10. On the finding of the District Judge and of the High Court it is obvious that physical possession of the whole of the property sold was not taken by the vendees, on the date of sale. Therefore, the first part of article does not apply. According to the appellants' counsel the land sold does admit of physical possession and if a part of the land has been taken into possession by the vendees then Article 10 would be inapplicable and Section 30 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act would be attracted. In that case the terminus a quo according to Shri Gosain would be the date on which the vendees took under the sale physical possession of any part of such land. The argument in our view is misconceived. The second part of Article 10, in our opinion, covers cases where the subject of the sale, which means the whole of the property sold, does not admit of physical possession and that would be so when a part of the land is in the possession of the tenants. The argument that use of the expression "subject of the sale" suggests that this article would apply only if the entire and not only a part of the land is in the possession of the tenants is not acceptable. The expression "physical possession" came up for construction before the Privy Council in Batul Begam v. Mansur Ali Khan, (1902) ILR 24 All 17 (PC). Lord Robertson speaking for the Judicial Committee said:

"What has to be considered is as the High Court accurately formulated, the question, Does the property admit of physical possession? The word "physical" is of itself a strong word, highly restrictive of the kind of possession indicated; and when it is found, as is pointed out by the High Court, that the Legislature has in successive enactments about the limitation of such suits gone on strengthening the language used, — first in 1859 prescribing "possession", then in 1871 requiring "actual possession" and finally in 1877 substituting the word "physical" for "actual", it is seen that that word has been very deliberately chosen and for a restrictive purpose. Their Lordships are of opinion that the High Courts are right in the conclusion they have stated. Their Lordships consider that the expression used by Stuart, C. J., in regard to the words "actual possession" is applicable with still more certainty to the words "physical possession" and that what is meant is a "personal and immediate" possession".

This view has ever since then been followed by the High Courts in India. No decision holding to the contrary was brought to our notice. Indeed, Shri Gosain virtually conceded that there was none to his knowledge. The properties in possession of tenants have on this reasoning to be held to be incapable of physical possession which means personal and immediate possession. It was so held in Ghulam Mustafa v. Shahabuddin, 1908 PR 49 (FB). In that case the Full Bench of the Punjab Chief Court approved of some of its earlier decisions overruling the dictum in one of the earlier decisions of that Court. This view has consistently held the field in the Punjab and we do not find any cogent reason for disagreeing and upsetting it. If the date of registration of the sale deed be the terminus a quo then indisputably the suit must be held to be within limitation. These being the only two points agitated before us this appeal must fail and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

The tape itself is primary and direct evidence admissible as to what has been said and picked up by the recorder. A previous statement, made by a witness and recorded on tape, can be used not only to corroborate the evidence given by the witness in Court but also to contradict the evidence given before the Court, as well as to test the veracity of the witness and also to impeach his impartiality. Thus apart from being used for corroboration, the evidence is admissible in respect of other three matters, under Section 146 (1), Exception 2 to Section 153 and Section 155 (3). The weight to be given to such evidence is however distinct and separate from the question of its admissibility. Case law discussed. (Paras 13, 22)

Nayar, Advocate, with them), for the Attorney-General for India, Election Commission of India and the Returning Officer, Presidential Election.

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

VAIDIALINGAM, J.: — On April 1, 1970 Shri Jagat Narain (R. W. 25) was being cross-examined by the counsel for the petitioners in Election Petition No. 5 of 1969, when certain suggestions were put to him that he had tried to dissuade the first petitioner in the said Election Petition, viz., Shri Abdul Ghani Dar from filing the election on political reasons and when the witness denied not only those suggestions but also certain other suggestions put to him, counsel for the petitioner represented that Shri Abdul Ghani Dar had a tape recording of the talk that took place between him and the witness and he sought permission from the Court to play the same for being put to the witness. Objection was raised by Mr. C. K. Dapthary, learned counsel for the respondent, that the tape recorded conversation was not admissible in evidence. In view of this objection, counsel on both sides were heard regarding the admissibility of the tape recorded conversation, on April 2, 1970 and, after hearing arguments on both sides, we then expressed the opinion that the tape recorded conversation could be received in evidence and that we would give our reasons later. The further cross-examination and re-examination of the witness proceeded in respect of the tape recorded conversation which was played in Court in the presence of the witness.

2. We now proceed to state our reasons for holding that the tape recorded conversation could be admitted in evidence. But we make it clear that we have dealt with only the question regarding the admissibility in evidence of the tape recorded conversation, which is distinct and separate from the weight to be given to such evidence which question will be dealt with in the main judgment to be delivered in the election petitions.

3. Before we deal with the question of admissibility of the tape recorded conversation, it is necessary to state that in Election Petition No. 5 of 1969 the petitioners allege that offences of undue influence at the election had been committed by the returned candidate and by his supporters with the connivance of the returned candidate. The material facts relating to the said allegations have also been given in the petition in paragraph 13 of the election petition. It has been alleged that on August 9, 1969 an unsigned pamphlet in cyclostyled form and also a printed pamphlet without bearing the name of its publisher or printer (marked as Exhibits P-18B and P-37B respectively) were published by free distribution among the members of the Electoral College for the Presidential Election. It has been further alleged that the offence of undue influence was freely committed at the election by the returned candidate and the persons mentioned in the election petition and by their supporters and workers with the connivance of the returned candidate, by voluntarily interfering and attempting to interfere with the free exercise of the electoral rights of the candidates and the various electors mentioned in the petition. It is further alleged that with the object of interfering with the free exercise of electoral rights by Sri N. Sanjiva Reddy, a candidate at the election, Sri Jagat Narain and certain other persons named in the petition who are described as supporters and workers of the returned candidate in general with the consent and connivance of the returned candidate published, by free distribution, pamphlets in Hindi and English in cyclostyled form as well as in printed form in which very serious allegations were made against Shri Reddy, which amounted to undue influence upon the persons referred to in the election petition within the meaning of Section 171 (c) of the Indian Penal Code. There is a further allegation that these pamphlets were distributed from August 9, 1969 to August 16, 1969 among all the electors of the Electoral College for the Presidential election and they were also distributed during this period in the Central Hall of Parliament by the various persons mentioned in the petition, which included Shri Jagat Narain.

4. No doubt the allegations of that undue influence in the manner mentioned was exercised by the respondent or by anybody with his connivance have been strongly refuted in the counter-affidavits filed by the respondent.

5. In the particulars given by Shri Abdul Ghani Dar, relating to the distribution of pamphlets in question, he has stated that the persons who distributed them between August 9 and August 16, 1969 had already been mentioned in the election petition. He has further stated in the said particular that Shri Jagat Narain was one of the persons who distributed the pamphlets in the Central Hall of Parliament on August 11, 1969 to the Members of Parliament whose names have also been given.

6. Issues have been framed whether the respondent, or any person with his connivance, printed published and distributed pamphlet and other matters connected therewith.

7. In chief-examination, Jagat Narain, as R. W. 25, has stated that he has never seen either of these pamphlets being distributed and that he has seen them only in Court, on the day when he was giving evidence, viz., on March 31, 1970. He has also stated that he never received the pamphlets at all. He has further reiterated that he has not distributed the pamphlet as spoken to by some of the witnesses on the side of the petitioners and he has further affirmed that he has never distributed the pamphlets in the Central Hall of Parliament and that he has not seen the pamphlets except in Court. In cross-examination, the witness was asked about the telephone call that he had made to Abdul Ghani Dar about 6 or 7 days before the filing of the election petition i. e., in the first week or second week of September, 1969, and suggestions were made that the witness attempted to dissuade Abdul Ghani Dar from filing the election petition on the ground that serious consequences would follow from such action. Though the witness admitted that he had a telephone talk with Abdul Ghani Dar, he denied various other suggestions put to him regarding the nature of the talk that took place between him and Abdul Ghani Dar. It was at that stage that the counsel for the election petitioner wanted the tape recording of the talk that took place between Abdul Ghani Dar and the witness to be adduced as evidence on the ground that the answers given by the witness in Court were quite contrary to the nature of the conversation that he had with Abdul Ghani Dar. Objection was raised to receiving the same as evidence.

8. Mr. Daphtary, learned counsel for the respondent, raised two contentions regarding the admissibility of the tape recorded conversation between R. W. 25 and Abdul Ghani Dar: (1) The tape-recorded conversation cannot be admitted in evidence for contradicting the evidence of the witness; and (2) Under Section 155 (3) any former statement, before it could be put in evidence to impeach the credit of witness, the Court must be satisfied that the previous statement is relevant to the matter in issue and the tape recorded conversation in this case, has no relevance to the matters which are in issue in these proceedings.

9. Mr. Daphtary, learned counsel, did not dispute the correctness of two decisions of this Court, to which reference will be made later, wherein the taped records of conversation had been admitted in evidence. But, according to him, in those cases the tape recorded conversations were admitted in evidence to corroborate the evidence given by a witness before the Court, and not to contradict his evidence.

10. Both the grounds of objection raised by Mr. Daphtary have been controverted by Mr. Malik and by Mr. Sharma, learned counsel appearing for the election petitioners in Election Petitions Nos. 5 and 4 of 1969, respectively. According to Mr. Malik, whose contentions were substantially adopted by Mr. Sharma, issues have been framed whether undue influence has been exercised by the respondent or by any other person with his connivance. According to the petitioners undue influence has been exercised by the publication and distribution of the pamphlets, making of scurrilous attack about the personal character of Sri Sanjiva Reddy. Specific allegations have been made in the election petition that R. W. 25 is one of those who distributed the pamphlets in the Central Hall of Parliament with the connivance of the respondent. The witness denied this allegation in chief-examination and when certain suggestions, that the witness attempted to dissuade Shri Abdul Ghani Dar from filing his election petition on the ground that serious consequences would follow, were put to him in cross-examination, witness denied them and, in that context the tape-recorded conversation between the witness and Shri Abdul Ghani Dar assumes importance. Relying upon that tape recorded conversation, counsel urged that his client is entitled to test the veracity of the witness and to impeach the credit of the witness and satisfy the Court that the evidence given by the witness before us is inconsistent or contrary to what he had stated on an earlier occasion.

11. In this connection counsel relied upon Section 146, Exception 2 to Section 153 and Clause (3) of Section 155 of the Evidence Act. Section 146 deals with questions lawful in cross-examination and, in particular, Clause (1) thereof provides for a witness being cross-examined by questions being put to him which tend to test his veracity. Section 153 generally deals with exclusion of evidence to contradict answers to questions testing veracity, but exception 2 states that if a witness is asked any question tending to impeach his impartiality and answers it by denying the facts suggested, he may be contradicted. Section 155 deals with impeaching the credit of witness by the various ways dealt with in Clauses (1) to (4). One of the ways by which the credit of a witness may be impeached is dealt with in Clause (3) and that is by proof of former statements inconsistent with any part of his evidence which is liable to be contradicted. Mr. Daphtary pointed out that Section 146 must be read with Section 153. We cannot accept this contention in its entirety. It may be that Clause (3) of Section 146 may have to be read along with the main Section 153 but Cl. (1) of Section 146 and exception (2) to Section 153 deal with different aspects. Under Section 146 (1) questions may be put to a witness in cross-examination to test his veracity and, under Exception 2 to Section 153 a witness may be contradicted when he denies any question tending to impeach his impartiality. The object of the election petitioner to adduce the tape-recorded conversation as evidence is to impeach the testimony of the witness that he has never seen the pamphlet and that he has never attempted to induce the election petitioner not to file the election petition on threat of serious consequences, and to establish that the evidence given in Court is quite contrary to the statements made by him in the conversation that he had with Abdul Ghani Dar and which has been recorded on tape.

12. We will now refer to the case law on the subject. In Hopes v. H. M. Advocate, (1960) Scots Law Times 264 a tape-recorded conversation which took place between a complainant and a blackmailer was played before the jury and sought to be put in evidence by a police officer who had listened to the conversation as it was transmitted through the loudspeaker. Objections were raised to the admissibility of the said evidence. The learned trial Judge overruled the objection as follows:—

"New techniques and new devices are the order of the day. I can't conceive, for example, of the evidence of a ship's captain as to what he observed being turned down as inadmissible because he had used a telescope, any more than the evidence of what an ordinary person sees with his eyes becomes incompetent because he was wearing spectacles. Of course, comments and criticisms can be made, and no doubt will be made, on the audibility or the intelligibility, or perhaps the interpretation, of the results of the use of a scientific method; but that is another matter, and that is a matter of value, not of competency. The same can be said of visual observation by a witness who says he sees something; his evidence can be criticised because of his sight or because of the sort of glasses he is wearing, and so on, but all these matters are matters of value and not of competency."

Accordingly, the learned Judge allowed the police officer to give evidence as to what he heard on the tape recorder, which was played before the Jury.

13. On appeal to the High Court of Justiciary, it is seen that no objection appears to have been taken to the competency of the evidence furnished by the tape-recorder but the admissibility of the evidence of the police officer based upon his hearing of the tape-recorded conversation was objected to. This objection was overruled by the High Court of Justiciary stating that it is competent for the police officer to give evidence of conversation which he hears with the help or hearing aid or, as in the case before them, when the conversation is transmitted to him over a distance by wireless and that there may be criticism of the quality of his evidence and not about the competency of the evidence of what he has heard. The Court further observed at p. 267:

"The Inspector's evidence of the conversation was as much primary evidence as the evidence from the replaying of the tape recorded. Each received it at the same time, the one recording it in the human memory the other upon a piece of tape". From the above decision it is apparent that the tape itself is primary and direct evidence admissible as to what has been said and picked up by the recorder.

14. In R. v. Mills, (1962) 3 All ER 298 a conversation which had been recorded on tape between two of the persons was heard by a police officer who gave evidence that he has himself remembered the various remarks which passed between those two persons which could be corroborated by the conversation recorded on the tape. But the tape recording itself was not introduced in evidence nor was there any production of the record by consent before the Jury. They referred to the decision of the High Court of Justiciary in Hopes' Case, (1960) Scots Law Times 264 and held that according to the said decision the tape-recorded conversation was admissible as direct evidence. Though the discussion in the Judgment shows that a tape-recorded conversation is admissible in evidence, ultimately the Court left open the question stating:

"The Court has not debated, and is not deciding, any broad and general question of principle whether evidentiary material obtained by the use of a tape-recorder without the concurrence of a human being listening to the same sounds is admissible or is not admissible in evidence in a criminal trial".

But it is significant to note that the Court of Criminal Appeal rejected the contention of the counsel for the accused that there has been any question of introduction of hearsay evidence at the trial by the evidence of the police officer giving evidence after refreshing his memory from the tape.

15. The question again directly arose in R. v. Masquid Ali, (1965) 2 All ER 464. In that case a conversation which took place in Punjabi dialect between two persons and which had been recorded on the tape was played before the jury and was admitted in evidence by the trial Judge. Objection was taken before the Court of Criminal Appeal regarding the admissibility in evidence of the tape-recorded conversation between the accused. Therefore the point that specifically arose before the Court of Appeal was 'Is a tape recording as such admissible in evidence, as a matter of law?' After referring to the observations in Mills' Case, (1932) 3 All ER 298, the appellate Court noted that the question regarding the admissibility of a tape record was not actually decided in that case. The decision of the High Court of Justiciary in Hopes' Case, (1960) Scots Law Times 264 was referred to and it was noted that the evidence of the police officer who listened to the tape recorder was held to be admissible. The Court said, at p. 469:

"We think that the time has come when this Court should state its views of the law on a matter which is likely to be increasingly raised as time passes. For many years now photographs have been admissible in evidence on proof that they are relevant to the issues involved in the case and that the prints are taken from negatives that are untouched. The prints as seen represent situations that have been reproduced by means of mechanical and chemical devices. Evidence of things seen through telescopes or binoculars which otherwise could not be picked up by the naked eye have been admitted and now there are devices for picking up, transmitting, and recording, conversations. We can see no difference in principle between a tape recording and a photograph. In saying this we must not be taken as saying that such recordings are admissible whatever the circumstances, but it does appear to this Court wrong to deny to the law of evidence advantages to be gained by new techniques and new devices provided the accuracy of the recording can be proved and the voices recorded properly identified; provided also that the evidence is relevant and otherwise admissible, we are satisfied that a tape recording is admissible in evidence. Such evidence should always be regarded with some caution and assessed in the light of all the circumstances of each case. There can be no question of laying down any exhaustive set of rules by which the admissibility of such evidence should be judged". In consequence, the Court held that the tape-recorded conversation was admissible in evidence, subject to the limitations mentioned in the above extract.

16. It will therefore be seen that though the question of admissibility of a tape-recorded conversation had been left open in Mills' Case, (1962) 3 All ER 298, the same was specifically considered and decided affirmatively in Masquid Ali's Case, (1965) 2 All ER 464.

17. Before we deal with the decisions of this Court bearing on this point, it is necessary to advert to two decisions, one of the Punjab High Court and the other, of the Calcutta High Court. In Rup Chand v. Mahabir Parshad, AIR 1956 Punj 173 the defendant, in answer to a suit for recovery of a certain sum of money on the basis of a promissory note, put forward a plea that the original promissory note containing certain endorsement had been destroyed and had been replaced by another promissory note bearing the same date. The defendant attempted to substantiate this plea by the oral testimony of a broker but the latter declined to support him. The defendant requested the Court to permit to confront the broker witness with the conversation which had taken place between himself and the broker in regard to the destruction of the earlier promissory note and which had been faithfully recorded on a tape-recorder.

The plaintiff objected to the admissibility of the evidence by tape recorder, but the trial Court overruled the objection. In the revision taken before the High Court by the plaintiff, the order of the trial Court was confirmed. The High Court relied upon Section 155 (3) of the Evidence Act and held that as the broker appearing as a witness in the case before it had made a statement to the defendant on a former occasion which was at variance with the statement made by him before the Court, there can be no doubt that the defendant could establish that a previous statement which was contradictory to the evidence given before the Court was made by the witness to him. Dealing with the question whether a record of such a previous statement, as prepared by a scientific instrument, could be produced in Court as evidence, the High Court held that such a tape-recorded statement was admissible in evidence, and observed as follows:

"I am aware of no rule of evidence which prevents a defendant who is endeavouring to shake the credit of a witness by proof of former inconsistent statements, from deposing that while he was engaged in conversation with the witness a tape recorder was in operation, or from producing the said tape-recorder in support of the assertion that a certain statement was made in his presence".

This decision lays down two propositions: (i) that a tape-recorded conversation is admissible in evidence and that (ii) if it contains a previous statement made by a witness, it can be used to contradict the evidence given before the Court.

18. In Manindra Nath v. Biswanath, (1963) 67 Cal WN 191 the Calcutta High Court had to consider whether a defendant was entitled to adduce in evidence a previous statement of the plaintiff and recorded on the tape to contradict the plaintiff's evidence given before the Court and held that the tape-recorded conversation was admissible in evidence and the previous statement recorded therein could be used to contradict the evidence given before the court. After referring to Rup Chand's Case, AIR 1956 Punj 173, the Court observed at p. 192:

"If the plaintiff, while he is in the witness box, makes a statement which is at variance with a statement previously made by him, the plaintiff may be asked whether he made such previous statement and if he denies having made the previous statement, such previous statement may be proved by the defendant. There, as in this case, it is alleged that the previous statements of the plaintiff were recorded in a tape-recorder, those statements may be admitted in evidence, if it is proved that they were made by the plaintiff and that the instrument accurately recorded those statements. The fact that the statements were recorded in a tape-recorder and the recording was made behind the back and without the knowledge of the plaintiff is by itself no objection to the admissibility of the evidence".

There are two decisions of this Court bearing on this matter: S. Pratap Singh v. The State of Punjab, (1964) 4 SCR 733 = (AIR 1964 SC 72) and Yusuffalli v. State of Maharashtra, (1967) 3 SCR 720 = (AIR 1968 SC 147).

19. In Pratap Singh's case, (1964) 4 SCR 733 = (AIR 1964 SC 72) it has been held that rendering of a tape-recorded conversation can be legal evidence by way of corroborating the statement of a person who deposes that the other speaker and he carried on the conversation and even of the statement of a person who may depose that he overheard the conversation between the two persons and what they actually stated had been tape-recorded that weight to be given to such evidence will depend on the other facts which may be established in a particular case. Though there was a difference of opinion in the majority and minority judgments regarding certain other aspects which arose for consideration, so far as the admissibility of a tape-recorded conversation in evidence, all the Judges appear to have been unanimous in the view that it was admissible. But it must be noted that in the majority judgment it is stated that it was not contended on behalf of the State that the tape-recordings were inadmissible. Similarly, in the minority judgment also it is observed that tape-recordings can be legal evidence by way of corroborating the statements of a person who deposes that the speaker and he carried on that conversation and, as it had not been held by the trial Court that the record of a conversation on tape is not admissible in evidence for any purpose it was not necessary to pursue the matter further.

20. In Yusufalli's case, (1967) 3 SCR 720 = (AIR 1968 SC 147) the question was whether a conversation between the complainant and a person, who later figured as an accused on a charge of offering bribe, and recorded on tape was admissible in evidence. It is seen from the decision of this Court that the tape recorder was played in Court at the trial of the accused. This Court held that the evidence of the complainant was sufficiently corroborated by the tape-recorder and observed at p. 723:

"The contemporaneous dialogue between them formed part of the res gestae and is relevant and admissible under Section 8 of the Indian Evidence Act. The dialogue is proved by Shaikh. The tape record of the dialogue corroborates his testimony. The process of tape recording offers an accurate method of storing and later reproducing sounds. The imprint on the magnetic tape is the direct effect of the relevant sounds. Like a photograph of a relevant incident, a contemporaneous tape record of a relevant conversation is a relevant fact and is admissible under Section 7 of the Indian Evidence Act".

Reference was made, with approval, to the decision of the Punjab and Calcutta High Courts in Rup Chand's case, AIR 1956 Punj 173 and Manindra Nath's case, (1963) 67 Cal WN 191 and also to the earlier decision of this Court in Pratap Singh's Case, (1964) 4 SCR 733 = (AIR 1964 SC 72) where a tape recorded conversation had been admitted in evidence. The decision in Maqsd Ali's Case, (1965) 2 All ER 464 was also quoted with approval.

21. In particular, it will be noted that this Court, in the said decision, approved of the decision of the Punjab High Court in Rup Chand's Case, AIR 1956 Punj 173, holding that tape recording of a former statement of a witness can be admitted in evidence to shake the credit of the witness under Section 155 (3) of the Evidence Act.

22. Having due regard to the decisions referred to above, it is clear that a previous statement, made by a person and recorded on tape, can be used not only to corroborate the evidence given by the witness in Court but also to contradict the evidence given before the Court, as well as to test the veracity of the witness and also to impeach his impartiality. Apart from being used for corroboration, the evidence is admissible in respect of the other three last-mentioned matters, under Section 146 (1), Exception 2 to Section 153 and Section 155 (3) of the Evidence Act. Therefore it is not possible for us to accept the contention of Mr. Daphtary that the previous statement can be used only for purposes of corroboration but not for the purpose of contradicting the evidence given before the Court. If a previous statement made by a person can be used to corroborate his evidence given before the Court, on principle, we do not see any reason why such previous statement cannot be used to contradict and also for the other purposes referred to above. In particular the fact that the decisions of the Punjab and Calcutta High Courts in Rup Chand's case, AIR 1956 Punj 173 and Manindra Nath's case, (1963) 67 Cal WN 191 where the previous statements have been used to contradict the evidence given before the Court has been approved by this Court in Yusufalli's Case, (1967) 3 SCR 720 = (AIR 1968 SC 147) clearly establishes that the contention of Mr. Daphtary that the previous statement cannot be used to contradict the evidence given before the Court cannot be accepted. As pointed out already, Mr. Daphtary has not challenged the correctness of the decision in Yusufalli's Case, (1967) 3 SCR 720 = (AIR 1968 SC 147). Therefore the first ground of objection raised by Mr. Daphtary will have to be overruled.

23. Coming to the second contention of Mr. Daphtary, which has been set out earlier, in our opinion that question becomes really academic when once we have held that the previous statement can be used to contradict the evidence given before the Court under Section 155 (3) for the purpose of impeaching the credit of the witness. But, as the question has been raised, we shall deal with that aspect also.

24. According to Mr. Daphtary, the expression which is liable to be contradicted in Clause (3) of Section 155 means 'which is relevant to the issue'. In support of this contention, the counsel referred us to the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Khadijah Khanum v. Abdool Kurreeem Sheraji, (1890) ILR 17 Cal 344 and pointed out that the said decision has been referred to in text-books on the Law of Evidence viz., Woodroffe & Ameerali's Law of Evidence, Field's Law of Evidence and Sarkar's Law of Evidence. In the Calcutta decision the Court has stated:

"I am inclined to think that in Section 155 (3) of the Evidence Act the words, 'which is liable to be contradicted', mean 'which is relevant to the issue'".

In our opinion, the proposition has been too broadly laid down by the learned Judge. A reference to the various clauses in Section 155 in our opinion does not warrant the interpretation placed by the Calcutta High Court. For instance, under Cl. (1), the evidence that is contemplated and which could be given will certainly not be directly relevant to the issue which is before the Court but will be of a general nature that the witness is unworthy of credit. Again, under Cl. (2), the evidence regarding the receipt of bribe will only be to establish that the evidence of the witness regarding the matter about which he speaks cannot be acted upon. Even otherwise, in this case, we have already referred to the relevant issue bearing on the matter and we have pointed out that according to the counsel for the petitioners their attempt is to impeach the credit of R. W. 25, by establishing, if possible, that his evidence cannot be relied on in view of the fact that he is making contradictory statements. On that basis, even applying the test laid down by the Calcutta High Court, it will follow that the previous statement, recorded on tape, must be considered to be relevant to the issue before the Court. Counsel also drew our attention to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Bhogilal v. Royal Insurance Co., AIR 1928 PC 54 to the effect that Sections 153 and 155 of the Evidence Act must be strictly construed. There can be no controversy that the provisions of any statute must be properly and strictly construed. This decision, hence, has no bearing on the matter before us. It is also significant that the Judicial Committee, when dealing with Section 155 of the Evidence Act, makes no reference to the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Khadijah Khanum's case, (1890) ILR 17 Cal 344.

25. It follows that the second ground of objection, urged by Mr. Daphtary, to the admissibility of this piece of evidence, has also to be overruled.

26. In the result we hold that the conversation, which is stated to have taken place between the witness R. W. 25 and the first petitioner in Election Petition No. 5 of 1969 (viz., P. W. 55) and recorded on tape, is admissible in evidence.

27. We once again emphasize that this order relates only to the admissibility in evidence of the conversation recorded on tape and has not dealt with the weight to be attached to that evidence. It must also be pointed out that the question, whether the pamphlets, Exhibits P-18-B and P-37-A, have been circulated in the manner alleged by the petitioners and the further question whether they amount to exercise of undue influence are also matters which have not been considered in this order. The above are all aspects which will be dealt with in the judgment, while disposing of the Election Petitions.

Order accordingly.

(A) Gold (Control) Act (1968), Section 16 (1) — Reasonableness of requirement to make declaration — Provision requiring a pawn broker to make monthly declaration under Form GS III does not impose unreasonable restriction on his right under Article 19 (1) (f) or (g).

(Para 18)

(B) Gold (Control) Act (1968), Section 68 — Notice prior to confiscation proceedings — Necessity — Absence of any provision requiring giving of notice to a pawn broker prior to confiscation proceedings causes him no prejudice — (X-Ref.: — Sections 99 and 71).

(Para 19)

In terms of Section 99 a pawn broker is presumed to be the owner of gold etc., seized from his possession or custody. He can appear before authorities and show reason for not taking any penal action against him.

(Para 19)

(C) Gold (Control) Act (1968), Section 71 — Confiscation of gold — Provision for confiscation of gold on failure of a pawn broker to submit monthly return imposes unreasonable restriction on his right to acquire, hold and dispose of gold and gold ornaments, etc. — (X-Ref.: — Constitution of India, Article 19 (1) (f) and (g) and 19 (5) and (6).

(Para 19)

(D) Gold (Control) Act (1968), Section 2 (p), Explanation — "Gold article and ornament" — Distinction — It cannot be said that the definition section does not make a clear distinction between "article" and "ornament".

(Para 20)

Whether a thing passes as an article or an ornament is a question of proof.

(Para 20)

(E) Gold (Control) Act (1968), Section 58 — Validity — The provision is not invalid on ground that it gives power of search and seizure to Gold Control Officer on suspicion only — (AIR 1968 SC 59, Followed). (Para 25)

The duty of a pawn broker under Section 16 to submit return under Form GS III is not taken away by the provisions of Section 6 (1). Nor the omission to include pawn broker specifically under sub-section (2) of Section 16 has effect upon his obligation to file return.

(Para 29)

(G) Gold (Control) Act (1968), Pre. — Validity of the Act — Enactment of Gold (Control) Act (1968), is not beyond legislative competence of the Parliament — (X-Ref.: — Constitution of India, Article 246).

Quareshi v. State of Bihar

MITTER, J.: — The petitioner in Writ Petition No. 24 of 1970, a citizen of India, who has been carrying on business inter alia of money lending against pledge of gold ornaments, challenges the vires of the Gold Control Act, 1969 read with the rules made thereunder and in particular Sections 6, 8 and 16 (1) of the Act.

2. The facts on which the petition is based are as follows. The petitioner has fairly extensive business of money lending in Etawah in U. P. In pursuit of his business he advances moneys to a large number of persons who pledge ornaments made of gold or containing gold and other precious stones, or silver. It includes a seasonal business of agriculturists taking loans from him in the sowing season and repaying the same with interest by redeeming the pledged ornaments. According to the petition such loans are not always redeemed quickly and there are instances of ornaments lying with him under pledge for 10 to 15 years. He also owns along with other members of his family substantial quantities of gold ornaments. As he has a strong room for keeping these valuables his friends and relations also are in the habit of keeping their gold ornaments and articles with him for safe custody. The purity of the gold content of the ornaments varies from 10—18 carats to 22—24 carats. The content of the gold is difficult to estimate in some cases where they are pieces containing more than one metal and set with stones. In all such cases a rough and ready estimate of their value is made whenever possible by the indigenous method of determining the purity on a touchstone and loans are advanced to the extent of 50 to 75 per cent of the value of the pledged goods. Over the last 8 to 10 years the petitioner claims to have come into possession of such pledged ornaments and articles which have not been redeemed since their first pledge weighing approximately 42,989 grams. On an average he entertains about 25 transactions of pledge or redemption in a day and the total number of ornaments and articles pledged with him over a year varies from 15,000 to 20,000 pieces. His entire belongings of gold including those of the members of his family are kept in a strong room along with the pledged goods.

3. The petitioner's grievance is based on a raid which took place at his place of business on March 26, 1969 by the Inspectors of Excise under the authority of the Collector of Central Excise. The raid was completed on 9th April, 1969 and a large number of ornaments and articles of gold were seized from his premises. According to the petition the condition precedent to the exercise of such power i. e., that the officer concerned should have a reasonable belief that the provisions of the Act have been violated was non-existent and in any event the Act did not permit Inspectors of Customs or Central Excise to carry out the search or seizure. The validity of the search and seizure is also challenged on the ground that inasmuch as the time to furnish declaration under Section 18 of the Act had been extended since the commencement of the Act from time to time up to the 30th April, 1969 the search which took place on March, 26, 1969 was unjustified.

4. The different provisions of the Act and the grounds of attack on them may be summarised as follows:—

(a) Sections 4, 6, 8 (1), 16 read with 71, 74 and 86 are bad in law as outside the competence of Parliament and/or in violation of the Constitution. Sections 6 and 16 (1) are impugned on the ground that Parliament had no competence to encroach on the field of money lending and money lenders which is covered by a State item of legislation in the Seventh Schedule.

(b) Sections 4 and 16 read with the power of search and seizure, impositions of fine and penalty and power of prosecution, etc., confer arbitrary powers upon the respondents capable of indiscriminate use and as such are violative of Article 14.

(c) The expression "possession, custody and control" in Section 16 is vague, uncertain and incapable of any objective assessment.

(d) The provisions of Section 8 (1) of the Act are violative of the petitioner's fundamental right to acquire, hold or dispose of property in the form of primary gold as it is not in the interest of general public. The section is also impugned as affecting the possession by the petitioner of primary gold found which he has been holding for many years past. It is also attacked on the ground that the Gold Control Officer can always treat a particular piece of ornament as primary gold, the acquisition and disposal of which was prohibited under the Act.

(e) It is impossible for anyone to comply strictly with the form GS III prescribed under the rules. In order to comply with the strict statutory obligations the petitioner would have to incur huge expenses for maintaining the necessary staff and undertaking scientific assessment to ascertain the purity, weight and value of gold content in each and every ornament.

(f) The obligation to furnish declarations in respect of every pledge and/or redemption of the ornament would be incapable of compliance as on an average he enters into about 100 transactions of this character in a day. It was also quite impracticable to comply with the provisions of Section 16 (4) and (10) to furnish repeated declarations for every acquisition and/or redemption of the pledge of the ornaments.

5. The petition was affirmed on January 13, 1970 and on the 19th January this Court granted interim stay of further proceedings in pursuance of search and seizure.

6. In the counter affidavit of the Assistant Collector of Central Excise reliance is placed on the following facts:—

1. The total quantity of gold seized in the course of the search of the petitioner's premises which started on the 26th March, 1969 and ended on 9th April, 1969 was 95,793.995 gms. of the approximate value of Rs. 14,47,300. This included gold with foreign marking weighing 3,539.842 gms. other primary gold without marks 212.865 gms., gold coins weighing 35.53 gms. and ornaments weighing 91,955.753 gms. Two show cause notices were issued one for contravention of the provisions of the Act and the other for contravention of the provisions of the Foreign Exchange Regulations Act read with the provisions of the Customs Act and the Imports and Exports Control Act.

2. The petitioner took an inordinately long time to seek legal redress; he waited from April 1969 to January, 1970 before complaining of the search and seizure. The petitioner never attempted to avail himself of the opportunity of having a personal hearing before the competent authority i. e., the Collector of Central Excise, Kanpur.

3. On or about March 25, 1969 on receipt of information and being satisfied that the provisions of the Act as also those of the Customs Act and the Foreign Exchange Regulations Act and Imports and Exports Control Act were being contravened, the Superintendent, Central Excise, Mainpuri authorised the Inspectors of Central Excise Department to enter and search the premises of the petitioner and to seize any offending gold, gold articles or gold ornaments. The authorisation of the Inspectors was under powers conferred by Section 58 (2) of the Act and Section 105 of the Customs Act, 1962.

4. The Income-tax Officer, Etawah issued an order under S. 132 (3) of the Income-tax Act, 1961 restraining the Superintendent, Central Excise, from removing, parting with or otherwise dealing with the gold and gold ornaments seized by the Inspectors of Central Excise.

5. Among the things seized were 30 biscuits of gold including one of foreign marking which was primary gold the possession of which by itself was a contravention of Section 8 (1) of the Act. Neither at the time of the seizure of the gold nor during the course of the investigation the petitioner indicated as to how many and which of the ornaments were his own and how many of them belonged to the various members of his family: no such details have been given in the petition.

6. All the allegations regarding the vires of the Act or the Rules were disputed. The difficulty of complying with the provisions of the Act was also denied and the justification for the retention of the seized articles was based on the powers conferred under the different Acts.

7. In the counter affidavit affirmed by the Secretary to the Government in the Ministry of Finance Department of Revenue and Insurance, a claim is made that the subject matter of the Act does not encroach on the power of the State Legislature to legislate with respect to money lending or money lenders. It, however, contains provisions prohibiting persons from obtaining loan on the hypothecation, pledge or mortgage of primary gold which is a reasonable restriction on the fundamental right of a citizen. It is also asserted that no provision of the Act is vague or uncertain or difficult of compliance. Section 8 (1) of the Act is sought to be justified on the ground that this provision had been inserted in the statute with a view to eliminating the chances of false defences being raised on the detection of smuggled gold and a period of six months from 1st March, 1967 had been allowed under the Defence of India Rules to enable persons who might have gold in their possession to dispose of it either by sale or delivery for conversion into ornaments to licensed dealers or by certified goldsmiths. Stress was also laid on the legislation on the subject by which control of gold was first made law as Part XII (A) (of the Defence of India Rules) promulgated under the Defence of India Act followed by the Gold (Control) Act, 1968, the Gold Control Ordinance, 1968 and the Gold Control Act of 1969. It was submitted that the object of this series of legislation was with a view to prevent smuggling of gold into India and of the dissemination thereof which results in the loss of Rs. 100 crores of foreign exchange per annum. This object could not be achieved unless there was restriction on the manufacture and sale of new ornaments, declaration of holdings of gold other than ornaments, regulation of the business of gold including the activities of gold refiners and goldsmiths. The impracticability of estimating the purity of gold ornaments was also disputed on the assertion that any experienced goldsmith can easily assess the purity of gold in an ornament by rubbing it on a touchstone. A time limit of 30 days had been given from the commencement of the Defence of India (4th Amendment) Rules, 1966 to persons owning ornaments in excess of the specified limits for making declarations. The petitioner should therefore have made a declaration of ornaments in his possession, custody or control. In writ petitions filed before the present series of petitions, an undertaking had been given to this Court in those petitions that no action would be taken under Sections 16 (7) and 16 (1) and 100 of the Act and the time for making declarations under Section 16 was extended till 28th February 1969 and suitable instructions had been issued to the field staff to comply with the above. The time limit for filing the declarations under Section 16 (7) had been extended up to 30th June but it was denied that the period of making a declaration under Section 16 (1) had been extended up to 30th April, 1969.

8. Before examining in detail the relevant provisions of the Act and the contentions founded thereon, it may be noted that this Act had been challenged by several writ petitions to this Court immediately after it was put on the statute book in September, 1968. The questions which fell for consideration in that series of petitions included:

(a) Whether the Act was within the legislative competence of Parliament under Entry 52 of List I and

Entry 38 of List III of the Seventh Schedule, or

(b) Whether it fell within the exclusive competence of the State Legislatures under Entry 27 of List II. A large variety of propositions was there advanced to declare the Act as beyond the competence of Parliament. It had been argued inter alia that sections 4 (4), 4 (5), 5 (1), 5 (2), 27 (2) (d) 27 (6), 16 (7), 32 read with 46, 88 and 100 were unreasonable and not in public interest and so were violative of Article 19 (1) (f) and (g) of the Constitution. Violation of Article 14 was also urged.

9. Being of the view that the attack on some of the provisions was justified but the provisions which were found to be invalid not being so inextricably bound up with other parts as to render the whole Act unconstitutional, this Court held that several provisions, namely, Sections 5 (2) (b), 87 (2) (d), 27 (6), 32, 46, 88 and 100 were invalid. It is worthy of note that although challenge was directly made to the validity of Section 16 (7) the Court did not express any opinion thereon. The said provision cannot therefore be assumed to have been struck down.

10. The matters with which we are now concerned not only include (1) Writ Petition No. 24/1970 of which details have been given above, but (2) Writ Petition No. 587/1970 the petitioners in this petition having come before this Court on an earlier occasion and (3) two Appeals 1613/70 and 1659/70. The petitioners in the two petitions mentioned as well as the appellants in the appeals are all persons who carry on the business of pawn broking and money lending inter alia, on the security of gold articles and ornaments and the common grievance of all these persons is against some of the provisions of the Act, the appeals involving a further question as to the impact of the Act on several State Acts dealing with money lending and money lenders and pawn broking and pawn brokers.

11. The impugned Act, as is shown by its preamble, is to provide for the economic and financial interests of the community, for the control of the production, manufacture, supply, distribution, use and possession of and business in, gold, ornaments and articles of gold and for matters connected therewith or incidental thereto. As is well known the object of the Act is to make it difficult, if not impossible, for gold which is smuggled into the country from being circulated evidently with the object of checking smuggling of gold or rendering the same unprofitable and so avoiding a loss of foreign exchange to the country.

12. Although there is no definition of pawn broker in Section 2 of the Act there can be no doubt that some of the provisions of the Act are designed to restrict the use of gold by way of pledge or hypothecation for securing loan. Section 2 (b) of the Act defines an "article" as anything (other than ornament) in a finished form, made of, manufactured from or containing, gold and includes any gold coin and broken pieces of an article, but does not include primary gold. Under Section 2 (j) 'gold' means gold including its alloy (whether virgin, melted or re-melted, wrought or unwrought) in any shape or form, of purity of not less than nine carats and includes primary gold, article and ornament. 'Ornament' is defined as a thing in a finished form meant for personal adornment or for the adornment of any idol, deity or any other object of religious worship, made of, or manufactured from gold, whether or not set with stones or gems, etc. The definition contains an Explanation whereby a thing made of gold though resembling an ornament is not to be deemed to be an ornament unless it is used as such in any part of the country. Primary gold is defined in Section 2 (4) as meaning gold in any unfinished or semifinished form including ingots, bars, billets, etc. Section 2 (1) defines a 'declaration' as one which is required by the Act or was required by Rule 126-I of the Defence of India Rules, 1962 or the Gold (Control) Ordinance, 1968 to be made with regard to the ownership, possession, custody or control of gold. Under Section 4 (1) the Central Government has to appoint an Administrator for carrying out the purposes of the Act. Sub-section (2) gives the Central Government power to appoint Gold Control Officers for enforcing the provisions of the Act.

13. Section 6 (1) empowers the Administrator to require any person who lends money on pledge, hypothecation, etc., of any article or ornament to furnish a return giving full particulars of the things given by way of security and the persons who gave the security. Sub-section (2) of this section authorises the examination of accounts of persons lending money on the security of gold articles or ornaments and declares that any gold which is not entered in the accounts or found to be in excess of the quantity shown in the accounts and it is not otherwise accounted for to the satisfaction of the examining officer is to be deemed to be in possession of such person in contravention of the provisions of the Act. Chapter III of the Act containing Sections 8 to 11 deals with restrictions relating to the manufacture, acquisition, possession, sale, transfer or delivery of gold. Sub-section (1) of Section 8 forbids any person from owning or having in his possession, custody or control or acquiring or agreeing to acquire the ownership, possession, custody or control or buying, accepting or otherwise receiving or agreeing to buy, accept or otherwise receive any primary gold save as otherwise provided in this Act. In other words, there is a complete bar to anybody having possession of primary gold.

14. In this connection it may be noted that there was a notification under the Defence of India Rules requiring the conversion of primary gold either into cash or into ornaments within the time specified therein which had expired long before the Gold Control Act was put on the statute book. Sub-section (4) of Section 8 is aimed at preventing any person from delivering, selling or disposing of etc., of any article to a person who is not a licenced dealer or refiner except as provided in the Act. Sub-sections (3) and (4) have a qualification in sub-section (5) as regards the person accepting or transferring by way of gift or exchange gold coins not exceeding five in number. Sub-section (6) empowers the Administrator to make exemption from the above provisions in special circumstances. Section 10 provides as follows:—

"No person shall obtain from any other person any loan or advance on the hypothecation, pledge, mortgage or charge of—

(a) any primary gold, or

(b) any article or ornament which is required to be included in a declaration unless such article or ornament has been so included:

Provided that, in the case of an article which is not required to be included in a declaration, no transfer or delivery thereof shall be made unless such transfer or delivery has been intimated in writing to the Administrator."

Section 11 contains prohibitions regarding making, manufacturing etc., of primary gold articles except under authorisation by the Administrator.

15. Chapter IV deals with possession of gold by public religious institutions, disposal of gold received by way of offerings, submission of monthly accounts and responsibility of the person in charge of the management of any public religious institution in regard to such gold or gold ornaments. Section 16 which has no less than 13 sub-sections provides for the making of declarations for all practical purposes by every person who owns or possesses or deals with or disposes of gold subject to the exemption created in sub-section (5). Under sub-section (1) every person who owns or is in possession, custody or control of any article or ornament at the commencement of the Act, or acquires the ownership, possession, etc., thereafter must make within 30 days from such commencement or from the acquisition, as the case may be or within such further time as the Administrator may allow a declaration in the prescribed form as to the quantity, description and other prescribed particulars of any article or ornament or both, owned, possessed, held or controlled by him. Such declaration however is not required to be made by any person who has before the commencement of the Act already made a declaration in relation to the article or ornament or both. Sub-section (2) specifies a number of cases from Clauses (a) to (l) of persons who have to make the declarations in such cases and its opening words are as follows:

"For the removal of doubts, it is hereby declared that the declaration referred to in this section shall be made, in relation to any article, or ornament, or both....."

Clause (a) deals with minors and lunatics, the declaration having to be made by the guardian or manager. Clause (b) deals with owners of idols or deities; Clause (c) deals with properties of a person which are under the management of an administrator or receiver; Clause (d) with a person whose properties are under the management of the Court of Wards; Clause (e) relates to articles or things vested in an executor or an administrator of a will or other testamentary disposition; Clause (f) deals with the case of firms; Clause (g) with the case of a Hindu undivided family; Clause (h) with the case of a private or a public trust; Clause (i) with the case of a company whether incorporated in or outside India; Clause (j) with a temple, church, mosque, gurdwara or any other religious institution; Clause (k) deals with wakf property and Clause (l) deals with societies, clubs or other associations. Clause (m) deals with other persons owning, possessing or holding of gold as may be prescribed for them. Sub-sections (1) and (2) of Section 16 make it quite clear that every person who owns or is in possession, custody or control of any article or ornament, no matter whether he is or is not the owner thereof, is under a duty to make a declaration with respect to all his holdings of gold articles or ornaments. Clause (5) exempts persons holding or owning gold only within up to certain limits from making such declarations. Under Clause (3) any person who did not own, possess, hold or control any quantity of gold in excess of the quantity specified in sub-section (5) before the commencement of the Act but acquires after such commencement the ownership thereof whether by succession, intestate or testamentary or otherwise, must make a declaration if as a result of such acquisition the total quantity of gold which comes to be held or possessed or controlled by him exceeds the limits specified. Sub-section (4) of the section makes it incumbent on all persons who have made declarations either under the Defence of India Rules or the Gold Control Ordinance or under sub-section (1) to make a further declaration as often as he acquires or parts with the ownership, possession, etc., of such gold giving prescribed particulars thereof. Sub-section (7) makes it obligatory on every licensed dealer or refiner to make a declaration as therein specified. Under sub-section (8) every declaration required under this Section is to be made in triplicate of which one copy is to be authenticated and signed by the Gold Control Officer and to be returned to the person making the declaration and the copy so returned is to be retained by such person as evidence of the declaration made by him under this section. Under sub-section (10) a person who acquires or parts with ownership, possession, custody or control of gold after he has made a declaration has to endorse within 30 days from the date of such acquisition or parting with of gold in such manner as may be prescribed on the copy of the declaration retained by him and to produce such copy within 7 days from the date of such endorsement before the Gold Control Officer who has to make necessary changes in the registers referred to in sub-section (9) and also in the copy of the declaration kept in his safe custody. Under sub-section (11) no person shall own or have in his possession, custody or control any quantity of gold which is required to be included in a declaration unless such gold has been included in a declaration or further declaration as the case may be. It is to be noted however that no restriction has been placed on a pawn broker on receiving articles or ornaments of gold by way of pledge and advancing loans thereon. Chapter XII of the Act deals with entries, search, seizure and arrest for the purposes of the Act. Section 58 (1) and (2) empower any Gold Control Officer authorised by the Administrator to enter and search any premises, refinery etc., if he has reason to suspect that any provision of the Act has been or is being or is about to be contravened. Section 59 empowers any Gold Control Officer authorised in this behalf by the Administrator to detain and search any person or thing if he has reason to suspect that any person has secreted about his person or in any other thing any gold in respect of which contravention of the Act is suspected or any document which in his opinion will be useful or relevant to any inquiry or proceedings in relation to the contravention of any provision of the Act. Section 60 deals with the conditions under which a search is to be conducted. Section 66 gives any Gold

Control Officer if he has reason to believe that in respect of any gold any provision of this Act has been or is being or is attempted to be contravened, the power to seize such gold along with the package, covering or receptacle or any other goods in which any quantity of such gold has been mixed. Section 68 contains the power of arrest in certain circumstances. Under Section 69 the provisions of Sections 102 and 103 of the Code of Criminal Procedure relating to search and seizure are made applicable as far as possible. Chapter XIII deals with confiscation and penalties. Section 71 which is the opening section of the Chapter runs as follows:—

"(1) Any gold in respect of which any provision in this Act or any rule or order made thereunder has been, or is being, or is attempted to be, contravened, shall be liable to confiscation.

(2) Any package, covering or receptacle (including its other contents) in which any gold liable to confiscation under sub-section (1) is found shall also be liable to confiscation.

(3) Where any gold liable to confiscation under sub-section (1) is mixed with other goods in such manner that such gold cannot be separated from those other goods, the whole of such goods shall be liable to confiscation.

(4) Any gold which is liable to confiscation under sub-section (1), shall be so liable notwithstanding any change in its form."

Section 72 provides for confiscation of conveyances or animals etc., by means of which any provision of the Act is sought to be contravened. Under Section 73 whenever any confiscation is authorised by the Act, the officer adjudging it may, subject to such conditions as may be specified in the order adjudging the confiscation, give to the owner thereof an option to pay in lieu of confiscation such fine, not exceeding twice the value of the thing in respect of which confiscation is authorised as the said officer thinks fit. Under Section 74 any person who in relation to any gold does or omits to do any act which act or omission would render such gold liable to confiscation under the Act or abets the doing or omission of such an act or is in charge of the conveyance or animal which is liable to confiscation shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five times the value of the gold or one thousand rupees whichever is more, whether or not such gold has been confiscated or is available for confiscation. Under Section 77 no confiscation made or penalty imposed under the Act is to prevent the infliction of any other punishment to which the person affected thereby is liable under the provisions of this Act or under any other law. Chapter XIV deals with adjudication, appeal and revision. Section 78 indicates the limits of authority of different adjudicating officers. Under Section 79 no order of adjudication of confiscation or penalty is to be made unless the owner of the gold, conveyance or animal or other person concerned is given a notice in writing—

(i) informing him of the grounds on which it is proposed to confiscate such gold, conveyance or animal or to impose a penalty; and

(ii) giving him a reasonable opportunity of making a representation in writing within such reasonable time as may be specified in the notice against the confiscation or imposition of penalty mentioned therein and if he so desires, of being heard in the matter.

16. Chapter XV deals with offences and their trial. Section 85 makes the carrying on of the business of a banker or money lender in contravention of the Act or any rule or order made thereunder punishable with imprisonment for a term which is to be not less than six months but not more than three years and also with fine. The Court, however, may, if satisfied that the special circumstances of the case so require, impose a sentence of imprisonment for a term which may be less than six months. Failure to make a declaration under the Act without any reasonable cause or making a declaration which is either false or which the declarant knows or has reason to believe to be incorrect is punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years and also with fine. Under Section 91 whoever contravenes any provisions of the Act or any rule or order made thereunder for which no punishment is separately provided in this Chapter (Chapter XV) shall be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to three months or with fine or with both. There are some miscellaneous provisions in Chapter XVI. Under Section 99 any person who is in possession, custody or control of any primary gold, article or ornament is to be presumed, unless the contrary is proved, to be the owner thereof.

17. Mr. Daphtary, learned counsel appearing in support of Writ Petitions 24 and 287 of 1970 limited his challenge mainly to Sections 6, 8 and 16 of the Act and attempted to show that compliance with all the conditions in form GS III prescribed under Rule 4 of the Act was almost an impossibility. The first question to be considered is, whether there is anything in the Act or the rules regarding the filling up of the form GS III which constituted an unreasonable restriction on the part of a pawn broker to hold, acquire or dispose of property or carrying on his business of money lending unreasonable within the meaning of Article 19 (1) (f) and (g) of the Constitution not saved by sub-clauses (5) and (6) thereof. In our view no exception can be taken to the provisions of the Act to which our attention was drawn by learned counsel for the purpose on this score. If smuggling of gold into the country is to be checked by the prevention of the conversion of smuggled gold into gold articles or ornaments, there is no unreasonableness in the State calling upon all pawn brokers and persons who take pledges or hypothecation of ornaments to furnish declarations so that the Administrator and the Gold Control Officer may keep an eye on the activities of such persons and, if necessary, at any point of time, ask for a return in terms of Section 6 and satisfy himself about the legality of his acts by inspecting his accounts. It would not be difficult for anybody carrying on or wanting to carry on business lawfully to insist on the pawnor producing the copy of the declaration in his possession given to him after authentication by the Gold Control Officer in terms of sub-section (8) of Section 16 in order to satisfy himself that there is no contravention of the Act.

18. Section 16 as is seen is all-embracing and makes it obligatory on every person unless he is exempted under sub-section (5) thereof to make a declaration of all the gold articles and ornaments in his possession, custody or control. In order that there may not be any uncertainty in the matter of making declarations in certain cases, the Legislature has indicated the persons on whom the burden lay. The requirement of making a declaration as often as a pawn broker acquires ownership, possession custody or control of gold under sub-section (4) is to be read with sub-section (10) and it is enough for a pawn broker to approach the Gold Control Officer with the full and detailed statements of his holding at the end of every month. As such it cannot be said that there is any unreasonable restriction on his holding property or pursuing his business in terms of Article 19 (1) (f) or (g) of the Constitution.

19. The contention that there being no provision for notice to be given to him in case of any proceedings for confiscation the pawnee may be prejudicially affected without a hearing being given to him has no substance inasmuch as he will be the person presumed to be the owner in terms of Section 99 and the gold can only be seized from his possession or custody. He can appear before the authorities and make his submissions as to why no penal action should be taken against him. There does not however seem any justification for an order of confiscation of gold under Section 71 of the Act merely because of a failure to comply with Section 16 relating to declaration. It is no doubt true that the owner is to be given a hearing in terms of Section 79 and he has a right of appeal under Section 80 but the provision of Section 73 which allows the levy of a fine in lieu of confiscation not exceeding twice the value of the thing in respect of which confiscation is authorised appears to be unduly harsh. In this connection, a reference may be made to Section 18 of the Wealth Tax Act and the penal provisions contained therein. Under the Wealth-tax Act the penalty in case of failure to furnish the return without reasonable cause is a sum equal to two per cent of the tax for every month during which the default continues but not exceeding in the aggregate 50 per cent. of the tax. It will be noticed that the fine there is imposed only on failure to pay the tax but in case of gold in respect of which no declaration has been made under Section 16 or the factum of pawn of which has not been communicated in writing to the Administrator, the owner ipso facto becomes liable to pay an unconscionably high penalty. Section 71 therefore, appears to place an unreasonable restriction on the right of a person to acquire, hold and dispose of gold articles or gold ornaments. It may be applied indiscriminately and cannot therefore, be upheld as saved by Clauses (5) and (6) of Article 19 of the Constitution.

20. A point was also made that the definition section does not make a clear distinction between an 'article' and an 'ornament'. This seems to be without foundation. The explanation to Section 2 (c) shows that nothing made of gold which resembles an ornament will be deemed to be an ornament unless the thing (having regard to its purity, size, weight, description or workmanship) is such as is commonly used as ornament in any state. Clearly it is a question of proof as to whether the thing passes as an article or an ornament in a particular state and the difference in the treatment of these two substances in certain provisions of the Act does not fail to be considered.

21. It was argued that compliance with all the conditions laid down in form GS III under Rule 4 of the Act may be impossible in a number of cases. The form contains a schedule for ornaments or articles under different columns, column 5 being meant for estimated weight and value of gold content and column 6 for 'purity'. It was urged that where the ornament is made up not only of gold but of other metals and stones, precious or otherwise, it will be impossible either to give a true estimate of the weight and value of the gold contained or the purity of the gold. No doubt there may be some difficulty in some cases but it must be realised that a pawn broker who is asked to advance money on the security of such an article will make a fairly accurate estimate of the weight and value of the gold therein so as to be able to judge for himself how much he can safely advance on the security of that article. He is not called upon to give the exact purity of the gold content in the article. He can only give an estimate of its purity.

22. The supposed difficulty in the matter of compliance with Section 16 of the Act as regards acquisition or transfer of gold as and when made really does not exist. It would certainly have been onerous and an almost impossible task for any pawn broker to perform if he had to furnish daily declarations in respect of his transactions had during the day and to get the Gold Control Officer to make an endorsement on his declaration every day. He is at liberty to get it done only once a month and surely it would not be difficult for a person who maintains a true and faithful account of his dealings with his borrowers to prepare a schedule of all these transactions up to a certain date and secure the endorsement of the Gold Control Officer to the alterations in the declaration already authenticated by him.

23. There is no difficulty with regard to primary gold found in the possession of the petitioner in the Writ Petition No. 24. Under Section 8 (1) no person can own or have in his possession, custody or control, acquire or agree to acquire ownership, buy, accept or otherwise receive any primary gold except as provided in the Act and the pawn broker or money lender is not such a person.

24. The next question to which we have to address ourselves is, whether the petitioner in W. P. No. 24 of 1970 had any lawful excuse for not making a declaration before the date of the raid on his premises. According to him he was required to file his declaration by 30th April, 1969 and the seizure of primary gold and ornaments before that date was not lawful. In this connection Mr. Daphtary drew our attention to the averments in paragraphs 12 and 16 of the petition which have been already referred to. This is however denied in the counter affidavit. Reference was made in the counter affidavit to the previous petitions and it was said that the time limit for filing the declaration of all the ornaments held by a licensed dealer or refiner was extended up to 28th February 1969 and an undertaking for the purpose was given to this Court with regard to declarations under Section 16 (1) and it was only with regard to the time limit for filing of declarations by licensed dealers or refiners under Section 16 (7) that there was an extension of time up to 30th June, 1969. The printed circulars to which our attention was drawn do not show that there was any extension of time with regard to declarations under Section 16 (1) beyond 28th February, 1969. Reference to a certain circular addressed only to Gold Control Officers to the effect that no steps were to be taken until after 30th April, 1969 by Mr. Daphtary, cannot be availed of by the petitioner who was not in a position to assert that the circular had been publicly advertised or that he himself had received any copy of such circular.

25. Mr. Daphtary also argued that the provision for search as contained in Section 58 (1) which allowed any Gold Control Officer authorised by the Administrator to enter and search any business premises merely if he had any reason to suspect that any provision of the Act was being or was about to be contravened, was contrary to law and should be struck down. He complained that it would be made an engine of oppression in the hands of any unscrupulous officer if he was minded to do so. He argued that there was no provision corresponding to this in the Sea Customs Act, 1878 under which an officer could only search a person if he had reason to believe and where the person about to be searched could require the officer to take him to the nearest Magistrate or a Customs Collector. He also drew our attention to the Customs Act, 1962 which envisages search only when the proper officer has "reason to believe" and where searches are further subject to the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure with respect thereto. It is true that the usual safeguards under the Code of Criminal Procedure are not to be found in this Act except those contained in Sections 102 and 103 of the Code. But that by itself would not be enough to strike down the provision in Section 58. There may be cases where it is necessary for the Gold Control Officer to act with expedition in the matter of search so that the information that he is going to search a premises may not leak out and the only safety in this regard is that the Gold Control Officer must be authorised by the Administrator in this behalf and he in his turn if he is empowered by the Central Government, may authorise other Government officers to enter and search the premises. In this case the counter affidavit shows that the officer searching had information regarding the contravention of the provisions of the Act and the result of the search showed that huge quantity of gold was lying with the petitioner in respect of which no declaration had been made. It would not be out of place to mention that the Gold Control Act is not the only provision of law where power to search on suspicion has been conferred on an officer. In this connection we may refer to Section 41 of the Madras General Sales Tax Act 1 of 1959 which came up for consideration before this Court in Commr. of Commercial Taxes, Board of Revenue, Madras v. Ramkishan Shrikishan Jhaver, Civil Appeals Nos. 150 to 154, D/- 9-8-1967 = (Reported in AIR 1968 SC 59).

26. In Writ Petition No. 587/1970 filed on 4th November, 1970 the challenge is made only to Section 16 of the Act which though questioned in Writ Petitions Nos. 282, 407 and 408 of 1969 had not been adjudicated upon by this Court.

27. In the result the contentions raised on behalf of Writ Petitioners except with regard to Section 71 cannot be accepted and the provisions of the Act impugned before us except the said section cannot be struck down.

28. Mr. Ayyangar appearing for the appellant in Civil Appeal No. 1613/1970 formulated his objections to the Act in the three following propositions:—

1. Section 16 (1) of the Act was a general provision which did not apply to pawn brokers and money lenders as they were governed by Sections 6, 10 and 28.

2. In any view of the matter S. 16 (1) was unreasonable regarding pawn brokers.

3. By reason of the Andhra Pradesh (Andhra Area) Pawn Brokers Act XXIII of 1943 and the Andhra Pradesh (Telangana Area) Money Lenders Act (V of 1349-T) the field of legislation regarding money lending and pawn brokers so far as the State of Andhra Pradesh was concerned was completely and exclusively occupied by those Acts and inasmuch as the Gold Control Act purported to trench upon those State Acts it was beyond the legislative competence of Parliament.

29. On the first point learned counsel drew our attention to Section 6 (1) of the Act which has been already referred to and contended that inasmuch as Section 13 (1) was a general provision while Section 6 (1) was specially directed towards pawn brokers, the former provision i. e., Section 16 (1) was inapplicable to pawn brokers. Our attention was also drawn to Section 28 of the Act under which no licensed dealer could unless authorised by the Administrator so to do carry on business as a money lender or banker on the security of any article or ornament or both in the same premises in which he carried on business as a dealer. In our view Section 16 is not excluded in the case of money lenders or pawn brokers. Any person who comes under the purview of Section 16 (1) has to make a declaration unless there is any provision to the contrary in that Chapter. The only provision to the contrary is contained in sub-section (5) which permits of exemptions in respect of persons holding gold articles or ornaments up to a specified limit. The provision in Section 6 (1) empowering the Administrator to call upon any pawn broker to furnish a return does not do away with his obligation to file a declaration under Section 16 (1). Section 6 (1) empowers the Administrator to take action in special cases where he thinks it necessary to call upon a money lender to make a return and under Section 6 (2) he is empowered to authorise any Gold Control Officer to examine the accounts of such pawn broker. This cannot obviate the requirements of Section 16 (1). Counsel argued that there would be duplication of declaration in respect of pawn brokers if both are complied. No such duplication or difficulty will arise. Every pawn broker will have to file his declaration under Section 16 (1) and he would be obliged to make a return only when he is called upon to do so in terms of Section 6. It was argued further that although under Section 16 (2) the Legislature had expressly provided for returns being submitted with regard to various kinds of persons, pawn brokers were not included therein and so long as no order prescribing for declarations being filed by them under Clause (m) was made they were under no obligation to file declarations. There is no substance in this contention because sub-section (2) is directed only towards removal of doubts which might be felt in the cases of persons specified in Clauses (a) to (l). In the case of pawn brokers no such difficulty or doubt arises. If a number of pawn brokers carry on business in partnership the declaration can be made by any partner of the firm in terms of Clause (f) and if a company carries on business of pawn broking any person in charge of the management of the affairs of the company can make the declaration.

30. There is no substance in the second point either. It was argued that a pawn broker only kept things in his safe custody and it would be very oppressive on him if he had the obligation to make a declaration as often as he got in a gold article under a pledge or parted with it on redemption. Our attention was drawn to a passage in Mohd. Hanif Quareshi v. State of Bihar, 1959 SCR 629 at p. 671 = (AIR 1958 SC 731 at p. 743) where dealing with the case of ban on the slaughter of cows of all ages and her progeny which included bulls, bullocks, heifers, buffaloes, male, female or calves imposing a great hardship on butchers this Court has remarked that the enactment if valid would compel the butchers to make fresh arrangements for the supply of animals which were permitted to be slaughtered for food and said:

"Theoretically it may not be impossible for them to do so, but in practice it is more than likely to cause considerable inconvenience to them and may even involve extra expenses for them The immediate effect of the operation of these Acts is to cause a serious dislocation to the petitioner's business without any compensatory benefit."

We do not think that these observations can apply to the facts of this case. A money lender, specially a pawn broker who enters into a number of transactions of pledge every day has to maintain his account books and he has to record faithfully therein the articles he receives by way of pledge including their weight and general description when he takes them in and making a declaration for the purpose of the Act cannot entail any hardship on such a person.

31. With regard to the last point urged by Mr. Ayyangar it is enough to say that by the Gold Control Act Parliament only sought to control and regulate the production, manufacture etc., use and possession of and the business in gold, gold ornaments etc. It did not seek to disturb or annul the provisions of the State Acts mentioned. The provisions of the State Acts are to have full play and effect so long as the Gold Control Act is not violated.

32. Mr. Natesan appearing for some interveners raised contentions similar to Mr. Ayyangar's and urged that the Act did not contemplate multiple declarations and it purported to affect only owners of gold articles or ornaments and not pawn brokers. We see no force in this contention.

33. Save that Section 71 of the Act is unconstitutional the petitioners in Writ Petitions 24 and 587 of 1970 are not entitled to the reliefs asked for and they will stand dismissed. Civil Appeals Nos. 1613/70 and 1659/70 challenging the vires of the Gold Control Act are also dismissed. The parties will pay and bear their own costs.

Order accordingly.

framed under) — (Constitution of India, Sch. 7, List II, Entry 65) — Case law discussed. (Para 17)

To uphold a levy as a fee it must be shown that it has a reasonable co-relationship of a general character (though not with arithmetical exactitude), with the service rendered by the Government. The co-relationship between the services rendered and the fee levied is essentially a question of fact. (Paras 11 and 17)

The State in maintaining an elaborate staff to prevent the licensees from converting it into potable alcohol and thereby avoiding payment of heavy duties renders little or no service to the licensees but only protects its own interest. (Para 17)

The granting of a licence to regulate any trade, business or profession in public interest, generally speaking, does not confer any privilege or benefit on any one. (Para 14)

(B) Constitution of India, Article 226 — Remand of case to enable party to place sufficient materials before High Court.

State through negligence failing to place before High Court sufficient materials to support an impugned rule — Supreme Court in appeal finding rule void on the materials on record — Where the effect of its decision would cause considerable financial loss to the State it would remand the case to give a fresh opportunity to the State to place the necessary materials in support of the rule before the High Court. Mr. Sarjoo Prasad, Sr. Advocate, (M/s. K. K. Sinha and B. B. Sinha, Advocates, with him), for Appellant; M/s. S. C. Agarwala, R. K. Garg, V. J. Francis, Narayana Netter, and S. P. Singh, Advocates, for Respondents.

HEGDE, J.: — In this appeal by certificate the vires of Rule 111 of the Rules framed under Section 90 of the Bihar and Orissa Excise Act, 1915 is in issue. The appellant, Indian Mica and Micanite Industries contends that the said Rule is ultra vires the Constitution. The High Court of Patna rejected that contention.

2. In the High Court various contentions came up for consideration. The High Court has come to the conclusion that the levy made under the impugned rule is a fee. That finding was not challenged before us by any of the parties. Therefore all that we have to see is whether the fee levied is within the permissible limit. In other words whether there is sufficient quid pro quo for the levy in question.

3. The appellant is a consumer of denatured spirit. It purchases denatured spirit from the wholesalers or the manufacturers for the purpose of manufacturing micanite. The Bihar and Orissa Excise Act, 1915 (Bihar and Orissa Act 2 of 1915) came into force on January 19, 1916. In pursuance of the provisions of that Act, the impugned Rule was framed by the Board of Revenue for levying licence fee. The fee for the licence to possess denatured spirit in 1919 was only Rs. 2/- per annum irrespective of the quantity in the possession of a person. This rate continued to be in force till 1937. At this stage it may be remembered that under sub-section (2) of Section 143 of the Government of India Act, 1935, the Provinces were authorised to continue to levy tax, duties, cesses or fees which were being lawfully levied prior to the commencement of that Act. Under the 1935 Act as under our present Constitution, the power to levy duties on alcoholic liquor fit for human consumption was allocated to the Provincial Legislature whereas the power to levy duty on alcoholic liquor not fit for human consumption was allocated to the Central Legislature. Denatured spirit though an alcoholic liquor is not fit for human consumption. The power to levy duty on the same was and is given to the Central Legislature. But the same being intoxicating liquor, the Provincial Legislature under the 1935 Act and at present the State Legislature has power to levy fee. The power of any legislature to levy fee is conditioned by the fact that it must be by and large a quid pro quo for the services rendered. If a levy purporting to be a fee is found to be an exaction without doing any service or if it is found that the levy is wholly disproportionate to the services rendered then the levy becomes invalid.

4. The distinction between fee and levy came up for the first time for consideration by this Court in The Commissioner, Hindu Religious Endowments, Madras v. Sri Lakshmindra Thirtha Swamiar of Sri Shirur Mutt, 1954 SCR 1005 = (AIR 1954 SC 282). Therein this Court speaking through Mukherjea J. (as he then was) quoted with approval the definition of 'tax' given by Latham, C. J. of the High Court of Australia in Matthews v. Chicoory Marketing Board, 60 CLR 263. In that case the learned Chief Justice observed:

"A tax" is a compulsory exaction of money by public authority for public purposes enforceable by law and is not payment for services rendered."

5. Dealing with the distinction between "tax" and "fee" Mukherjea J. observed thus in the above-mentioned case:

"It is said that the essence of taxation is compulsion, that is to say, it is imposed under statutory power without the tax-payer's consent and the payment is enforced by law. The second characteristic of tax is that it is an imposition made for public purpose without reference to any special benefit to be conferred on the payer of the tax. This is expressed by saying that the levy of tax is for the purposes of general revenue, which when collected forms part of the public revenues of the State. As the object of a tax is not to confer any special benefit upon any particular individual, there is, as it is said, no element of quid pro quo between the tax payer and the public authority. Another feature of taxation is that as it is a part of the common burden, the quantum of imposition upon the tax payer depends generally upon his capacity to pay.

Coming now to fees, "a fee" is generally defined to be a charge for a special service rendered to individuals by some Governmental agency. The amount of fee levied is supposed to be based on the expenses incurred by the Government in rendering the service, though in many cases the costs are arbitrarily assessed. Ordinarily, the fees are uniform and no account is taken of the varying abilities of different recipients to pay. These are undoubtedly some of the general characteristics, but as there may be various kinds of fees, it is not possible to formulate a definition that would be applicable to all cases.

If, as we hold, a fee is regarded as a sort of return or consideration for services rendered, it is absolutely necessary that the levy of fees should on the face of the legislative provision, be co-related to the expenses incurred by Government in rendering the services."

6. The same view was reiterated by this Court in Mahant Sri Jagannath Ramanuj Das v. The State of Orissa, 1954 SCR 1046 = (AIR 1954 SC 400) and in Ratilal Panachand Gandhi v. The State of Bombay, 1954 SCR 1055 = (AIR 1954 SC 388).

7. The nature of "a fee" again came up for consideration before this Court in The Hingir Rampur Coal Co. Ltd. v. The State of Orissa, (1961) 2 SCR 537 = (AIR 1961 SC 459). Therein this Court observed that although there can be no generic difference between a tax and a fee since both are compulsory exactions of money by public authorities, there is this distinction between them that whereas a tax is imposed for public purposes and requires no consideration to support it, a fee is levied essentially for services rendered and there must be an element of quid pro quo between the person who pays it and the public authority that imposes it. While a tax invariably goes into the consolidated fund, a fee is earmarked for the specified services in a fund created for the purpose. Whether a cess is one or the other would naturally depend on the facts of each case. If in the guise of a fee, the Legislature imposes a tax, it is for the Court on a scrutiny of the scheme of the levy, to determine its real character. The distinction is recognised by the Constitution which while empowering the appropriate Legislatures to levy taxes under the Entries in the three lists refers to their power to levy fees in respect of any such matters, except the fees taken in Court, and tests have been laid down by this Court for determining the character of an impugned levy. In determining whether a levy is a fee the true test must be whether its primary and essential purpose is to render specific services to a specified area or class, it being of no consequence that the State may ultimately and indirectly be benefited by it.

8. In Sudhundra Thirtha Swamiar v. Commissioner for Hindu Religious and Charitable Endowments, Mysore, (1963) Supp. 2 SCR 302 = (AIR 1963 SC 966) this Court was called upon to consider whether the levy impugned in that case could be justified as a fee. It upheld the levy which was an annual contribution levied under the amended Section 76 (1) of the Madras Religious Endowments Act, 1951 on the ground that those contributions when collected went into a separate fund and not to the consolidated fund of the State and were earmarked for defraying the expenses for the services rendered. Further they were not even payable to the Government but payable to the Commissioner and were levied not as a tax but only as a fee. Therein this Court further observed that a fee does not cease to be of that character merely because there is an element of compulsion in it, nor is it a postulate of a fee that it must have direct relation to the actual service rendered. Absence of uniformity is not a criterion on which alone it can be said that the levy is of the nature of a tax.

1971 S. C./75 VI G—12-A

9. In Corporation of Calcutta v. Liberty Cinema, (1965) 2 SCR 477 = (AIR 1965 SC 1107) the validity of the levy made under Section 548 (2) of the Calcutta Municipal Act 1951 came up for consideration. Therein this Court held that the levy in question is not a "fee and return for services" as the Act does not provide for any services of a special kind being rendered, resulting in benefits to the person on whom it is imposed. Section 527 (43) permits by-laws to be framed for regulating the inspection, supervision and control, among others, of cinema houses; but it is not obligatory to make such by-laws and therefore, there may be no services to render. Even the bye-law made provides only for inspection, and the work of inspection done by the appellant was only to see that the terms of the licence were observed by the licensee. It was not a service to him, and so, no question arises of correlating the amount of levy to the costs of any service. The levy therefore is not a fee and must be tax.

10. In Delhi Cloth and General Mills Co. Ltd., v. Chief Commissioner, Delhi, (1970) 2 SCR 348 = (AIR 1971 SC 344) the validity of a levy as a fee came up for consideration by this Court. Therein this Court speaking through Grover J. (one of us) laid down that in each case when the question arises whether the levy is in the nature of a fee the entire scheme of the statutory provisions, the duties and obligations imposed on the inspecting staff and the nature of the work done by them will have to be examined for the purpose of determining the rendering of the services which would make the levy a fee. After examining the various provisions of the Factories Act, 1948 and the rules framed this Court came to the conclusion that a large number of provisions of the Act, particularly in the Chapters dealing with safety involve a good deal of technical knowledge and in the course of their discharge of duties and obligations the Inspectors are expected to give proper advice and guidance so that there may be due compliance with the provisions of the Act. On certain occasions the factory owners are bound to receive a good deal of benefit by being saved from the consequences of the working of dangerous machines or employment of such processes as involve danger to human life by being warned at the proper time as to the defective nature of the machinery or of the taking of precautions which are enjoined under the Act. Similarly if a building or a machinery or plant is in such a condition that it is dangerous to human life or safety the Inspector by serving a timely notice on the manager saves the factory owner from all the consequences of proper repairs not being done in time to the building or machinery. In that case the High Court found that 60% of the amount of licence fees which were being realised was actually spent on services rendered to the factory owners. That finding was accepted by this Court and on the basis of that finding this Court upheld the validity of the levy.

11. From the above discussion it is clear that before any levy can be upheld as a fee, it must be shown that the levy has reasonable correlation with the services rendered by the Government. In other words the levy must be proved to be a quid pro quo for the services rendered. But in these matters it will be impossible to have an exact correlation. The correlation expected is one of a general character and not as of arithmetical exactitude.

12. Let us now proceed to consider whether the levy under the impugned rule can be justified as a fee on the basis of the law as enunciated by this Court.

13. But before doing so, it is necessary to dispose of one of the grounds on which the High Court upheld the levy. In paragraph 8 of the High Court's judgment, it is observed:

"..... When a manufacturer wants to keep in his possession, large quantity of denatured spirit for manufacturing purposes, he wants a special privilege or concession of immunity from prosecution. For that purpose he has to obtain a licence or a pass on payment of requisite fees. There is thus a quid pro quo element and the immunity from prosecution is in the nature of a special benefit or privilege."

14. The implication of this observation is somewhat astounding. These observations imply that the Government can barter away its duty to prosecute an offender for consideration. The requirement to take a licence is prescribed to safeguard public interest and not as a source to gather revenue. What is made punishable is either a person's failure to take the required licence or the breach of the conditions of the licence. Otherwise there would be no sanction behind the rule requiring to take a licence. Generally speaking by granting a licence the State does not confer any privilege or benefit on any one. All that it does is to regulate a trade, business or profession in public interest. There may be cases where a Government which is the owner of a particular property may grant permit or licence to someone to exploit that property for his benefit. Such a right may be given for consideration. It is only in those cases that a licence or a permit is a conferment of a benefit or a privilege and not in the case of grant of a licence for carrying on any ordinary trade, business or profession. If it is otherwise the State can sell the right to practise the profession of law in Courts or to practise the profession of medicine or any of the other numerous professions, at exorbitant prices or may even put up those rights for auction to be given to the highest bidder. Nothing so bad can be within the contemplation of our laws. We are inclined to think that the learned Judges of the High Court have misunderstood the observations of Seligman quoted in 1954 SCR 1005 = (AIR 1954 SC 282) (supra) to the effect that it is a special benefit accruing to the individual which is the reason for the payment of fee.

15. Let us now consider whether in the present case the State is proved to have been rendering any service to the appellant in lieu of the fee levied and further whether if it does render any service whether there is reasonable correlation between the services rendered and the fee levied. In other words whether the fee levied can be considered as a quid pro quo for the services rendered.

16. The averments of the respondents in their counter-affidavit that are relevant on this aspect of the case are those found in paragraph 10 of the counter-affidavit. They read:

"To denature spirit and issue it to Licensees, proper supervision and control is needed vide Board's Rules 63 to 68 at page 177 to 181 of Excise Manual Volume II. There is every risk that any person may attempt to render denatured spirit fit for human consumption which is punishable under Section 49 of the Excise Act.

Besides the above rules of the Board certain instructions have been issued in paragraphs 137 to 196 of the Excise Manual, Volume III (pages 67-71) for the process of denaturing and issue of denatured spirit to the licensees. State Government have to employ supervisory staff and chemical examiner to carry out these obligations of supervision and control.

It may be added that Excise Department does not only supervise and control these intoxicating liquors in the interest of public policy but renders services to the petitioner by getting alcohol manufactured at the distillery by supplying raw materials like molasses and coal to these distilleries at controlled cheap rates. This is the only reason of getting spirit distillery at a very cheap cost by the licensees including the petitioner. And hence levy of fee by the Excise authorities is not a duty or tax but it is clearly fee in return for services rendered as well as for proper supervision, control and regulation of an activity which the legislature desires to control."

17. According to the finding of the High Court the only services rendered by the Government to the appellant and to other similar licensees is that the Excise Department have to maintain an elaborate staff not only for the purposes of ensuring that denaturing is done properly by the manufacturer but also for the purpose of seeing that the subsequent possession of denatured spirit in the hands either of a wholesale dealer or retail seller or any other licensee or permit-holder is not misused by converting the denatured spirit into alcohol fit for human consumption and thereby evade payment of heavy duty. So far as the manufacturing process is concerned, the appellant or other similar licensees have nothing to do with it. They are only the purchasers of manufactured denatured spirit. Hence the cost of supervising the manufacturing process or any assistance rendered to the manufacturers cannot be recovered from the consumers like the appellant. Further under Rule 9 of the Board's rules, the actual cost of supervision of the manufacturing process by the Excise Department is required to be borne by the manufacturer. There cannot be a double levy in that regard. In the opinion of the High Court the subsequent transfer of denatured spirit and possession of the same in the hands of various persons such as whole-sale dealer, retail dealer or other manufacturers also requires close and effective supervision because of the risk of the denatured spirit being converted into potable liquor and thus evading heavy duty. Assuming this conclusion to be correct, by doing so, the State is rendering no service to the consumer. It is merely protecting its own rights. Further in this case, the State which was in a position to place material before the Court to show what services had been rendered by it to the appellant and other similar licensees, the costs or at any rate the probable costs that can be said to have been incurred for rendering those services and the amount realised as fees has failed to do so. On the side of the appellant, it is alleged that the State is collecting huge amount as fees and that it is rendering little or no service in return. The correlation between the services rendered and the fee levied is essentially a question of fact. Prima facie, the levy appears to be excessive even if the State can be said to be rendering some service to the licensees. The State ought to be in possession of the material from which the correlation between the levy and the services rendered can be established at least in a general way. But the State has not chosen to place those materials before the Court. Therefore, the levy under the impugned Rule cannot be justified.

18. In this Court Counsel for the State prayed for an opportunity to place material to show that the levy in question is not disproportionate to the value of the services rendered by the State. Ordinarily we would not have acceded to that request coming at such a late stage, particularly in view of fact that the legal position had been clarified by a long chain of decisions of this Court. There is no doubt that the State has failed to place the necessary material before the Court to justify the levy. But the fact remains that because of the negligence of those in-charge of the defence of the State, the State may suffer considerable financial loss, if we hold that the impugned Rule is void. Hence we are constrained to give the State a further chance to prove its case.

19. In the result we allow the appeal, set aside the order of the High Court and remit the case to the High Court for disposal according to law in the light of this decision. A further opportunity be given to the State to place material before that Court to show that the value of the services rendered by the State has reasonable correlation with the fee charged. If the State adduces additional evidence, the appellant be given an opportunity to rebut the same. As the further enquiry is necessitated because of the negligence of the State, it should pay the costs of the appellant both in this Court and in the High Court and bear its own costs up to this stage.

Appeal allowed.

SIKRI, C. J.: — This appeal, by certificate granted by the High Court of Gujarat under Article 132 and Article 133 (1) (c) of the Constitution of India, is directed against its judgment and order dismissing the present appellant's petition under Article 226 of the Constitution.

2. The appellant is the owner of Survey Nos. 219/1 and 121 situated on the outskirts of Mahuva in Bhavnagar District. By notification dated April 25, 1969, issued under Section 4 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, the State Government declared that the above-mentioned lands were needed for the public purpose of construction of an Industrial Estate by the Gujarat Industrial Development Corporation or were likely to be needed for that purpose. On May, 3, 1969 a notice was issued to the appellant by S. O. Collector, Officer on Special Duty, Land Acquisition, informing the appellant that if he had any objection to the acquisition of the lands, he might file objections on or before August 16, 1969. He was further informed that the Officer will hear him or his Counsel at the time of filing the objections. The appellant filed his objections. He took various points, but we are only concerned with one. He pointed out that the Gujarat Industrial Development Corporation

"has come out with ambitious projects for the establishment of the Industrial estate though, in fact, the land already acquired by the Corporation is in excess of the requirement of the Corporation. I say that the corporation is not in possession of such material as would establish genuineness for the establishment of an industrial estate at Mahuva. I, therefore, claim that the responsible officer should be cross-examined by me for the purpose of showing that the proposed acquisition is not for public purpose and that there is no need to acquire the present lands. The other suitable lands are available and the Corporation has not availed of the same and that the acquisition needs to be dropped. I say that the contiguous lands to the lands under the first notification are available and it would be more suitable than the present land. I, therefore, submit that the proposed acquisition is mala fide inasmuch as my lands are preferred to the other land owners available immediately near the lands required under the first notification."

He accordingly prayed:

"(a) That the officers of the said Corporation which have sought the acquisition and/or such officer I name hereafter be summoned for the purpose of cross-examination.

(b) That personal hearing be granted."

3. It appears that hearing was fixed for September 18, 1969; this date was extended from time to time till November 18, 1969. The appellant did not appear on these dates nor did he apply for any extension of time. His written objections dated August 17/18, 1969 and dated September 18, 1969 were considered and included in the report, under Section 5-A, to the Government.

4. Three points were pressed by the appellant before the High Court. The principal point that the Gujarat Industrial Development Act, 1962 was beyond the legislative competence of the State Legislature no longer survives as this Court has held this Act to be valid in the case of Ramtanu C. H. Society v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1970 SC 1771. The second ground pressed before the High Court was that the establishment of Industrial Area by the Corporation was not a public purpose but a private purpose. In our view the High Court was right in holding that this was a public purpose. The third ground raised before the High Court was strongly pressed before us. According to the learned Counsel the report under Section 5-A of the Land Acquisition Act was vitiated because the Collector had not granted an opportunity to the appellant to cross-examine the officers of the Corporation for the purpose of showing that the purpose for which the Corporation sought to acquire the lands was not a public purpose and there was no need to acquire the appellant's land. The High Court relying on its earlier decision in Gandala v. State, 4 Guj LR 326 = (AIR 1963 Guj 50) held that "the inquiry under Sec. 5-A (2) is an administrative inquiry and objector is not entitled to cross-examine any officers or members of the acquiring body."

5. Under Section 55 of the Land Acquisition Act certain rules have been made for the guidance of officers in dealing with objections lodged under Section 5A of the Act. These rules are as follows:

"1. Whenever any notification under Section 4 of the Act has been published but the provisions of Section 17 have not been applied and the Collector has under the provision of Section 4 (1) issued notice to the parties interested; and on or before the last day fixed by the Collector in these notices in this behalf any objection is lodged under Section 5A (2), firstly, the Collector shall record the objection in this proceedings, secondly, the Collector shall consider whether the objection is admissible according to these rules.

2. To be admissible (a) an objection must be presented in writing by a party interested in the notified land and must be presented within thirty days after the date of publication of the notification under Sec. 4 or within such period as may be fixed by the Collector; (b) it must allege some specific objections, such as these;

(i) the notified purpose is not genuinely or properly a public purpose;

(ii) the land notified is not suitable for the purpose for which it is notified;

(iii) the land is not so well suited as other land;

(iv) the area proposed is excessive;

(v) the objector's land has been selected maliciously or vexatiously;

(vi) the acquisition will destroy or impair the amenity of historical or artistic monuments and places of public resort: will take away important public rights of way or other conveniences or will desecrate religious buildings, graveyard and the like.

3. After admitting an objection and after having given the objector an opportunity of being heard either in person or by pleader, the Collector shall decide whether it is desirable to hear oral or documentary evidence, which under Section 14 or Section 40 of the Act, he has power to call for. If evidence tendered by the objector is admitted, the Collector shall also afford the other party an opportunity of rebutting it by other evidence or of cross-examining the witnesses:

If he admits evidence, he will fix a time and place of hearing it; and will hear and record it in his proceedings.

4. Agents, other than pleaders, will not be allowed to appear on behalf of persons interested in any enquiry under Section 5-A of the Act.

5. After completing the record of evidence, the Collector shall submit his report and recommendations as to each objection, whether inadmissible or admissible for the orders of Government under Section 5-A (2) of the Act."

It seems to us that the rules have been complied with. The appellant was given an opportunity to be heard personally. He chose not to avail himself of that opportunity. The appellant cannot under these rules claim to cross-examine officers of the Corporation, and in our opinion the prayer to cross-examine officers was rightly rejected. Indeed it was a strange request. The officers had not given any evidence before the Collector and we are unable to see what principle entitles the appellant to claim this right. When rules have been framed regulating the enquiry under Section 5-A of the Land Acquisition Act, it is not necessary to consider whether the enquiry is administrative or quasi-judicial and whether rules of natural justice have been complied with, and accordingly we say nothing on this point.

6. In the result the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Sub-Divisional Officer and Collector, Shivasagar, Appellant v. Shri Gopal Chandra Khound and another, Respondents.

Civil Appeal No. 1098 of 1967, D/- 23-3-1971.

(A) Constitution of India, Article 226 — High Court does not exceed jurisdiction in quashing orders which suffer from apparent error of law — (X-Ref.: — E. B. and Assam Excise Rules, Rule 300).

The High Court does not exceed its jurisdiction in quashing the orders of the Excise authorities, cancelling the licence of liquor shop, for storing adulterated liquor in contravention of Rule 300 of Rules framed under the Eastern Bengal and Assam Excise Act (1 of 1910), where those orders, having been passed on the basis of incorrect presumptions and also by violating principles of natural justice, suffer from an apparent error of law.

(Para 5)

(B) Eastern Bengal and Assam Excise Rules, Rule 300 — The mere fact that bottles of adulterated liquor with their original seals untampered but loose were discovered on the rack in the shop of the accused does not justify a presumption that he had stored them in his shop with the knowledge that the liquor in the bottles was adulterated.

(Para 3)

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

BHARGAVA, J.: — The respondent, Gopal Chandra Khound, is the holder of a licence of a country liquor shop issued by the appellant, Sub-Divisional Officer and Collector, Shivasagar. The Superintendent of Excise of the Sivsagar Sub-Division, in which the shop of the respondent is situated, inspected some liquor shops in the month of June, 1965 and discovered that some of the bottles in the shops were not properly sealed. The covers could be turned all round without detaching them from the bottles and without breaking the seal. There could also be seepage from the covers if the bottles were turned up side down. He felt that this left a scope for tampering as well as deterioration in strength of the liquor in storage beyond the permissible limits; and, consequently, a few days later, on 24th June, 1965, he issued a letter to the Officer-in-charge, Warehouses, Jorhat and Nazira, which were issuing the sealed bottles, to take all possible steps to secure the marked closures properly and to ensure that no sealed bottles of liquor with loose closures were issued from the warehouses. A copy of this letter was endorsed as a circular to all the lessees of the liquor shops, including the respondent. In the endorsement to the lessees, the Superintendent of Excise added that the lessees should not take delivery of such liquor in sealed bottles with loose closures and, in case, through heavy rush at the time of issue, some such bottles with loose closures happened to creep into their consignments, they should be returned at once to the Officer-in-charge, Warehouse concerned for getting them properly secured.

2. Subsequently, on 31st July, 1965, he made a check of the shop of the respondent. He found two bottles on the sale rack with loose covers which appeared to him to be suspicious. He tested their strength and discovered that the strength was far below the strength of issue from the Warehouse. The respondent was expected to store liquor of strength 30 U. P., while the strength of the liquor in these two bottles was 44.9 U. P. and 49.0 U. P. Thereupon, he also checked the remaining 13 bottles which were on that sale rack. He found that the strength of 5 of them was 30 U. P., while the remaining 8 had liquor of strength 48.4 or 48.8 U. P. He marked these bottles, took them in his possession, and recorded a report of his inspection. Thereafter, he sent a report to the appellant informing him of this inspection and stating his opinion that the respondent had deliberately diluted and weakened the 30 U. P. liquor in the bottles on the sale rack after having tampered with the seals. He recommended that the respondent should be asked to show cause why his licence should not be cancelled and security forfeited. In pursuance thereof, the appellant issued a notice to the respondent to show cause on 16th August, 1965. The respondent in his explanation denied having diluted or weakened the liquor in the bottles on the sale rack. He explained that the seals were of such a nature that there could be no dilution unless the covers were completely removed, so that, according to him, the charge of dilution was out of question and was absolutely impossible. He suggested in his explanation that, very likely, the deterioration must have taken place in the warehouse before the bottles were issued to him. The explanation contained further details showing cause against the notice issued to him. The appellant asked for comments on this explanation from the Superintendent of Excise. The Superintendent of Excise recorded his comments on 6th September, 1965. On a consideration of these documents, the appellant cancelled the licence of the respondent. The respondent filed an appeal before the Board of Revenue. The Board dismissed the appeal by the order dated 17th January, 1966. Thereupon, the respondent filed a petition under Article 225 of the Constitution before the High Court of Assam and Nagaland. The High Court set aside the order of the appellant and the Board of Revenue. This appeal has, therefore, been brought up to this Court by the appellant against that judgment of the High Court by special leave.

3. The appellant had purported to cancel the licence of the respondent for contravention of Rule 300 of the Rules framed under the Eastern Bengal and Assam Excise Act No. 1 of 1910, which reads as follows:—

"300. No licensed wholesale or retail vendor shall wilfully adulterate or add anything to cause the deterioration of any intoxicant sold or kept for sale by him. He shall not sell any intoxicant which he knows to have been adulterated or to have deteriorated and shall not store such intoxicant or permit such intoxicant to be stored on his premises".

The appellant came to the finding that the respondent had wilfully adulterated or caused the deterioration of the liquor in 10 of the bottles which were found by the Superintendent of Excise on his sale rack; and that was the order which was upheld by the Board of Revenue. The High Court noticed the fact that the Board of Revenue had held that there was no direct evidence to show that the respondent had wilfully caused deterioration in the strength of the liquor in question or that some one else did this on his behalf. The Board of Revenue then proceeded to consider whether there were circumstances in the case to justify recording a conclusion against the respondent and, for that purpose, raised a presumption that the respondent must have knowledge that the liquor in the bottles was adulterated, in the absence of proof to the contrary. The High Court rightly pointed out that such a presumption is not justified on the language of Rule 300. The Board of Revenue, in support of its view, had relied upon some sections of the Excise Act which prescribed penal action in cases of possession of adulterated liquor. It is to be noticed that the proceedings against the respondent were taken not on the ground of being in possession of adulterated liquor, but on the ground that he had deliberately adulterated it. There could, therefore, be no presumption that the charge against him must be treated as proved simply because bottles of adulterated liquor were discovered on the rack in his shop. The High Court also noted the fact that the Board was wrong in thinking that the respondent in his explanation did not deny knowledge of the fact that the bottles were adulterated when, in fact, he had done so. The Board having thus gone wrong on the face of the order in this respect of drawing incorrect presumption, the High Court exercised its jurisdiction to issue a writ of certiorari quashing the orders of the appellant and the Board of Revenue on the ground that there was, in fact, no evidence at all on which a reasonable person could have come to the conclusion that the respondent had himself adulterated the liquor in the bottles.

4. Having heard learned counsel, we are unable to find any error in the judgment of the High Court. The significant point is that the licence of the respondent was cancelled on the finding recorded by the appellant and upheld by the Board of Revenue that the respondent had deliberately adulterated the liquor in the 10 bottles with the object of causing deterioration and making profits. He was not charged with storage of deteriorated intoxicant under the last part of Rule 300 quoted above. So far as deliberate adulteration by the respondent is concerned, there was no material on which such a finding could have been recorded. Learned counsel appearing for the appellant pointed out some circumstances which, according to him, justified such a finding. He started with the proposition that it was the duty of the Warehouse to supply 30 U. P. liquor to the respondent and, while 10 bottles on the sale rack were found deteriorated to a considerable extent, 5 bottles on the same rack and all the bottles tested from sealed boxes by the Superintendent of Excise were found to contain liquor of proper strength. The Supdt. of Excise also had reported that all these bottles were from the same consignment issued at the same time from the Warehouse. From this circumstance, an inference was sought to be drawn that the 10 bottles on the sale rack must have been deliberately adulterated by the respondent. The facts have, however, to be viewed in the background of the earlier discovery of defective bottles by the Superintendent of Excise in the month of June. A very reasonable possibility exists that some of the bottles, which had defective closures, were issued in this consignment of 24th July, 1965 by the Warehouse either deliberately or inadvertently. The explanation given by the respondent was, therefore, very reasonable and the fact that 10 bottles were found with adulterated liquor was consistent with his explanation, though, of course, it was also consistent with the finding recorded by the appellant and the Board of Revenue. On this possibility, the most adverse inference that could be drawn against the respondent was that he did not follow the instructions issued by the Superintendent of Excise on 24th June, 1965 by carefully checking the bottles and returning them if they were in defective condition. One circumstance, which was relied upon by both the appellant and the Board of Revenue, was that, in his comments on the explanation of the respondent, the Superintendent of Excise added that he had noticed signs of tampering with the covers of two of the bottles. This circumstance was not noted by him in his memo drawn up at the time of the inspection, nor was it mentioned in his first report to the appellant. At that stage, all he had said was that the covers appeared to him to be suspicious. The suspicion could be because the covers were defective and loose. That was a defect which had been noticed earlier by the Superintendent of Excise himself in some bottles stored in a number of liquor shops, indicating that the defect must have occurred in the Warehouse where the sealing of bottles was being carried out. If there were clear signs of tampering with the closures in the two bottles, that was a strong circumstance indicating that the deterioration may not have taken place in the Warehouse and may be the result of deliberate adulteration after the bottles were received by the respondent. This assertion of the Superintendent of Excise that there were signs of tampering with the covers of two bottles was not only omitted from his original inspection memo and the report to the appellant, but, at the later stage, when he recorded it in his comments, no opportunity was given to the respondent to explain this new fact. Signs of tampering were mentioned by the Superintendent of Excise in his comments behind the back of the respondent. In fact, if there had been signs of tampering, the Superintendent would have prominently drawn the attention of the respondent to them at the time of inspection and would have clearly mentioned it both in the memo and in his report to the appellant. The respondent, in these circumstances, could have explained this charge if he had been asked to do so. It was against all principles of natural justice to allow the Superintendent of Excise to put down a new fact, to give no opportunity to the respondent to explain it and to record a finding on its basis against him. In all these circumstances and while possibilities exist that the tampering of the bottles was not done by the respondent and the bottles might have been received in defective condition with deteriorated liquor from the Warehouse itself, the High Court was quite justified in setting aside the orders of the appellant and the Board of Revenue.

5. Learned counsel brought to our notice five decisions of this Court in which principles have been laid down for exercise of jurisdiction to issue a writ of certiorari by High Courts under Article 226 of the Constitution. It is unnecessary to quote from those judgments, because we have already indicated above how the orders of the appellant and the Board of Revenue suffer from an apparent error of law in the matter of raising presumptions and how principles of natural justice have been violated. In these circumstances, no charge can be brought that the High Court exceeded its jurisdiction in quashing the orders of the appellant and the Board of Revenue.

6. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

HEGDE, J.: — The President of India promulgated a proclamation of emergency on October 26, 1962 in exercise of the powers conferred on him by Clause (1) of Article 352 of the Constitution of India. As the Parliament was not in session at that time, the President promulgated the Defence of India Ordinance on the same day (Ordinance No. IV of 1962). That Ordinance was published in the Gazette of India Extraordinary on that very day. In pursuance of the powers given by the said Ordinance, Defence of India Rules 1962 were framed (to be hereinafter called the "Rules"). The Ordinance in question was replaced by the Defence of India Act 1962 (Act 1 of 1962). That Act came into force on December 12, 1962. The "Rules" framed earlier were continued under that Act.

2. By a notification published in the Gazette of India on January 9, 1963, the "Rules" were amended by incorporating therein Part XII-A. The same is called as "Gold Control Rules, 1963." Rule 126 (I) of those rules required every person not being a dealer to make a declaration within 30 days from the commencement of Part XII-A of the "Rules" or within such period as the Central Government by notification specify, to the administrator in the prescribed form, as to the quantity, description or other particulars of the gold owned by him and sub-rule (11) of that rule lays down that any person in possession or control of gold, not being ornaments shall be presumed, until the contrary is proved, to be the owner thereof. Under Rule 126 (I), the declaration in question was required to be made before the 28th February, 1963. On February 7, 1963, the appellant made a declaration of 25 sovereigns and six gold bars, each of 26.2/3 Tolas in the prescribed form.

3. On November 18, 1964, a squad of Income-tax Officers commenced searching the premises of the appellant. The search continued upto November 21, 1964. On November 20, 1964 the search party discovered huge amount of gold kept buried in one of the rooms of the appellant. The gold bars kept buried weighed 23,329 grams. Along with those bars 154 gold sovereigns weighing 1223 grams were also discovered. The quantity of the gold so kept buried was of the value of Rs. 2,83,320. The discovered gold was kept in the Safe Deposit Vault of a bank and later on December 17, 1964, the same was seized by the Deputy Superintendent of Central Excise, Ahmedabad. Thereafter the Assistant Collector, Central Excise, Baroda issued a show cause notice to the appellant on June 5, 1965 requiring the appellant to show cause to the Collector of Central Excise, Baroda within 10 days of the receipt of that notice as to (1) why the gold under seizure should not be confiscated under Rule 126-M of the Gold Control Rules and (2) why penalty under Section 126-L (16) of the said rules should not be imposed on him.

4. The appellant challenged the validity of that notice before the High Court of Gujarat by means of a writ petition under Article 226 of the Constitution. The High Court upheld the validity of the notice in so far as it related to the confiscation of the gold seized but ruled that the proceedings relating to the imposition of penalty were invalid in law. After the judgment of the High Court, the Collector of Central Excise by means of his communication dated December 6, 1968 informed the appellant that the previous notice is confined to show cause as to why the gold seized should not be confiscated. On January 10, 1968, when the writ petition of the appellant was pending before the High Court, the President withdrew the proclama-

The complaint was that because of the defect in the quality the panel nails had pulled out of some tea chests which required cooping on arrival at London. In forwarding the copy of the letter of complaint to the Chief Conservator of Forests T. P. I. the General Manager of K. D. H. P. commented that "in view of the adverse report received in your plywood I am considering placing my orders elsewhere". The Chief Conservator tried to explain away the defect by saying that in the course of preparation of the plywood panels the glue line had dried up before application of pressure but he had instructed the Manager of T. P. I. to be extra careful in selection of plywood so as to avoid use of defective panels in future. The Manager of T. P. I. did not take the matter lightly and wrote back to the Manager K. D. H. P. on 23rd April 1953 drawing his attention to the fact that the factory of T. P. I. had been supplying over 10 lakhs pieces of plywood to K. D. H. P. from 1941 and defects in 2 or 3 chests did not call for any drastic step like diverting orders elsewhere, at the same time offering to replace any panels which might turn out to be defective. The correspondence does not show that the plaintiff was in receipt of any copies of the above correspondence and it was the Manager of the T. P. I. who sent a copy of his letter to the plaintiff with a request that the plaintiff should contact Mr. Hill of K. D. H. P. in a diplomatic manner to remove the misunderstanding and to secure continuance of custom. There is no letter on record to show that the threat mentioned in the letter of K. D. H. P. dated April 14, 1953 was ever carried into action. Apparently no fresh orders were coming from the said source as on July 13, 1953 the Manager of T. P. I. wrote to the plaintiff referring to large stock of panels of different sizes which had accumulated in the factory and mentioning that no appreciable orders had been received from K. D. H. P., for 3 months although the prior orders had all been executed by April 10, 1953. The plaintiff was requested to procure fresh orders and reference was made to such requests in the past. Nothing tangible appears to have come out as a result of the correspondence which followed and on September 3, 1953 the Manager of T. P. I. wrote to the plaintiff saying that although at a meeting of August 19, 1953 a partner of the plaintiff had promised to contact K. D. H. P. within the month he was still in the dark about efforts made to secure orders from K. D. H. P. The plaintiff was informed of the great accumulation of stocks in the factory and warned that inaction on its part might adversely affect its position as sole agents. The plaintiff's answer dated September 23, 1953 shows that it had received other letters from the defendant in the past and was only sending an interim reply. There is a reference in this letter to a meeting with someone in authority of K. D. H. P. and to information received that their decision in letter of April 16 could not be revised but the writer hoped to be able to rectify matters on the return of the General Manager of K. D. H. P. to India within about a month. The above letter was followed by a letter of November 27, 1953 from plaintiff to T. P. I. to say that the Manager of K. D. H. P. (R. Walkar) had agreed to place an order for 33 or 34 thousand sets of panels provided he received a favourable report from his Estates Manager after inspection of T. P. I.'s panels to make sure that they were of prescribed quality. The letter of December 8 from the plaintiff to the Chief Conservator of Forests shows that K. D. H. P. had placed a large order and it was suggested that the panels should be inspected before despatch by a Government Inspector and that lowest prices available should be charged.

10. In view of the above, it is hardly necessary to examine the next complaint regarding quality of panels which appears to have started with the letter of James Finlay & Co. to K. D. H. P. on 25th November, 1953. This complaint too was based on the grievance of P. R. Buchanan & Co. to the effect that there had been a number of instances of teas being contaminated by what was believed to be the immaturity of the wood used for chest battens and also by a strong smelling cement used in the manufacture of the plywood panels. It is also to be noted that this complaint was received after the expiry of the third year of plaintiff's agency and cannot have influenced the K. D. H. P. in withdrawing its custom from T. P. I. before October 31, 1953. Notwithstanding such complaints, the plaintiff was able to inform the defendant on December 8, 1953 that on its intercession K. D. H. P. had placed an order for 36,700 sets of plywood panels but the suppliers should take precaution in ensuring the despatch of goods of required standard to avoid complaints from overseas buyers.

11. In our view, the absence of orders from K. D. H. P. is very satisfactorily accounted for by the plaintiff's dealings with K. D. H. P. which is illustrated by certain documents bearing dates between April 25, 1953 and June 18, 1953. Exhibit P-103 dated April 25 addressed by K. D. H. P. to the plaintiff contains an order for 3100 sets battens urgently required without any stipulation as to the source of supply and only requiring inspection of 5% of panels by a Government Inspector. The price seems to be above that of T. P. I. Ex. P-102 is a similar letter covering an order of 9000 complete chests the plaintiff being asked to commence manufacture for immediate supply. In neither of those letters is there any ban placed on supply of T. P. I.'s goods. There are other letters of this type with orders for panels or chests written on June 3 and June 9, 1953. The last letter of the series dated June 18, 1953 contains an order for a fairly large quantity of goods again without any interdict as to supply from T. P. I.

12. It would however still have been open to the plaintiff to prove the attitude of K. D. H. P. about supplies originating from T. P. I. by calling evidence to that effect. Neither R. Walker, the Manager who was supposed to have issued a direction against supplies from T. P. I. nor Blair Hill who was filling the role of the Manager in Walker's absence was examined in the case. There was no record produced from the office of K. D. H. P. to show that such a ban had been noted or registered. As already stated there is no letter from K. D. H. P. to the plaintiff intimating that goods of T. P. I.'s manufacture were not to be supplied. The letters evince only the possibility of stoppage of orders.

13. The only witness relied on by the plaintiff in this connection, was one Daniel who was head-clerk to the Traffic Manager of K. D. H. P. from 1944 to 1954. He claimed to have been in charge of the transport department of the company for 32 years and on the strength thereof had the temerity to say that the company had stopped placing orders with T. P. I. because of adverse reports from the company's customers. He admitted that such decision had been taken by R. Walker who had been away from India for six months but added that nobody could go against Walker's decision in his absence.

14. In our view the evidence of Daniel to the above effect is wholly unconvincing. A head-clerk of a traffic department is hardly a person likely to have personal knowledge of such a vital decision taken by the General Manager of a company which managed a very large number of tea estates. Besides, the orders placed by K. D. H. P. between April and June 1953 betray that they were not very selective over the source of supply and trusted the plaintiff to secure panels for them and even manufacture chests itself. We cannot bring ourselves to hold that the plaintiff if so minded could not have placed the orders of K. D. H. P. with the defendant. The evidence leads us to the conclusion that the plaintiff was alone responsible for securing fairly substantial orders from K. D. H. P. in the third year of the agency and placing them elsewhere without any justifiable cause.

15. In the result, we must hold that it was the plaintiff who was responsible for breach of the obligations imposed under Clause 12 of the agreement and the defendant's termination of the agency agreement was not wrongful. The appeal therefore fails and is dismissed subject to the modification mentioned below. The trial Judge had allowed interest on the sum of Rs. 10,000/- at 3% up to the date of the decree and thereafter at 6%. The High Court did not deal with the question but allowed post decree interest at 3% only in modification of the trial court's decree. In our view the appellant should be allowed interest at 6% after the date of the decree of the trial court and at the rate of 3% prior to that date. The appellant will pay the costs of the respondent of this appeal but we do not propose to modify the order for costs made by the High Court.

tion of emergency. Thereafter the Gold (Control) Ordinance of 1968 was issued. That Ordinance repealed Part XII-A of the "Rules". The provisions therein were replaced by the provisions of the Ordinance. Section 117 (1) of the Ordinance dealt with Repeals and Savings. Section 117 provided:

"(1). As from the commencement of this Ordinance, the provisions of Part XII-A of the Defence of India Rules, 1962 shall stand repealed and upon such repeal, Section 6 of the General Clauses Act, 1897, shall apply as if the said Part were a Central Act;

(2) Notwithstanding the repeal made by sub-section (1) but without prejudice to the application of Section 6 of the General Clauses Act, 1897, any notification, order, direction, appointment or declaration made or any notice, licence or certificate issued or permission, authorisation or exemption granted or any confiscation adjudged or penalty or fine imposed or any forfeiture ordered or any other thing done or any other action taken under or in pursuance of the provisions of Part XII-A of the Defence of India Rules, 1962, so far as it is not inconsistent with the provisions of this Ordinance be deemed to have been made, issued, granted, adjudged, imposed, ordered, done or taken under the corresponding provisions of this Ordinance."

5. In view of Section 117 of the Gold (Control) Ordinance the notice issued on June 5, 1965 initiating proceedings for forfeiting the gold seized must be deemed to have continued. The provisions in the "Rules" relating to forfeiture are not inconsistent with any of the provisions of the Gold (Control) Ordinance, 1968.

6. On August 24, 1968, the Parliament passed the Gold (Control) Act, 1968. The same received the assent of the President on September 1, 1968 and came into force on and from that date. By Section 116 (1) of that Act Gold (Control) Ordinance, 1968 was repealed. Section 115 (2) provided:

"Notwithstanding such repeal, anything done or any action taken, including any notification, order or appointment made, direction given, notice, licence or certificate issued, permission, authorisation or exemption granted, confiscation adjudged, penalty or fine imposed, or forfeiture ordered, whether under the Gold (Control) Ordinance 1968 or Part XII-A of the Defence of India Rules, 1962, shall in so far as it is not inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, be deemed to have been done, taken, made, given, issued, granted, adjudged, imposed or ordered as the case may be, under the corresponding provision of this Act, as if this Act had commenced on the 29th day of June, 1968."

7. In view of Section 116 (2) of the Gold (Control) Act, 1968, it was urged on behalf of the appellant that the notice issued on June 5, 1965 can no more be operative because under the Gold (Control) Act, 1968, there are no provisions for making a declaration relating to the possession of primary gold. At this stage it may be noticed that under the "Rules" every person who was in possession of primary gold, exceeding the prescribed weight was required to convert the same either into ornaments or sell the same to the licensed dealers within the time prescribed by the "Rules". Possession of primary gold thereafter exceeding the prescribed limit was an offence. That period had expired long before the Gold (Control) Act, 1968 came into force. Hence the Gold (Control) Act naturally did not make any provision for a declaration of the possession of primary gold. In view of that circumstance it was urged on behalf of the appellant that the provisions in the "Rules" requiring a declaration to be made in respect of the possession of primary gold are inconsistent with the provisions of the Gold (Control) Act and therefore the notice issued under the "Rules" cannot be considered as being continued under the provisions of the Gold (Control) Act, 1968.

8. The above contention is untenable. There are no provisions in the Gold (Control) Act, 1968 which are inconsistent with Rule 126 (I) (10) of the "Rules". That being so, action taken under that rule must be deemed to be continuing in view of Section 6 of the General Clauses Act, 1897. It is true that Gold (Control) Act, 1968 does not purport to incorporate into that Act the provisions of Section 6 of the General Clauses Act. But the provisions therein are not inconsistent with the provisions in Section 6 of the General Clauses Act. Hence the provisions of Section 6 of the General

Clauses Act are attracted in view of the repeal of the Gold (Control) Ordinance, 1968. As the Gold (Control) Act does not exhibit a different or contrary intention, proceedings initiated under the repealed law must be held to continue. We must also remember that by Gold (Control) Ordinance, the "Rules" were deemed as an act of Parliament. Hence on the repeal of the "Rules" and the Gold (Control) Ordinance, 1968, the consequences mentioned in Section 6 of the General Clauses Act, follow. For ascertaining whether there is a contrary intention, one has to look to the provisions of the Gold (Control) Act, 1968. In order to see whether the rights and liabilities under the repealed law have been put an end to by the new enactment, the proper approach is not to enquire if the new enactment has by its new provisions kept alive the rights and liabilities under the repealed law but whether it has taken away those rights and liabilities. The absence of a saving clause in a new enactment preserving the rights and liabilities under the repealed law is neither material nor decisive of the question—see State of Punjab v. Mohar Singh, (1955) 1 SCR 893 = (AIR 1955 SC 84), and T. S. Baliah v. Income-tax Officer Central Circle VI Madras, (1969) 72 ITR 787 = (AIR 1969 SC 701).

9. For the reasons mentioned above we agree with the High Court that the proceedings commenced by the Collector of Central Excise by means of the notice dated June 5, 1965 must be deemed to be continuing.

10. In the result this appeal fails and the same is dismissed with costs.

Civil Appeal No. 1928 of 1966, D/- 26-4-1971.

Contract Act (1872), Sec. 73
— Plaintiff in order to succeed in a suit for damages for premature cancellation of a contract by defendant

EO/EO/C17/71/MKS/P

must establish that such cancellation was wrongful. (Para 8)

Hence the plaintiff's claim must fall where on the evidence led it is found that it was the plaintiff's breach of obligations under the contract which led to the termination of the contract by the defendant and therefore the cancellation is not wrongful.

(Para 15)

Mr. D. V. Patel, Sr. Advocate, (Mr. T. M. Mahalinga Iyer, Advocate, and Mr. P. C. Bhartari, Advocate, for M/s. J. B. Dadachanji and Co., with him), for Appellant; M/s. K. P. Radhakrishna Menon, Vishnu, B. Saharya and Miss Yougindra Khushalani, Advocates, for Respondent No. 2.

MITTER, J. — This is an appeal by certificate from a judgment and decree of the Kerala High Court dismissing the plaintiff-appellant's suit for damages claimed on the basis of a breach of contract and allowing, in modification of the decree of the trial Court, a decree for a sum of Rs. 10,750 only with interest at 3% p. m. from the date of institution of the suit. The trial Court had awarded the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 80,745—62 which was inclusive of Rs. 69,995—62 by way of damages, Rs. 10,000/- representing the amount deposited by the plaintiff in terms of the contract sued upon and Rs. 750/- as interest on the said deposit amount. The trial Court also awarded interest at 6% p. a. on the sum of Rs. 10,000/- from the date of the decree.

2. The facts and circumstances leading to the institution of the suit are as follows. The appellant entered into a sales agency agreement with the Travancore Cochin State on May 11, 1950 the material clauses whereof were as follows:—

1. The agents are given the sole distributorship of the products of the Travancore Plywood Industries including plywood tea chest panels, battons, plywood commercial sheets etc.

2. The agency is to be for a period of one year in the first instance with an option to the agents to continue for a like period or for such further period not exceeding four years to be notified to the Government.

3 and 4. xx xx

5. The agents to be entitled to a commission of 5% on sales up to

Rs. 5 lakhs and 7½% on sales over and above the said figure.

6. The commission is to be payable on all supplies made against orders placed by the agents with the Travancore Plywood Industries (a State venture) either within the agency or outside the agency area.

9. The quality of the articles supplied shall conform to standards prescribed by the Forest Research Institute, Dehra Dun. . . . The Travancore Plywood Industries shall be solely responsible for the quality of the supplies.

10. Claims for shortages, replacements for defective manufacture or defective cutting or difference in size or for supplies not conforming to the specifications in any other manner whatsoever are to be met by the Travancore Plywood Industries at their own cost and expense. The agents shall be kept fully indemnified against all claims arising from any of the above defects or for cancellation of contracts by buyers on grounds of defective supplies.

11. The agents to deposit with the Government as security for the due fulfilment of this contract a sum of Rs. 10,000/- in the shape of Government bonds and interest on the bonds to be paid to the agents.

12. The agents guarantee a minimum annual sale of Rs. 5 lakhs worth of the products of the Travancore Plywood Industries. If at the end of the twelve months from the date of the commencement of this contract, the actual value of the goods sold on which the agents are . . . eligible for commission as per clause 5 is found to be less than Rs. 5 lakhs due to default on the part of the agents, then, damages computed on the basis and in the proportion of Rs. 2,000/- for every lakh of rupees worth of goods by which the actual sales for that year fall short of the guaranteed annual sale of Rs. 5 lakhs shall be paid by the agents to the Government. The Travancore Plywood Industries shall not, however, be liable to pay damages if the full quantity indented for could not be supplied for want of stock.

13. On breach by the agents of all or any of the terms and conditions herein contained it shall be open for the Government to terminate this contract forthwith without prejudice to the rights of either party accrued before the date of such termination."

3. By mutual agreement the date of commencement of the agreement was changed from 11th May 1950 to 1st November, 1950 and the agency was to be for five years. The sales for the year ending 31st October, 1951 were worth Rs. 5,09,789-5-4; the corresponding figure for the year 1st November 1951 to 31st October, 1952 was Rs. 6,73,831-8-3 but in the third year ending on 31st October, 1953 the net sales came to no more than Rs. 3,35,196/-. On December 10, 1953 the Government of Travancore Cochin cancelled the agreement on the ground of failure of the plaintiff to secure orders for the minimum sum of Rs. 5 lakhs during the year ending 31st October, 1953. They also claimed damages on the basis of Clause (12) of the agreement. The plaintiff was equally prompt in serving a notice under Section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure of their intended suit against the Government on 15th December, 1953. They filed the suit on 24th January, 1955.

4. The plaintiffs' case was that the cancellation of the agency agreement was not justified and the fall off in the sales was due to the deterioration in quality of the goods manufactured by the Travancore Plywood Industries, hereinafter referred to as T. P. I., and was "traceable only to the breach of the contract by the defendant in the sense that it refused or failed to maintain the guaranteed standard of quality in the products manufactured." There was no lack of efforts on the part of the plaintiff to secure orders and actually the plaintiff secured an order for the supply of 34,700 sets of tea chest panels on December 5, 1953 from Kannan Devan Hills Produce Company Ltd., Kunnar (hereinafter referred to as K. D. H. P.) who purchased large quantities of the defendant's products. The plaintiff submitted that it had suffered substantial damages by the premature cancellation of the agency and by the default on the part of the defendant in fulfilling its obligations under the agreement in regard to its duty to maintain the guaranteed standard of quality of the products. The damages were quantified on the basis of the commission which the plaintiff would have earned during the period 10th January 1954 to 31st October 1955 calculated on orders executed in the past. Plaintiff also claimed refund of the initial deposit of Rs. 10,000/- with interest at 6%.

5. The defendant denied the allegations as to default in its written statement and pleaded that it had always maintained a high quality in its manufacture. According to the defence the complaint as to the deterioration in the quality was put forward for the first time in October 1953 without any regard for truth and only because the plaintiff had sold goods of the manufacture of other producers to the defendant's customers.

6. The trial Court framed a large number of issues and came to the conclusion that there was defect in the quality of supplies made by the defendant and that the deficiency in the sales in the third year of the agency was due to defect in quality of the tea-chest panels manufactured by the defendant without any default on the part of the plaintiff. Accordingly it held that the termination of plaintiff's agency before the expiry of the period of the agreement was unjustified and the plaintiff was entitled to damages for such wrongful cancellation besides the return of the amount deposited with interest.

7. The High Court in appeal took a different view. It went elaborately into the question of the alleged defect in the quality of plywood panels etc., supplied by the T. P. I. and came to the conclusion that it was not possible to hold that the panels and other products manufactured by the T. P. I. were below the standard prescribed for or were of inferior quality. According to the High Court all that the plaintiff had been able to establish was that for a short period K. D. H. P. did not place orders with T. P. I. and resumed placing orders with them after an inspection. The High Court held that this by itself did not prove conclusively that the sales fell off on account of defect in the quality of the goods of T. P. I. particularly in view of the fact that the area in which the agency was operative was a large one and K. D. H. P. were not the only customers of the products of T. P. I. in the said area. The correspondence referred to by the High Court led it to conclude that though there might have been some hesitation on the part of

K. D. H. P. to go in for the articles manufactured by T. P. I. that fact by itself would not justify the plaintiff's failure to fulfil its obligations under clause (12) of the agreement. The High Court was not satisfied that the fall off in the sales for the third year to a figure well below Rs. 5 lakhs was attributable to any default on the part of the Government in maintaining the standard prescribed. It also held that the evidence adduced in the case showed that the plaintiff did not make any steady effort to promote the sale of the products of T. P. I. and this failure on its part constituted sufficient cause justifying the termination of the agency by the defendant. However, inasmuch as the defendant had not preferred any appeal against the rejection of its claim to a set off of Rupees 6,890-0-6 as on 31st March, 1954 against the security deposit negated by the trial Court, the High Court found the plaintiff entitled to a decree for Rs. 10,750/- with interest at 3% from 24th January, 1955. On the question of costs the High Court held that the parties were entitled to pay and receive costs in proportion to their success and failure in both the courts.

8. There can be no dispute that in order to succeed in its claim to damages the plaintiff must establish that the cancellation of the agreement before the expiry of the period fixed was wrongful. Clause 13 of the agreement undoubtedly empowered the defendant to terminate the agency in case of appreciable shortfall in the guaranteed annual sale of products worth Rs. 5 lakhs in terms of Cl. 12. The last mentioned term would not apply inter alia if T. P. I. failed to maintain the quality of its products leading to the buyers such as K. D. H. P. refusing to place orders with T. P. I.

9. Counsel for the appellant submitted that the evidence adduced went to prove such refusal and referred us to batches of letters bearing on the question of the defect in the quality of the goods supplied by T. P. I. The exhibits to which our attention was drawn relate solely to the supplies made to K. D. H. P. The first set of exhibits refers to the complaint of a firm in London known as P. R. Buchenan & Co. dated 6th March, 1953 to its suppliers from Calcutta, James Finlay & Co. Ltd. enclosing a sample of plywood taken from a chest manufactured out of T. P. I.'s panels.
